There are 14 Negroes enrolled at San Antonio Technical High, three at Brackenridge, eight at Jefferson and six at Edison. There are no whites enrolled at Phillis Wheatley, the city-s lone all-Negro high school, but four Latin Americans attend Grant Elementary School.

But before the city fathers of San Antonio adopted its integration plan, Archbishop Robert E. Lucey, head of the San Antonio Archdiocese blasted racial segregation in the area's Catholic schools. On April 5, 1954, he issued his famous pastoral letter which was read from the pulpit of every Catholic pulpit in San Antonio, New Braunfels, Schertz, Fredricksburg, Victoria and Del Rio.

In his letter, the archbishop pointed out that since his assignment to the archdiocese he had urged the clergy and laity, in season and out of season, to "stop the sin of racial segregation and to treat all human beings as children of God."

Continuing, he said, "In the field of morality and particularly in the field of social justice and social charity Catholics should lead, not follow.

"If secular government, military leaders and private organizations can eliminate the sins of segregation and discrimination, we can do so too. Certain un-Christian attitudes on the part of our people have been tolerated by moral theologians 'for the time being'", Archbishop Lucey explained. He added that the day of Christ-like charity has arrived.

"Henceforth no Catholic child may be refused admittance to any school maintained by the Archdiocese merely for reasons of color, race or poverty," he declared. He ordered that students applying for admission to schools and possessing the necessary qualifications of morality and academic standing be no longer denied a Christian education because of their color.

Today there are 89 Negroes attending former all-white Catholic schools in San Antonio,—nine at Saints Peter and Paul School at New Braunfels, two at Immaculate Conception at Schertz, one at Fredsrickburg's St. Mary's one at Victoria's Nazareth Academy, and one at Our Lady of Guadalupe in Del Rio. There are some 31 white students enrolled at St. Peter Claver and Holy Redeemer, the city's two former all-Negro Catholic schools.

Negroes are enrolled at Trinity University and San Antonio College, and there are whites in attendance at St Phillip's, formerly an all-Negro institution.

Miss Foster pointed out that Parent-Teacher Associations in the "mixed" schools are open to Negro parents. These parents participate in community-school campaigns, meetings, social affairs and the like.

She pointed out that there were 197 Negroes in formerly all-white schools during the 1955-56 school year as compared to this year's 147. This year's enrollment of Negroes in former all-white high schools is two less than it was at the beginning of integration there. She couldn't explain the decrease.

"We haven't had and don't expect any trouble whatsoever," Miss Foster told this writer in an exclusive interview. Miss Foster explained that "the children took to integration like a duck takes to water." She said she believed that the children would have been disappointed if segregation had not been eliminated.

And what do the children say about the Alamo City's "new look" in the schools? Maria Santarelli, a young Italian student at Holy Redeemer, said:

"I've been living in this neighborhood for many years, but I had to walk many blocks to Little Flower School. Now I go around the corner to Holy Redeemer. I like it."

Benny Sontina, a Latin America youth, said that he was glad that his longtime playmate, Raymond Hill, could go to the same school where he attends (San Antonio Tech.). "We have grown up together but prior to September he attended Wheatley; now we have most of our classes in metalcraft together."

And so it was with dozens of other children interviewed by this writer. The children are firm believers of the Christian doctrine that all men are their brother's keepers. They all expresed gladness that Negro children are—at last— being accepted as human beings made in the image and likeness of the Supreme God.

But learning that this writer was from Houston, most of the children and teachers interviewed asked a very embarrassing question: "WHEN ARE THE SCHOOLS OF HOUSTON GOING TO END RACIAL DISCRIMINATION?" Naturally, I lowered my head and gave the only answer that could be given: ONLY GOD ALONE KNOWS!

Texans Ask End For Segregation

DALLAS, Tex. —(INS) — The Young Democratic Club of Dallas seeks immediate integration of Negro and white students, teachers and parents in extra-curricular activities and integration in classrooms in September.

Norfolk, Va.

A petiton to the Board of Education presented six recommendations. The organization last October endorsed the now-outlawed Texas operation of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

THE YOUNG Democrats asked Dallas public schools to "open their doors on the September, 1957, term on a racially integrated basis." This, they said, would give all the "benefit of the resources of a single integrated school system."

They urged teacher groups to integrate immediately "to establish working relationships between Negro and white teachers so that they might be better prepared for ultimate integration of their classes."

Journal + Guide

ANOTHER recommendation seeks "immediate integration of student activities" such as musical festivals, pageants and athletics to be planned by a system-wide student council which would also assist the Board of Education in integration activities.

At the same board meeting last week, another resolution came from the Texas Citizens' Council which is opposed to desegregation. This said the Council "deplores the arranged invasion of our schools," and "protests the teaching of one-world, one-race theories to our school children."

NO BOARD action was taken on either resolution. Dr. Edwin L. Rippy, president of the school board, said the board is "complying and has been complying for the last two or three years with the decision (of the Supreme Court) as we interpret it."

SUPT W E MORELAND

Sat. 4-13-57

Houston, Texas

HOUSTON — Dr W E Moreland's letter requesting his retirement from the Public Schools' top post, effective July 1, hit the conservative-controlled Board like a thunderbolt late Monday night, during the regular Board meeting.

Supt Moreland's request for retirement followed only a few days behind Assistant Supt Alexander Frazier's resignation as director of Curriculum. Both of the notable educators claimed they have personal reasons for getting out of the Houston Public School System, which is the sixth largest in the nation.

These resignations have come at the heights of text-book controversy, and constituents may be wondering what to expect next.

A former principal of Albert Sidney Johnston Junior High School, Dr Moreland has served 12 years of his 32 years of service with Houston schools as superintendent. He was the first superintendent to be granted discretionary power to retire teachers. Mandatory retirement time is age seventy.

Also Mrs Sallie Criswell and Mrs Jessie L Lott have notified authorities of their intentions to retire May 31.

Mrs Criswell began her teaching career in Montgomery County Schools in 1911. She later taught in the Almeda Schools, which were later incorporated by the Houston District. In 1926 Mrs Criswell was transferred to Bruce Elementary School where she will remain until retirement.

Mrs Lott launched her teaching career in Victoria, Texas, back in 1909. Before coming to Houston in 1927, she taught in various surrounding districts.

Mrs Lott first taught at Brock and was transferred to Gregory Elementary School where she will remain until retirement.

The easy-mannered Dr Moreland gave no indication in his agenda, nor was there any forewarning of any kind that he intended to bow out of the Houston school climate. He simply started reading his letter of resignation as routine. His intentions were only known to James Delmar, who spoke to the motion, that the letter of resignation be received. Dr W W Kemmerer offered a substitute motion seeking to defer action on the motion, but his substitute motion died.

Mr Delmar said he felt like Supt Moreland had thought his resignation through, and it was only fair to him that the board accept. Talkative Dr Henry E Petersen was absent and voting for the motion to accept the resignation were Mr Delmar, Mrs A S Vandervoort, Mrs Earl Maughmer and Stone Wells. Dr Kemmerer did not vote and Mrs Frank Dyer, chairman, was not required to.

Dr Moreland was popular with his administrators and teachers and other employees, to them he bade "God Speed" by praising them for their profound loyalty to him. He said it was their confidence that played the star role in helping to develop the district's successful program. The Houston Public School business is big business, its budget is not too many dollars under that for the City of Houston.

Also Dr Moreland stated prior to reading his letter, during discussions on the rejections of economics and geography text books, that he had high regard for his teachers and did not worry about some of the references in the books, "There are always statements in newspapers, magazines and other things, we don't agree with. It seems far-fetched, we have books we have used for 20 years, and now there is so much criticism of them," he asserted.

Freshman board member, Mrs Maughmer rejected the books and was joined by other conservatives in the rejection. Monday the conservatives sent economics and geography text books recommended by text-book committee back to them. Included on the mixed committee are Vicie Shepherd of Booker Washington, David Bradley of Wheatley and Virginia Tyson of Yates.

A special board meeting to receive the integration committee's report has been set for May 6, in order to give the board members time to confer with school attorneys in their integration law suit set for May 20 in U S Judge Ben C Connally's court.

The U S District Court of Northern Texas agreed with the school board and dismissed the complaint of the plaintiffs. The circuit court, however, directed it to retain jurisdiction.

Much of the same issue is involved in the Houston school case where Negroes are denied admission and right of choice, being compelled to go many blocks out of their way to attend segregated schools.

Wants U. S. District Court To Oversee School Integration

WASHINGTON, April 22 (AP)—The Supreme Court emphasized again today that it expects Federal District Courts to keep tabs on steps toward eliminating racial segregation in public schools.

It did so in denying without comment an appeal brought by the Wichita Falls, Tex., school board.

The board had appealed from a decision by the U. S. Court of Appeals in New Orleans directing a district court to keep on its docket a suit by Negro children for admission to public schools nearest their homes.

The school board contended that under its policy of desegregation of all schools the Negroes' request had been granted. The District Court for Northern Texas agreed with the board and dismissed the complaint.

The Court of Appeals, however, directed the district court to retain jurisdiction in the case. It said that while the Negro children had been admitted to the public school nearest their homes, "it is by no means certain that they had the same free privilege of transfer to or attendance at any school of their choice as was accorded the white children."

The school board said in its appeal that the appellate court's decision compels the district court to act as "a super school board in overseeing the day-to-day administrative action of the duly elected board in the conduct of the public school system."

Wichita Falls Schools Must Follow U S Order

Informer Sat. 4-27-57

WASHINGTON (AP) The United States Supreme Court Monday ruled that Negro school children in Wichita Falls must not only be admitted to public schools nearest their homes, but must have the same privilege of transferring to or attending any school of their choices as accorded to white children.

Houston, Texas

The school board had asked that the suit be dismised on grounds that Negroes had already been granted their request and the case was no longer a live issue."

The order by the U S Circuit Court in New Orleans was appealed to the Supreme Court by the local school board. The Supreme Court sustained the Circuit Court in its decision that the lower court must hold the case on its docket to see to it that the children get their full privilege.

All Rush To Agree Law On Mixing Valid

BULLETIN R1

HOUSTON—In a closed-door meeting with school board members and attorneys on both sides of the school segregation suit, U S District Judge Ben C Connally told the group that in his opinion it would be better for the school board to work out a plan for integration by May than to run the risk of having the federal court order the schools to integrate immediately.

The meeting was held in the judge's chambers after the hearing on the temporary injunction had been continued Friday. As a result of the judge's move for peaceful settlement, attorneys for the plaintiffs withdrew their request for the temporary injunction.

This means that the trial of the case on its merits can be held sooner than it could have been had the temporary injunction awaited a decision. Even if a temporary injunction had been granted, the school board would have been expected to appeal the case and this would have consumed an indefinite period of time. As the case stands now, a full scale hearing on its merits can be held as early as May.

HOUSTON- The Houston School Board- despite the fact that it has openly said in board meetings and pre-election bal-ahooing that it would not permit Negro and white pupils to attend the same schools-reversed its field Friday in Federal Dist Judge Ben C Connally's court by loudly proclaiming that the Supreme Court's decision of May 1954 which outlawed segregation of races in public schools was the "law of the law"--that it (the board) was working toward a plan to mix Negroes and whites under its jurisdiction.

The change-of-attitude of the city's school officials came during the hearing of the injunction suit against the Houston school district which asked immediate relief for Beneva Delois Williams, daughter of Marion Williams; and Delores Ross, daughter of Mrs Mary Alice Benjamin, who have to walk a total of 35 blocks to attend all-Negro schools, while there are white schools within eight blocks of the girls, residence.

Beneva attends E O Smith Junior High School, which is 21 blocks from her home, but John McReynolds, a white junior high school, is only six blocks away from her residence. Informer

Delores attends Crawford Elementary School- 14 blocks from her home-- despite the fact she lives within two blocks of all-white Sherman Elementary School. R1

The suit was filed Wednesday, December 27, by the girls' parents through Attorneys Henry M Doyle, Francis Williams and Heaullan E Lott.

PLAINTIFFS' POINT SCOIED

HOUSTON — The attorneys for the plaintiffs in the segregation suit against the Houston school board appeared to be holding the upper hand Friday as Federal District Judge Ben C Connally expressed doubt as to the merits of the defense's main contention.

Held in an unsegregated court room where several White Citizens Councils members walked out because Negroes were seated in a non-segregated manner, the suit attracted a large crowd that flooded the courtroom, with the majority of spectators being Negroes.

After listening intently to Defense Attorney Bert H Tunks who appeared to be experiencing difficulty in making clear his contentions that the plaintiffs had not used all their sources, the judge remarked that he had "some doubt as to whether this administrative relief defense is meritorious at all."

Attorney Tunks contended that the parents of the children should have appeal to the superintendent, the school board and even up to J W Edgar, state commissioner of education, after the children had been denied entry into the schools nearest them.

Judge Connally remarked that he did not think this was a prerequisite.

"As I understand the pleadings here, they are saying the children were denied solely on race or color," he said.

ATTY TUNKS OBJECTS

Attorney Tunks had objected to the hearing on the temporary inunction, contending that the plaintiffs' lawyers were attempting to hold a full-scale trial of the case on its merits. The defense's purpose, he stated, is to establish by testimony that relief had not been properly sought, and, therefore, the plaintiffs' claims were not the "proper subject matter for a temporary injunction, but rather a question of the law."

"You are saying the law is that segregation may not be maintained on a racial basis . . . you are taking the position that excluding them (Negro children) resulted from NOT that they were colored?" the judge asked.

Attorney Tunks, did not answer directly, but stated that the question "of fact is" whether the school board has made a bonafide attempt to comply with the Supreme Court's May 17, 1954 decision, and declared that the board is "making such an attempt."

He was interrupted by the judge's query: "You are conceding that integration is required?"

Attorney Tunks conceded that the Supreme Court's decision Is the law of the land, and that the school board must act in good faith "as the law stands, it compels them to act in good faith in bringing about integration unless the law is changed "by some other force . . ."

"The issues remain as to whether or not those plaintiffs are being denied their constitutional rights which questions the bonafide (good faith) of the school board as it exists now," Judge Connally remarked.

DELORES DISMISSED

The first witness, nine-year-old Delores Ross, was dismissed without questioning after Judge Connally stated that in his opinion "a child of such tender years should not be on the witness stand."

Mrs Mary Alice Benjamin, Delores' mother, testified that Delores had to walk 14 blocks, across railroad tracks and a busy thoroughfare to attend Crawford Elementary school where she is a Third Grade pupil. She said she had George T. Nelson, a neighbor, to carry Delores to the Sherman Elementary school which is just two blocks from her home, January 23, 1956 and again on September 10, 1956 and that she was denied entry both times.

CROSS EXAMINATION

In cross examination, Attorney Tunks asked Mrs Benjamin how long she had known Mr Nelson and if he had a criminal record.

She admitted knowing him for many years and that he didn't have a criminal record.

Beneva Delois Williams, 14-year-old Low Ninth grade student at E O Smith Junior High school was calm and well poised when she took the stand. She testified, under direct questioning, that she rode the bus 21 blocks to E O Smith school, but that the McReynolds Junior High school is within five or six blocks from her home. Asked if the school board paid her bus fare of 20 cents a day, she answered that it did not.

Her father, Marion Williams carried her on two occasions, January and September of last year, to the McReynolds school and attempted to enroll her, but she was denied entry, she said.

PLAINTIFF QUIZED

Attorney Tunks queried her as to her rating, her teachers and her choice of subjects. She said she made mostly A's, had good teachers, and liked music and science best. She was asked if E O Smith had a good music department.

"Yes, but it could be improved," Beneva answered.

"Why would you rather go to McReynolds school?", Attorney Doyle asked.

"Because it is closer and has better equipment," she answered.

Mr Williams testified that he stood in line with Beneva from 8 a m to 11 a m before the principal told them they would have to go to E O Smith.

During Mr Williams' testimony, Mrs Lee Barnett, secretary of the White Citizens Council of Greater Houston, and Mrs W B Bronson, an officer of the Citizens Council of East Harris County, strutted out of the court room . . . Negroes had taken seats on the front long bench where the women were sitting in the unsegregated courtoom and the baliff had refused to ask the Negroes up on Mrs Barnetts' request.

George T Nelson was called to the stand by Attorney Doyle. He testified that when he carried Delores Ross to the Sherman school, the principal told them they were in the wrong school.

"She (the principal) said we're still segregated," Mr Nelson stated.

The first question Attorney Tunks asked Mr Nelson was: "Are you chairman of the Grievance committee of the NAACP?"

OBJECTION

Attorney Doyle objected, but the judge said Mr Nelson could answer.

"No," answered Mr Nelson, "I was vice president up to the time of the temporary injunction granted Mr John Ben Shepperd against the NAACP."

Attorney Tunks tried to pin Mr Nelson down to admitting he spurred Mr Benjamin into attempting to enroll Delores at Sherman school. This failing, the attorney tried a new attack.

"Do you have a criminal record?" he shot at Mr Nelson.

Attorney Doyle's objection and Mr Nelson's "no" arrived at the same time and with Judge Connally's intervention, Attorney Tunks withdrew his question.

On Attorney Tunks contention that the suit did not represent proper class action (all the Negro children in Texas), Attorney Doyle asked Mr Nelson, "what do you base your contention on that other Negro children want to attend the schools nearest them?

TELLS OF PETITION

"I carried a petition, signed by 50 parents, to the school board, January 27, 1955, asking that the school district abide by the Supreme Court's decision and not deny the children on race, creed or color," Mr Nelson answered. He added that he had not heard from the petition since, when questioned by Attorney Doyle.

Board President, Mrs Frank Dyer, Board Member Dr W. W. Kemmerer, Board Member Dr Henry A. Petersen and Superintendent W. E. Moorland, under questioning by Attorney Doyle, admitted there is no fixed date on which they plan to begin integration.

"During the time you were a board member and now, had the board adopted any resolution to abide by the Supreme Court's decision?" Attorney Doyle asked Mrs Dyer.

TUNKS OBJECTS AGAIN

Attorney Tunks objected on grounds that Attorney Doyle was attempting to try the case on it merits.

Judge Connally overruled the objection and Attorney Doyle changed his question to "do you have a plan now?" Mrs Dyer hedged. She told of the board's system of upgrading students and teachers "so as to bring it (integration) about without chaos." She said Dr Moreland was making detailed studies of the problem.

"I said I favored segregation; that I think it better for both races," he said.

Dr Petersen contended that the board had made definite steps toward integration in integrating its staff.

"What do you mean?" asked Judge Connally, "you mean you put colored teachers in white schools?"

"No," Dr Petersen was quick to deny, "we held separate meetings, but we hold joint meetings now."

DR PETERSEN REVEALS PROGRESS

Dr Petersen contended that the board was making "reasonable progress in meetings the difficulties we are confronted with."

Attorney Doyle asked him if he didn't think that two years and eight months since the Supreme Court's ruling was time enough. He said, "no."

Dr Petersen outlined some of the studies being made by the school board. He said the studies are being made of what is going on in some of the other school districts. Attorney Doyle asked him if he had made studies at Austin, Corpus Christi, San Antonio, and San Marcus. He said that they had not made studies in Austin and San Marcus, but they had been made in Corpus Christi and he thought they had been made in San Antonio.

Dr Kemmerer said that plans for desegregation had been made "only by implication" in a resolution.

"I personally prepared a resolution that desegregation should be postponed until bonds passed to build new buildings," he said.

Was it a plan to desegregate or to circumvent desegregation?" Attorney Doyle grinned.

DR MORELAND QUERIED

Dr Moreland was queried on the bi-racial committee that was set up by the school board in 1955. He was asked if the committee had not recommended that a certain date be set for integration to take place and had Dr Morelands ever made a recommendation to the board to go along with the committee. Dr Moreland answered that the committee had made such a recommendation and admitted that he had made any move to get the board to go along with it.

Attorney Tunks then had Dr Moreland to tell of some of the problems contained in the studies. Dr Moreland named redistricting, "imbalance" classification, buildings, and "social aspects all designed to "lessen the impact on the community of the great shift in our policy."

"Have you observed the effects of hasty, unpremidated integration?" asked Mr Tunks.

"In our studies some ill and unfortunate effects have arisen from ill-advised action,' Dr Moreland answered.

The question of children going to the nearest school to them came up again. Attorney Tunks asked Dr Moreland weren't children transferred from schools nearest them because of other things than race. Dr Moreland answered that they were. He said that hundreds of children are transferred.

The procedure of transfer, he said, is, in cases of families moving out of a district and wanting their children to continue school in the district, the families apply to the school census office. He was asked by Attorney Tunks if either of the girls made application to the Census office for transfer and said they had not.

He was asked what some of the factors were, other than race, for refusing transfers. His answer was: health, (a doctor's statement being required) welfare of other children, adjustment, and transportation.

"When you say transfers, you mean a white student to a white school and a Negro student to a Negro school?" Attorney Doyle asked and followed up with:

"Wouldn't it had been a meaningless, hollow, empty gesture to attempt any of the avenues you outline?"

Attorney Tunks objected. It was sustained.

Bringing up the pupil's aptitude, Attorney Doyle asked that, though school are separate, you have a parallel for Negroes and whites . . . Low ninth or High Ninth . . . white or colored? Dr Moreland answered, "yes."

"Is McReynolds over-crowded?" Attorney Doyle asked.

"It is not crowded, Dr Moreland answered.

"Then crowded conditions is not a factor," Mr Doyle stated.

"No, Sir," answered Dr Moreland.

The Albert Sidney School took the lime light for just an instant when the discussion of good faith was in progress. The school, located in a mixed neighborhood, was recently turned over to Negroes. The white students were transferred out of the district and the name of the school was changed, over protest, to Miller School.

Attorney Doyle asked if Dr Moreland knew that white parents in the district had written letters to the board asking it not to transfer their children.

Negro Case Kept Alive By Decision

Herald 7-11-a Tues. 4-23-57

WASHINGTON —(AP)— The Supreme Court Monday let stand an order directing a Federal District Court to keep on its docket the suit by Negro children in Wichita Falls, Tex. for admission to public schools nearest their homes.

The order, issued by the U.S. Circuit Court in New Orleans, was appealed to the high tribunal by the Wichita Falls school board. The board said the Negroes had been granted their request and their case was "moot" (no longer having a live issue).

The U.S. District Court for Northern Texas agreed with the school board and dismissed the Negroes' complaint, but the Circuit Court directed it to retain jurisdiction. The Circuit Court said that while the Negro children had been admitted to the public school nearest their homes "it is by no means certain that they had the same free privilege of transfer to or attendance at any school of their choice as was accorded the white children."

In appealing to the Supreme Court, the school board said the Circuit Court decision compels the District Court to act "as a super school board in overseeing the day-to-day administrative action of the duly elected board in the conduct of the public school system."

In other action, the court refused to review a decision holding Eastern Air Lines, Inc., responsible for a 1949 airliner collision here in whch 55 persons were killed. The decision, by the U.S. Court of Appeals here, affirmed a $60,000 judgment against Eastern for the deaths of two of the 55 persons. The case was a test of legal issues in other suits growing out of the collision.

School Bd Names All-White Group For Integration Study

Chronicle Houston, Tex. Sat. 1-19-57

HOUSTON — Right in the face of its integration suit this week, Houston's conservative - controlled school board Monday night by-passed the city's 190,000 Negroes and named an all-white citizens' committee to study local problem of desegregation.

"It doesn't represent the community," these conservatives cried two years ago when a 25-member bi-racial panel was named to do this study following the High Tribunal's edict to desegregate public schools. Monday night they named a seven-man all-white group proposed to make the study.

Houston School Board and Dr W. E. Moreland, supt, are defendants in an integration suit tentatively set for this Friday.

Although there was a meeting of the board Jan 2, it was an organizational meeting and Monday night's meeting was the first regular meeting of the new board. It was agreed that the first meeting would name a citizens committee to study integration.

In the organizational meeting, Mrs Dyer, board president, said, "I feel definitely that this committee must represent all of the board" and she proposed that each board member nominate an individual to the committee. From this it was almost certain the committee would be lily-white.

The seven-man school board appointed one each a personal representative Monday night to the citizens commitee, they were Garth Bates a former state representative was named by Stone Wells and the alternate named by Mr Wells was E. M. Smith.

Veteran board member, Dr Henry Petersen also named his colleague Dr John K. Glen and his alternate is Dr Moody Irvin

Mrs Earl Maughmer named two PTA workers as her representatives, Mrs V. F. Herbster and Mrs Doyle Barton and her alternate.

Mrs A. S. Vandervoort Jr's representative is the Right Rev John E. Hines, presiding bishop of the Episcopal Diocese of Texas. Her alternate is Mrs Davis Faulkner.

Dr Kermmerer did not name his alternate but said he would do so very soon. He appointed as his representative, Atty C. M. Hudspeth.

Mrs Dyer's representative, Joe Kelly Butler was named temporary chairman of the committee. She named a PTA worker, J. R. Gribble as an alternate.

Mrs Dyer is also to meet with the group when their organizational meeting takes place, which will probably be next week some time.

Court Orders Dallas To Mix Schools Soon

Wed 7-24-57

By UNITED PRESS

The Fifth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans Tuesday ordered public schools of Dallas, Tex., desegregated "with all deliberate speed" and opened the way to a court test of school segregation at Miami.

The sweeping decisions coincided with historic decisions of three North Carolina cities to accept at least 12 Negroes voluntarily in previously all - white schools.

The appeals court overruled the northern U. S. District Court of Texas which had thrown out the complaints of 28 Negro children and their parents who sought admission to white schools through court action.

The court held that the Negroes had been denied a right to attend the public schools of their choice "solely on account of their race or color, but did not order Dallas schools integrated immediately.

Under the ruling the schools may remain segregated until a detailed study can be made of 12 key questions relating to the possible effects of integration. But this ground work for integration must proceed "with all deliberate speed," the court said.

In a second decision the court overruled a finding of the southern U. S. District Court of Florida that Negro plaintiffs in Miami had not been denied their rights. This decision opens the way for integration of Dade County schools.

The school boards of Charlotte, Winston - Salem and Greensboro, N. C., voted to admit the scattered Negro applicants to white schools under a state pupil-placement law that had been regarded as intended to forestall integration.

Dallas Schools Told To Desegregate Now

Weekly Sat. 8-3-57 p. 3
New Orleans La.

New Orleans - (ANP) - Segregation was slapped in the face last week by American democracy as a Montgomery, Ala., Federal court judge knocked down racial bars in Texas schools and ordered institutions in Dallas to integrate "with all deliberate speed."

The ruling by U.S. Fifth Circuit Court Judge Richard Rives here batted down an earlier directive of U.S. District Judge William H. Atwell, an 87-year-old jurist who went along with patterns of bias in Dallas public schools.

Attorneys representing 28 Negro children had appealed the ruling of Atwell to the U.S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals and asked that schools in Dallas be integrated "with all deliberate speed". Judge Rives agreed and ordered an end to separation of the races in that city's public schools. The judge did not set a time limit in his written decision. He told the school board that "faith" in the matter is not enough, adding that there must be "works". At the same time the Dallas school board acknowledged that desegregation must come, but stated it needed more time to formulate a plan. Attorneys for the children immediately pointed out that the school boards plea for additional time was merely a delaying tactic.

Federal Judge Reluctantly Upholds Court Order

Fri 9-6-57

HOLIDAY DEADLINE SET

p. 35

By The Associated Press

A Federal judge in Dallas, Texas, yesterday reluctantly ordered public schools in that city to start integration after the Christmas holidays.

"It is difficult for me to approve this order," said Judge William H. Atwell, "but this is a land of law and it is my duty to do what I have been ordered to do by a higher court."

Judge Atwell had been reversed twice in allowing more time for study of school integration problems. The suit was brought by parents of 23 Negro pupils in 1955 against the Dallas Independent School District. In the latest reversal, the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans ordered the schools to integrate "with all deliberate speed."

18 In Sturgis Group

At Sturgis, Ky., another Negro joined the 17 already attending classes at Sturgis High on the third day of non-violent integration. There were scattered heckling and cat calls from a small crowd as state police cleared a path through white pupils who jammed the entranceway.

In Arlington, Va., eight Negro applicants attempted to enroll at four white high schools. An orderly crowd of curious white pupils watched as school officials turned them away under Virginia's pupil assignment law. The statute has been held unconstitutional by a Federal district judge but an appeal is pending.

Winston-Salem became the third North Carolina city in as many days to enroll Negroes to previously all-white public schools.

Used Rear Door

A 15-year-old Negro girl used a rear entrance to Reynolds High School to avoid a crowd of about 500 gathered in front of the building. She entered the school auditorium for orientation, then walked to ther classroom without incident.

Two sign-carrying pickets and a man who used profane language were arrested at Easton, Md., where eight Negro children entered two integrated schools.

Negroes in Lake Charles, La., continued their boycott of a Negro school 10 miles away in an attempt to attend a white school in their own neighborhood.

Five Turned Away

In Maryville, Tenn., five Negro youths asked to be admitted to all-white Maryville High School and were told to leave by the principal who said "there will be no integration in city schools this year."

Principal J. P. Stewart said the Negroes, three boys and two girls, claimed to be seniors at the Hale School for Negroes. The children left quietly.

School Blocks 3 Dallas Negroes

DALLAS, Sept. 4 (AP)—Three Negro children failed in a new attempt to enroll in a Dallas white elementary school today.

Parents of the youngsters said they filled out enrollment cards and then were told to report to schools their children attended previously.

Wash. 9-5-57

The children—Rosa Sharon and Maude Lois Sims, daughters of the Rev. Paul A. Sims, and Daurity Smith, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leo M. Smith — are among 23 original plaintiffs in a two-year-old lawsuit against the Dallas Independent School District's segregation policies.

Dallas Ordered to End Segregation Next Year

News & Observer p. 2
Raleigh N. C.

DALLAS, Sept. 5 (AP)—A federal judge who does not agree with the U.S. Supreme Court on racial integration told Dallas school officials that integration in public schools is the law of the land and they must end segregation after the Christmas holidays.

The 87-year-old jurist, William H. Atwell, said: "It is difficult for me to approve this order, but this is a land of law and it is my duty to do what I have been ordered to do by a higher court."

Twice Judge Atwell had ruled that the school board should be allowed more time to study the problems of integration. Both times, he was overruled by the U.S. 5th Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans.

About 20,000 Students.

Today's order was for the start of integration at midterm. About 20,000 Negro students would be integrated in Dallas's sprawling school system of 120,000 students.

Gov. Price Daniel said no court order would resolve the integration problem in Texas.

"I still believe each school district can handle its own affairs and we will not have complete integration in Texas for many years to come," he said.

Only about 125 of the state's 1,845 school districts have integrated. San Antonio is the only one of Texas' four largest cities which has ended segregation in the schools.

Dallas school officials were undecided on their next legal step. They expressed fear of losing state funds. A state law, just enacted, would deny state funds to schools that integrated without first holding a local option election on the question.

In a previous decision favorable to the Dallas system, Judge Atwell said: "If there is such a thing as civil rights, there are civil wrongs. It would be unthinkable and unbearably wrong to make white students get out of Dallas schools so as to let in colored students."

Today, he said: "There are approximately 119,000 children in the Dallas Independent School District, one of every six of whom is a Negro.

JUDGE W. H. ATWELL

"The school buildings are completely filled. White children would have to be displaced to let Negro children in."

The Dallas suit was brought by parents of 23 Negro students refused admittance to white schools in 1955.

"I am very pleased the court has followed the law of the land," said William J. Durham, attorney for the Negroes. "I am positive that the Negro citizens of Dallas will meet this challenge intelligently and as American citizens in a democracy."

Dallas Independent School District To Be Segregated

DALLAS, Texas. — The Dallas board of education last week ruled that the 141-school Dallas Independent school district will remain segregated during the next school year in spite of a federal ruling that outlawed segregation in public schools.

The decision is based largely on a newly enacted state law. The board's official statement said in part "The board is obligated to instruct the superintendent of schools that the status regarding the segregation of the races shall not be altered for the school year 1957-58."

Among those endorsing the decision were Rep. Don Pool, Dallas representative in the legislature, who said, "This has proved that Dallas has a school board that has got lots of common sense and that knows how to handle the situation."

Attorney U. Simpson Tate of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said after the meeting, "The board's attitude is disappointing." Tate refused to say if he would consult Judge William H. Atwell for action on this decision.

Tate said also that the Supreme Court had ruled out segregation and this was the law of the land and that inferior courts will have to respect that ruling.

Because of the board's ruling if a district not now segregated should integrate without a vote of the people in that district necessary and valuable state funds will be denied it. The loss of accreditation and substantial fines to officials might also follow.

The Fifth District Court of Civil Appeals in New Orleans ruled, on July 23, that Dallas should segregate but not set a specific date for the change.

Since that time Dallas has asked a rehearing.

TEXAS HEARING SET IN INTEGRATION SUIT

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 4 (AP) —The United States Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals today ordered a joint hearing on two phases of the Dallas, Tex., school integration suit.

The court set the hearing for Nov. 22 in United States District Court at Fort Worth, Tex.

Involved are:

1. An application by the Dallas School Board for permission to file for a writ of mandamus to force the district court to slow down the integration order.
2. An appeal by the board from the order.

The court here also ordered that the appeal by the school board and that briefs on behalf of a Negro girl, Hilda Ruth Borders and others, attempting to gain school integration in Dallas be filed by Oct. 25. Opposing briefs, the court said, must be filed within fifteen days afterward.

To further hasten the case, the court said, "the record in former appeal need not be duplicated, but will be considered by the court as part of the record on the present appeal and petition." It said typed copies of the record and briefs may be filed.

The Dallas school board contends United States District Judge William Atwell of Dallas abused his judicial power. Judge Atwell on Sept. 9 ordered the school board to desegregate for the second half of this school year.

Race Integration Works Out Well In Texas School

UVALDE, Texas, Sept. 28. — (AP)—Four little boys of different racial origins raise the American flag over Uvalde's integrated schools each day before studying together and playing under the giant oaks that dot its grounds.

"Integration of all races as we have it in the Uvalde schools would bring joy to any school administrator," Supt. M. B. Morris said Saturday. "There have been no incidents of any kind because everybody co-operated finely."

Before the Supreme Court's ruling, citizens of Southwestern Texas city of 9,000 and home of former Vice President John N. Garner spent about $7,000 yearly on segregated schools.

The school board and Dr. Thomas S. Sutherland, a member of the state Committee on Interracial Relations, seutp a survey committee.

At its recommendation, the high schools were integrated in 1954-55 and the grade schools next term.

Negro citizens expressed their appreciation to the school board by resolution.

Presently 25 of the Negroes in the student body of 2,750 are enrolled in the grades and eight in the junior and senior high schools. The school district, as it did in the past, paid the expenses of four students who preferred to finish high school at St. Peter Claver Academy at San Antonio.

"Each student was accepted on his individual merits and no special favors were granted or expected because of racial distinctions," Mr. Morris said.

One Negro, Tom Cook, played football and was elected vice president of last year's freshman class.

Harry Hornby Jr., publisher of the Uvalde Leader-News, said, "I feel our schools are a bright spot in the South."

2 Crosses Burned At Houston Schools

HOUSTON, Sept. 27 (AP)—A flaming cross burned at the William E. Miller Negro junior high school here last night. It was the second cross burning in Harris county within 24 hours.

School officials expressed the opinion that both burnings were the work of pranksters, but acting Supt. G. C. Scarborough said he would look into the Houston matter.

The first cross was burned on the lawn of the all-Negro Carver senior and junior high school at Baytown early yesterday.

VOICE OF THE PEOPLE

Texas School And The Races

In perusing tonight's paper, I find the following statement:

"The wide stretches of Texas offer a contrast. Eastward, the big cities of Houston, Fort Worth and Dallas continue to maintain segregated schools; in the West and South, schools are fully or partly integrated. In San Antonio, integration began three years ago."

This, and similarly worded statements, would lead one to assume that integration had made great headway in at least half of the state of Texas. Actually, nothing could be further from the truth.

The racial problem in South and West Texas is not, and never has been, a Negro minority. Negroes in much of the area are notable only by their absence. Many school districts have supported three schools: White, Mexican and Negro—with only a handful of pupils in the Negro school. For instance, when the schools in the little South Texas town where my parents live were integrated recently, there were only three Negro pupils involved.

On the other hand, the vastly overwhelming minority (and, in some places, majority) group is Latin American. San Antonio, my home town, maintains a Mexican high school, Sidney Lanier. While a few Mexicans are scattered among the other schools, they remain, for the most part, a group unto themselves as far as the rest of the student body is concerned. In smaller towns, the racial line is even more sharply drawn. Mexicans attend their own schools, do not mix socially with "whites," seldom intermarry (the whites who cross the line are socially defunct), and are not permitted in "nice" hotels, motels, cafes, etc. (Sound familiar?)

In short, Texas is no different from the rest of the South. In North, East and Central Texas, where there is a heavy concentration of Negroes, the feeling is precisely the same as it is right here in Alabama.

In the rest of the state there aren't enough Negroes to matter one way or the other. That is what is so ludicrous about the proponents of integration using Texas as an example of progress toward achieving their ends.

Incidentally, mention integration to the people of Southwestern Texas on the only basis on which it could possibly be applied to them — integration with the Mexicans—and there wouldn't be another Civil War, but another Texas Revolution.

Texas' Governor Studies Bill To Close Occupied Schools

AUSTIN, Tex., Oct. 26 (AP)—Gov. Price Daniel said today he is considering submission of a bill that would automatically close public schools that might be occupied by state or federal troops.

He said that a troop - school measure and one directing the attorney general to represent schools in integration cases are specific subjects he is studying now.

The governor told newsmen he would be able to say at the end of next week what he would do about submitting those bills, after he sees how far the lawmakers, now in special session, progress on lobby, water and crime matters already submitted.

A special session may only take up those subjects which the governor submits. This session is scheduled to finish its 30-day run Nov. 12.

Daniel said he felt the specific subject of the use of federal troops in patrolling school campuses, such as at Little Rock, was a much broader and important topic than segregation or integration legislation.

Judge Accepts Negro Plan for Dallas Schools

Dallas, Tex., Sept. 9 (AP) — Federal Judge William H. Atwell today approved a plan which would admit Negro students to Dallas public schools on the same terms and conditions as white students. An attorney for the school board said an appeal would be made.

Announces Appeal Plans

Andrew J. Thuss, attorney for the Dallas school board, said he had a "strong conviction the order was not consistent with the mandate of the United States 5th Circuit Court of Appeals" and announced he would appeal the order to the Circuit court.

Judge Atwell, who twice before had granted the Dallas school board delays in carrying out integration only to be overruled by the Circuit court at New Orleans, rejected an integration plan submitted by Thuss because it did not set a definite time to begin integration.

The order drawn by the school board attorney said school segregation should not be permitted "from and after such time as may be necessary to make arrangements for admission of children . . . on a nondiscriminatory basis."

Fears Loss of Funds

Dr. Edwin L. Rippy, president of the school board, told newsmen before the board integrates its schools "we must find out our relations with the state law. We can not afford to lose funds."

He referred to a new Texas law that denies certain state funds to districts that integrate without holding a local option election on the question. School officials estimate they would lose slightly more than a million dollars this year if they integrated without first holding an election.

Rippy also said that the state law provides fines for officials and loss of accreditation for schools.

Reads Court Mandate

Judge Atwell opened today's session by reading a Circuit court mandate dated July 23, which overruled his order granting his school board a delay in starting integration.

The appeals court returned to Judge Atwell the suit brought by the parents of 23 Negro children after they were denied admission to white schools in 1955. The mandate restrained the Dallas school board "from requiring segregation of the races in any school under their supervision, from and after such time as may be necessary to make arrangements for admission of children to such schools on a racial nondiscriminatory basis with all deliberate speed."

Thuss told the judge he had read the order prepared by attorneys for the Negroes but he could not sign it and believed it was not consistent with the court's mandate.

C. B. Bunkley Jr., attorney for the Negroes, said his order was in the language of the mandate.

Judge Atwell read the orders and signed Bunkley's.

U. S. Judge OKs Dallas School Integration Plan

DALLAS, Tex., Sept. 9 (AP)— Federal Judge William H. Atwell today approved a plan drawn by Negro attorneys which would admit Negro students to Dallas public schools on the same terms and conditions as whites. An attorney for the school board said an appeal would be made.

Andrew J. Thuss, attorney for the Dallas school board, said he had a "strong conviction the order was not consistent with the mandate of the U. S. Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals" and announced he would appeal the order to the Circuit Court.

Judge Atwell, who twice before had granted the Dallas school board delays in carrying out integration only to be overruled by the Circuit Court, rejected an integration plan submitted by Thuss because it did not set a definite time to begin integration.

The order drawn by the school board attorney said school segregation should not be permitted "from and after such time as may be necessary to make arrangements for admission of children . . . on a nondiscriminatory basis."

Dr. Edwin L. Rippy, president of the school board, told newsmen before the board integrates its schools "We must find out our relations with the state law. We can not afford to lose funds."

He referred to a new Texas law that denies certain state funds to districts that integrate without holding a local option election on the question. School officials estimate they would lose slightly more than $1,000,000 this year if they integrated without first holding an election.

Rippey also said that the state law provides fines for officials and loss of accreditation for schools.

Judge Atwell opened today's session by reading a mandate for the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals at New Orleans, dated July 23, 1957. He said he had received it only today.

The mandate overruled Judge Atwell who twice had granted the school board a delay in starting integration.

The appeal court returned to Judge Atwell the suit brought by the parents of 23 Negro children after they were denied admission to white schools in 1955.

It restrained the Dallas school board "from requiring segregation of the races in any school under their supervision, from and after such time as may be necessary to make arrangements for admission of children to such schools on a racial non-discriminatory basis with all deliberate speed."

ORDER SCHOOLS IN DALLAS TO ADMIT NEGROES

Integration Will Begin After Christmas

Dallas, Tex., Sept. 5 (AP)— Federal Judge William H. Atwell today reluctantly ordered Dallas public schools to start integration after the Christmas holidays.

"It is difficult for me to approve this order, but this is a land of law and it is my duty to what I have been ordered to do by a higher court," said the 87 year old white haired jurist.

Judge Atwell had been reversed two times in a suit brought by parents of 23 Negro pupils in 1955 against the Dallas independent school district.

Officials Decline Comment

In a recent reversal the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans ordered that Dallas schools integrate "with all deliberate speed."

The schools opened yesterday on a segregated basis. The only incident was an unsuccessful attempt of a Negro couple to register their children at a grade school.

Judge William H. Atwell

Dallas school officials declined immediate comment on today's order.

The judge's order did not imply integration in the Dallas schools would be gradual, but that "segregation will be ended at the commencement of the midwinter term and not before."

"School Buildings Filled"

William J. Durham, attorney for the Negroes, said after the hearing: "I am very pleased the court has followed the law of the land. I am positive that the Negro citizens of Dallas will meet this challenge intelligently and as American citizens in a democracy."

"There are approximately 119,000 children in the Dallas independent school district, one of every six of whom is a Negro," Judge Atwell said.

"The school buildings are completely filled. White children would have to be displaced to let Negro children in.

"Difference in Ability"

"There is an apparent difference in the scholastic ability of white and Negro children. There are not enough teachers to impart adequate education because of this difference in aptitude.

"The Court of Appeals has ruled that as long as Negro scholars are denied by reason of color, they are denied their constitutional rights, and has ordered that desegregation proceed with all deliberate speed."

A Dallas school board petition for a rehearing called attention to a state law, recently enacted, which would deny the school state funds if it integrated without approval in a public referendum. This petition was denied.

DALLAS STAYS BIAS END

School Board Fails to Heed Court Order for Integration

DALLAS, Aug. 15 (UP)—The Dallas School Board, ordered by a Federal court in New Orleans to integrate its schools with all due haste, voted unanimously last night to continue segregation for the coming year.

Edwin Rippy, school board president, said the decision had been a result of the board's failure to see how the Supreme Court ruling against segregation and a recently passed state law could be reconciled.

The Texas Legislature passed a law last session providing that no public school could integrate unless such a move first was approved in a local election. Failure to comply would mean loss of state funds and accreditation.

"We made our decision after much difficult ceditation," Mr. Rippy said. "We found we could not reconcile the Supreme Court ruling and the Texas law in time to integrate this fall."

DALLAS SCHOOL PROBLEM POSED

Officials Pondering Order to Integrate

DALLAS, Tex., Sept. 8 (AP)—Dallas school officials are pondering ways and means of integrating 17,000 Negroes into the city's sprawling school system of 117,000 as ordered by federal court.

They have four months to solve a problem they have been wrestling with for two years. They were told this week that integration could not be put off any longer, that the first steps must be taken at midterm, after the Christmas holidays.

Both sides in a long legal battle are to present in U.S. District court Monday the first definite steps to end segregation. There were indications there may be fireworks.

To Approve Plan

U.S. Dist. Judge William H. Atwell, whose two rulings in favor of the Dallas school board were overruled by a higher court last Thursday, told attorneys for both sides to get together and work out a mutually approved plan.

But an attorney for the school system said that so far there has been no conference with attorneys representing the Negroes.

"I'll present mine and I presume they will present theirs," said school attorney Andrew J. Thuss regarding the court order.

The suit was brought by parents of 23 Negro students who were refused admittance to white schools in 1955.

Officials Worried

Dallas school officials were worried over the possibility of losing about $1,500,000 in state aid under a recently enacted law. This law would deny state funds to school districts that integrated without first holding a local option election on the question.

Gov. Price Daniel, when told of the Dallas ruling, expressed doubt a court order would resolve the integration problem in Texas.

"I still believe each school district can handle its own affairs," he said.

Only about 125 of the state's 1,845 school districts have integrated.

Texas Town of 5,000 Plans Quiet School Integration

PLEASANTON, Tex., Oct. 29 (AP) —This southern Texas town of 5,000 is planning to quietly integrate its high school Friday in contrast to the racial struggles elsewhere this school year.

"We want to show the world it can be done in a Christian-like way," said the high school principal, D. C. Baldree.

Voters approved integration 323-88 last Saturday in a local option election — the first under a new Texas law. This law requires a favorable vote before any school district in the state can integrate. The penalty for noncompliance is loss of state aid and accreditation.

Baldree said no special preparations are being made for the enrollment of between 15 and 25 Negro pupils in classes with 312 white students at Pleasanton High School.

He said he was mentioning the move to pupils in talks over the school public address system daily but no special assembly was planned.

The elementary and junior high schools will be integrated later.

The population of this farming and ranching town 33 miles south of San Antonio is only 1.2 per cent Negro. There are about 1,476 pupils in the entire school system, and about 35 Negroes.

The remaining Negro students are in the elementary school and will not be moved to the white school until Monday.

HAILED BY PUPILS

Tex. School Mixed 'In Christian Way'

PLEASANTON, Tex. — "We want to show the world it can be done in a Christian - like way."

So spoke D. C. Baldree, principal of Pleasanton High school, after this town of 5,000 voted to quietly integrate its high school Friday in contrast to the bitter racial fights elsewhere in the nation this school year.

THE TOWN appeared "ready for integration," Mr. Baldree said, but added: "Of course, some (parents) were not in favor of it as recorded by their votes. But the community spirit is for peaceful integration."

"The only question in my mind," he said, "is whether or not they (colored pupils) will be able to keep up with the pupils in their own grades, having been in a school that wasn't on an equal basis with this one (the white school)."

However, he said that if any colored student appeared backward in any subject, special coaching will be arranged.

The integration plan was approved Saturday in a local option election—328-88—the first under a new state law which required a favorable vote before the school district can integrate its schools.

Penalty for non-compliance is loss of state aid and accreditation.

NO SPECIAL preparations are being made for the enrollment of between 15 and 25 colored pupils in classes with 325 white pupils at Pleasanton High, Mr. Baldree said.

Saying he was mentioning the move to pupils in talks over the school's public address system daily but that no special assembly was planned, Mr. Baldree said "It's not necessary to do anyting else."

Most of the pupils in the school appear ready to welcome the colored pupils, according to the principal, who added that some of them are outspokenly in favor of the move.

Citing one reason, he said Timothy Winters, 16, a basketball star on the colored high school team, is one of the pupils who will enroll at Pleasanton High. He stands 6 feet 4 inches tall.

HE QUOTED Frank Tudyk Jr., 17, a senior basketball star on the Pleasanton High team, as saying: "Boy, we're just tickled to death to have that big boy come over here."

J. D. Klingemen, school superintendent, said the prime reason for calling the integration election was because the colored schools were substandard and the district faced the loss of accreditation on that basis.

The elementary and junior high schools will be integrated later, officials said.

Integration comes to South Texas school peacefully

PLEASANTON, Tex., Nov. 2—(AP)—Nine Negro high school pupils were welcomed by school and student body officials Friday as integration began peacefully in this South Texas town.

The students—five freshmen, one sophomore, one junior and two seniors—were met at the front steps of the school by Supt. J. D. Klingeman, the high school principal and the president of the student body.

In welcoming the Negroes, the president of the student body told them he had made a canvass of the white students and found no opposition to their entrance.

Pleasanton residents voted 342-88 Saturday to integrate their schools.

The election was the first held under a new law passed by the last state Legislature which requires approval of a majority of voters in a special election before a school can integrate.

There are 37 Negro students in the Pleasanton school district which has 750 white students.

Tex. governor rants at closing schools

AUSTIN, Tex.—A measure that would automatically close the public schools of Texas should troops be sent there to enforce integration, was being contemplated by Gov. Price Daniel here Saturday.

Governor Daniel said the proposed measure would center around the specific subject of the use of Federal troops in patroling school campuses and not segregation in general.

U.S. Judge Rules With State Law On Integration Conflict

DALLAS, Dec. 10 (AP) — Federal Dist. Judge William H. Atwell today dismissed a suit aimed at finding out which conflicting integration-segregation laws have the greater power, federal or state.

The judge ruled that a federal District Court cannot pass on the constitutionality of a state law.

The school board faces two legal decisions which oppose each other:

(1) A federal court decision ordering Dallas schools to desegregate at midterm.

(2) A state law which in effect says the district will lose $1,500,000 yearly in state aid if it integrates schools without a general election.

At today's hearing, First Assistant Texas Attorney General James N. Ludlum argued that the only courts having jurisdiction in the case to determine constitutionality of the state law are the United States Supreme Court or the state courts of Texas.

Almond Blames Dalton For School Troubles

By ALEX R. PRESTON
Star Staff Correspondent

RICHMOND, Oct. 31.—J. Lindsay Almond, jr., Democrat, said last night his Republican opponent for Governor, Ted Dalton, appears to be running for the chief executive's spot in North Carolina rather than in Virginia.

At a Democratic rally in a local high school here, Mr. Almond derided the Republican's contention that a locally administered pupil assignment plan, similar to the North Carolina law, would keep Virginia's racially segregated schools "as they are."

Mr. Dalton co-sponsored, along with Democratic State Senator Armistead Boothe of Alexandria, a local pupil assignment bill in the Virginia General Assembly early in 1956. The measure was killed.

Mr. Almond, who was introduced by Representative Abbitt of the 4th congressional district, blamed much of Virginia's present-day troubles over classroom segregation on Mr. Dalton and "his accomplices" and "his confederates," in obvious reference to the Eisenhower Republican administration.

Battle on Platform

Appearing on the same platform was former Gov. John S. Battle of Charlottesville.

Mr. Battle explained why he had returned to the political wars after announcing his retirement from politics when he stepped down as Governor four years ago.

"The next four years," he said, "will witness about the most serious situation to confront Virginia since the War Between the States. I had planned to retire to my law practice but when this campaign came along, I was so impressed with its critical nature . . . I felt that if I could do anything to prevent what I believe would be a political catastrophe, it was up to me to do it."

Mr. Battle said Mr. Dalton had tried "to get out from under" the political implications of the use of Federal troops in Little Rock.

Senator Dalton soon afterwards sent President Eisenhower a telegram urging him to withdraw the troops but, according to Mr. Battle, "so far as I am advised, the President has not answered that telegram."

Fears Troops in Virginia

We are rapidly coming to the time," the former Governor went on, "when we're going to face the same situation (as Little Rock) right here in Virginia."

He said "my own home city of Charlottesville," is among Virginia localities under the gun of Federal court orders to desegregate their schools.

"When that happens, my friends," Mr. Battle continued, "I don't know what's going to happen in Virginia. I don't know how many troops they're going to send into Virginia."

Mr. Almond, in his appeal for votes in the election next Tuesday, told his Richmond audience:

"Senator Dalton's North Carolina plan was destroyed by the Federal courts before he embraced it. It blew up in his face within a few days after he embraced it. This he knows, yet he continues to assert before the people of Virginia that his plan will preserve our public schools 'as they are.'"

Mr. Dalton has pointed to the fact that the North Carolina pupil assignment plan already has withstood tests all the way through the Supreme Court. Only last week the Supreme Court held that Virginia's pupil placement law is useless in preserving racially separated classrooms.

Sees Unfounded Claims

"Can anyone be so naive as to believe that the Supreme Court will approve any program which does not satisfy the NAACP?" Mr. Almond asked.

He said Mr. Dalton "and his accomplices" are spreading "unfounded claims" over the State. The Republican has outlined five legal steps a Negro child would have to follow in appealing a denial to a white school, under the suggested Dalton plan.

Mr. Almond, who was the State's top legal officer until he resigned as attorney general a few weeks ago, declared:

"As a lawyer, Senator Dalton well knows that the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit has decided that if a Negro child is refused admittance on the basis of race by a local school board, such child can immediately bypass the State courts and go directly into a Federal court and obtain a forthwith injunction against the school board."

Mr. Almond used the occasion, as he did in Heathsville last week, to reply to his opponent's televised speech on a Washington (D. C.) station on October 13.

"He stated," Mr. Almond declared, "that the Supreme Court would not reverse its decision, but that the court would permit the mixing of our races in our public schools to be handled 'in line with the customs and traditions of our people.'"

Leaves for Staunton

"This is the most irreconcilable and inconsistent position that any man could possibly take on this issue."

Mr. Almond left here today for Staunton, where he was to make a tour with local party officials, commencing at 3:30 p.m. He was to be joined later this afternoon by Senator Byrd, head of the State Democratic machine, for a reception at Stonewall Jackson Hotel, and then was to attend a rally at Staunton tonight.

Mr. Dalton, meanwhile, was due in Norfolk this morning to commence a final round of handshaking and public appearances there. He had lined up several conferences and radio and television appearances for later in the day.

The Virginia Ruling And Alabama's Placement Law

(From The Montgomery Advertiser)

IT WOULD be foolish to assume other than that the Supreme Courts decision on Virginia's Placement Act is a dark cloud over Alabama's law.

True, there are differences, perhaps even substantial differences, but as we have said before the Supreme Court has not shown an inclination recently to be impressed with legal niceties. Senator Boutwell of Birmingham has insisted that Alabama's law is "entirely consistent with the opinion of the U. S. Supreme Court rendered in May of 1954." With all-respect to the senator, who has given much time and legal talent to Alabama's law, that would indeed be a remarkable achievement.

The Supreme Court said separate cannot be eqpual, that state enforcement of segregation is unconstitutional. Since then the court has shown how far it will go to enforce this philosophy. In the Girard College case the right of a privately endowed school to accept only "poor white male orphans," as provided in an ancient will establishing the school, was denied by the Supreme Court on the grounds that the trustee of the college was the Board of City Strusts of Philadelphia. Since the board was created by an 1869 act of the legislature, the board is an agency of the state, the court reasoned. And a state may not discriminate against individuals on the basis of race, color or religion.

THIS attenuated reasoning indicates how far the Supreme Court will go to find "state action" in segregation matters. The Alabama Placement Act was advanced as a way of preserving segregation without actually saying so. It differs from the Virginia law in some respects. For instance: The Virginia law vested assignment powers in a special placement board; the Alabama law leaves the powers to local boards of education. A companion law passed by Virginia would cut off automatically funds to integrated schools; Alabama wisely refrained from such an obviously vulnerable declaration of intent, but we do have laws permitting the abolition of schools to avoid forced integration.

The district court decision, which the Supreme Court affirmed by refusing to review, looked at the companion law withdrawing funds and found a "fixed and definite policy of the school authorities to maintain segregation."

Although Alabama did not pass such a companion act, there is abundant evidence in other laws, resolutions, and the declared opposition of legislators and elected officials to document a "fixed and definite policy of the school authorities."

THE ALABAMA Placement Act is cleverly written, but as we have noted before, the Supreme Court has not shown any inclination to read Southern laws bearing on the race question. They are battede back like pingpong balls. Even as delay measures, they aren't as effective as formerly because of the accelerated processing of segregation suits.

"The advertirer" hopes Boutwell is correct in his prediction that Alabama's law will withstand a court test despite the invalidation of the Virginia statute. But it would seem prudent to avoid such a test as long as possible. The court might, in its present extra-legal mood, simply say: Alabama has total segregation in the public schools and the Placement Law is responsible. Therefore it's unconstitutional.

Virginia's Pupil Placement Law

The Supreme Court once more has dealt a jarring blow to the diehard segregationists who would circumvent its rulings. Sen. Harry F. Byrd's "massive resistance" program has suffered a serious defeat. By its refusal to hear the state of Virginia's appeal, the Court has sustained the opinion of Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman who ruled last February that Virginia's pupil placement law was "unconstitutional on its face." Thereupon he ordered Norfolk and Newport News to proceed with

Sen. Byrd is using the "massive resistance" program as a political platform upon which to evaluate himself into the Governorship of the state. It was upon his advice that the pupil placement technique was initiated. Under this procedure the local board of education reserves the exclusive right to assign pupils to schools that it wishes them to attend. Judge Hoffman took the position that this was an elaborate attempt to preserve racial segregation by roundabout means.

This decision was unanimously upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Now the Supreme Court has refused to review the original judgment. This action was consistent with previous disposition of similar rulings. Virginia may be ready to imitate Arkansas, if it does it will get little support even among its own citizens. To be sure resistance from the Federal government will be more prompt and perhaps stiffer than was enacted in Little Rock.

Sen. Byrd can beat the resistance drums all he wants, public opinion has swung on the side of law and order. The precedent has been established. The Federal government will not hesitate to use its iron fist to enforce the order of the courts. What's more the issue may have jeopardized the Senator's chance to be elected Governor of the state of Virginia. He is unworthy of that honor.

VIRGINIA PLANS STUDY OF SCHOOLS

Group Will Weigh Proposals to Relieve Overcrowding—12-Month Term Urged

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 7—Virginia, hoping to continue its segregated school system, is undertaking a school study entirely separate from that troublesome question. It stems instead from predictions of steadily mounting public school enrollments.

The study will consider proposals for the twelve-month school year and other ideas to make better use of the state's educational buildings, equipment, and teaching staffs.

The Virginia Educational Facilities Committee assigned to the task is a special fourteen-member appointed by Gov Thomas B. Stanley. It will meet Tuesday to organize and plan its procedures. It will be asked to report to the incoming Governor, J. Lindsay Almond Jr. and to the Legislature by next Sept. 1.

The committee will have before it figures showing Virginia public school enrollment has increased from 565,074 in 1945-46 to 774,698 in 1956-57. The total is expected to increase to 924,500 in the school year of 1962-63.

In a letter to those appointed Governor Stanley said various suggestions had been advanced relating to better use of buildings and equipment. He listed specifically a four-quarter school year with groups of pupils staggered for attendance; a longer school year than the present one with all pupils attending; and "greater development of the summer school program to hasten the progress of exceptional students and to encourage more students who have failed subjects to make up the lost time during the summer."

Double Shifts Suggested

Since first mentioning the twelve-month school possibility last March he also said Saturday classes, earlier starting hours and double shifts should be studied.

The Governor said he could see advantages and disadvantages in any of these plans. He also suggested "there may be others of greater merit, or it may be that our present system is preferable."

He invited the committee to use as a starting point these considerations:

¶Will a form of fuller operations be more economical than erecting more buildings to accommodate the large enrollment?

¶Will such a plan make teaching more attractive and cut the teacher shortage?

¶Will such programs help the pupil without lowering the quality of instruction and satisfy the parents?

¶Could schedule changes found desirable for public schools help institutions of higher learning?

Members of the committee, representing various groups and scattered sections of Virginia, are State Senator M. M. Long of Wise; Delegate M. L. Shreves of Accomack; A. K. Scribner of West Norfolk, president of the Virginia Manufacturers Association; Peyton Winfree, executive editor of The Lynchburg News and Advance; Thomas C. Boushall of Richmond, president of the Bank of Virginia and a member of the State Board of Education; R. Claude Graham of Richmond, Assistant State Superintendent of Public Instruction; T. C. Williams, Division Superintendent of Alexandria Public School; John D. Richmond, principal of Martinsville High School; Mrs. A. E. Cooley, chairman of the Carroll County School Board; Edmund T. DeJarnette of Ashland, member of the State Council of Higher Education; Dr. Francis G. Lankford Jr., president of Longwood College; C. H. Zehmer of McKenney, president of the League of Virginia Counties; Harry B. Dyche, Mayor of Luray and president of the League of Virginia Municipalities; Mrs. T. O. Chewning of Henrico, state legislative chairman of the Virginia Congress of Parents and Teachers.

Governor Stanley indicated the study might cost upward of $25,000. Earlier he had said a committee might perform some research work themselves but might retain experts to perform part of its study.

Various school officials have been skeptical of a twelve-month operation because of the difficulty in obtaining more teachers, the problems of family vacations, teacher summer study and school repair time.

Fourth Circuit Asked to Rule On Placement

Attorney General Contests Arlington School Order

RICHMOND, Dec. 6 (AP).—The 4th Federal Circuit Court of Appeals has been asked to settle once and for all any doubts about the legality of Virginia's pupil placement law.

The request was contained in a brief filed by Attorney General Kenneth C. Patty who, with Arlington County attorneys, is contesting Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan's order that Negroes be admitted to Arlington white schools.

Oral arguments on Judge Bryan's order will be heard by the three-judge appellate court January 9 at Charlotte, N. C.

In his order of last September 14, which was later suspended pending the appeal to the circuit court, Judge Bryan said submission to the Pupil Placement Act amounts almost to assent to a racially segregated school. He sai dthe Virginia argument the act is a reasonable administrative remedy is untenable.

Administration Stressed

Mr. Patty argued in his brief, filed yesterday, that the placement of pupils is an administrative function and should not be undertaken by the Federal courts unless it is clear that the school authorities either refuse to do so or do so illegally.

"Being agents of the Commonwealth of Virginia," Mr. Patty argued, "these defendants (Arlington School Board) are under a duty to comply with State laws until such laws are being held invalid by a final judgment."

The act has been upheld in the State courts, but Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk said it was unconstitutional on its face.

If the act is not invalid in its entirety, the court was asked to clearly define those parts which are invalid.

Orderly Transition Denied

Mr. Patty added:

"Any decision completely invalidating the Placement Act should provide for an orderly transition in revesting the enrollment functions in the local authorities and permit such local authorities to weigh factors and problems not before the court, such as relative achievement levels, proper distribution of school population into school districts, transportation, efficient use of school buildings and personnel and others."

Mr. Patty said if that part of the Placement Act is valid which divests local school officials of pupil placement powers and hands it over to the State pupil placement board, then Judge Bryan's order should be reversed.

On the other hand, he contended that if the act is voided in its entirety, Judge Bryan's order should be reversed on the ground the Negroes have failed to establish a right to the help they demanded of the court.

Judge Agrees to Stay Prince Edward Order

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 6 (AP). Chief Judge John J. Parker of the 4th Federal Circuit Court of Appeals has agreed to stay an order directing Prince Edward County ot make a prompt start toward public school desegregation.

Attorney General Kenneth C. Patty said yesterday Judge Parker notified him the order would be stayed provided the decision is appealed to the United States Supreme Court within 30 days of December 3. Mr. Patty said the appeal would be made in that deadline.

The Circuit court issued an order recently directing the county to begin desegregating schools. Prince Edward County figured as one of the five original defendants in the case which resulted in the 1954 Supreme Court decision.

Norfolk-Newport News School Case Is Called Key to 9 Integration Suits

RICHMOND, Sept. 30 (AP) Three new cases filed in Federal District Court at Norfolk last week boosted to nine the number of Virginia localities involved in segregation litigation. Dail Times Herald

Five localities — Norfolk, Newport News, Prince Edward County, Charlottesville and Arlington County — are concerned with direct litigation. Washington Post Each has been either requested or ordered to admit Negroes into its public schools at specific dates. P B 2

None of the court orders has been carried out, because the effective dates for integration have been delayed pending appeals to higher courts.

The Virginia Pupil Placement Act has become an issue in Norfolk, Newport News, Charlottesville, Arlington County, Fairfax County, Richmond, Suffolk and Nansemond County. Times - 10-1-57

The courts, for practical purposes, have consolidated the Norfolk and Newport News cases. The Charlottesville and Arlington cases were at one time lumped together, but recent developments have changed this situation.

At present, attorneys consider the Norfolk-Newport News case as the key piece of litigation in Virginia. The outcome of several of the other suits hinges on what happens in the Norfolk-Newport News case.

Here is the status of all the segregation litigation in Virginia, and the relationship of the Norfolk-Newport News cases, where applicable, to the other suits:

Norfolk - Newport News — Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman last February ordered both localities to desegregate beginning with the school term which opened this month.

He also declared the pupil placement law unconstitutional on its face in denying a motion by the state to dismiss the suit on the grounds the Negro plaintiffs had not exhausted the administrative remedy set up in the placement law. The placement law had not been enacted when these cases were started.

The U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Judge Hoffman's action, but the effective date of integration has been stayed pending an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The Supreme Court convenes Oct. 7. Shortly thereafter, the court is expected to issue its decision on whether it will review the case.

If the court denies a review, it will in effect uphold the decisions of Judge Hoffman and the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. The case will go back to Judge Hoffman, and he would set a new integration date. Getting the issue back to the lower court will take 30 days.

But the state presumably could ask the Supreme Court to reconsider its decision if it refuses to review the case. How long this might take is problematical.

Charlottesville — Federal Judge John Paul in July postponed setting a desegregation date for Charlottesville until the U. S. Supreme Court acts on the pupil placement decision of Judge Hoffman.

If the Supreme Court declares the act unconstitutional, Charlottesville must desegregate beginning with the first school semester following the court's decision.

Judge Paul also decreed parents of children attending Charlottesville schools do not have to fill in the assignment applications.

Arlington—Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan decreed in July the County must abolish racial segregation beginning with the school term which opened this month. At the same time, he said parents in the locality must comply with the placement law.

Judge Bryan first decreed in July, 1956, that Arlington must integrate its elementary schools by last January, and its junior and senior high schools this month. The hearing in July, 1957, was on a request to update his earlier decision as it pertained to elementary schools.

His latest order said that if and when there were complaints of the school board violating the effective date, he would then "inquire if the complainant has first submitted, or has adequate means of submitting, his grievance for correction administratively."

He obviously was referring to the placement law. If there were any complaints about the effective date, Judge Bryan said he would take such action "as is appropriate."

Seven Negroes sought to enter white schools in Arlington on the opening day of school. Six had not filed the placement forms. They were denied admittance and their attorneys went back to Judge Bryan.

On Sept. 14, Judge Bryan ordered the school board to admit the Negroes on Sept. 23. He said submission to the placement law "amounts almost to assent to a racially segregated school."

On Sept. 18, however, Judge Bryan suspended the effective date of his injunction pending an appeal to the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. The case probably will be placed on the court docket for the January term in Charlotte, N. C.

The Supreme Court's decision on the Newport News-Norfolk case presumably would affect the Arlington case, however, because many similar points are issues in both suits.

Prince Edward County—Federal District Judge Sterling Hutcheson declined last January to set a specific date for integration. The Negro plaintiffs have appealed this decision, and the case will be argued here Oct. 14 before the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

Fairfax County—This case involves an individual, Theo T. DeFebio, whose two sons were dropped from school early last spring when she refused to sign the assignment forms.

She has challenged the constitutionality of the law in the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. The case has been placed on the court's privileged docket and will be argued orally next month—possibly by Oct. 10. The court probably will hand down its decision in November.

In a preliminary skirmish, the court said she would not prejudice her rights if she singed the forms under protest. The court on Sept. 6 denied Mrs. DeFebio's request to admit her children temporarily until the constitutional issue is decided.

Richmond, Norfolk, Suffolk, Nansemond County — These cases, filed in Federal district courts, also involve the constitutionality of the placement law. The Federal courts in these cases have acted differently than the State Supreme Court and have granted temporary restraining orders prohibiting the localities from barring the children from school for refusal to sign the placement forms.

The plaintiffs in these four localities have requested that a three-judge court be convened to settle the constitutional issue.

(In addition to the school desegregation litigation, there are two actions aimed at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People going forward in Virginia. The Boatwright Committee of the Virginia Senate and the Thomson Committee of the House are conducting separate probes of the NAACP. The investigations are designed to find out what role the NAACP has played in racial litigation in the state.)

(At the same time the NAACP itself is fighting back in the courts against laws passed by the last General Assembly which the organization feels would cripple its future activities.)

De Febio Children Want Seats

Richmond Times Herald

P. B 3

RICHMOND, Aug. 23 (AP) Lawyers for Theo DeFebio today filed formal notice they will ask the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals at the start of its September term to admit Mrs. DeFebio's two sons to Fairfax County schools pending the court's decision on the constitutionality of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act.

Mrs. DeFebio, a white woman, refused to sign pupil placement forms provided by the State Pupil Placement Board under the act and her sons were expelled from school last April 15. 8-24-57

The mother challenged the constitutionality of the act in a writ of mandamus asking the State Supreme Court to order reinstatement of the boys. The case is pending before the court but probably will not be decided before its October or November terms.

The notice of motion filed today said the Supreme Court would be asked Sept. 4 at Staunton to direct the temporary reinstatement of the DeFebio boys, Theodore Thomas, 14½, and Dominick Nicholas, 9½.

Richmonders Ask For Setting Up Of Special Court

RICHMOND, Sept. 14 (AP).—A new attack on Virginia's beleagured pupil placement act has been launched by a recently formed Richmond colored organization. 9-14-57

The suit, filed in Federal District Court here yesterday, asks for creation of a special three-judge Federal court to pass on the constitutionality of the law, enacted by the special session of the General Assembly in the fall of 1956.

It was brought in behalf of 103 Richmond colored children and their parents or guardians and contends these children have either been denied admission to Richmond public schools or, if admitted, have not been enrolled because their parents or guardians have not signed pupil placement forms.

Named as defendants are the State Pupil Placement Board and its members, Andrew A. Farley of Danville, Beverly H. Randolph, jr., of Richmond and Hugh V. White of Holland; the Richmond School Board and H. I. Willett, superintendent of Richmond Public Schools.

The complaint was signed by five colored attorneys, Oliver W. Hill, Spottswood W. Robinson III, Martin A. Martin and Roland D. Ealey, all of Richmond, and S. W. Tucker of Emporia. All are prominently identified with the NAACP.

NAACP Not Identified

Chester M. Hampton, president of the newly formed Richmond Pupil Protective Association, said the suit was filed under the individual and collective authorization of that organization. The NAACP, he said, was not identified with the suit.

Among other things, the placement act requires new and transfer students to file placement applications with the three-man pupil placement board. On the basis of information contained in these forms—which do not mention race or color—the pupils are assigned to schools.

In addition to asking the special court to rule on the constitutionality of the placement act, the plaintiffs also ask for interlocutory and permanent injunctions to restrain the State from enforcing the provisions of the act.

Challenges to the placement act have been made in State and Federal courts, and the State Supreme Court of Appeals has agreed to rule on its constitutionality. It has been called unconstitutional on its face by one Federal judge.

Exact Count Lacking

Mr. Hampton said his organization, which brought the suit, is a loosely knit group of parents who have not signed pupil placement forms. He said the organization retained Mr. Hill and other NAACP attorneys to represent it.

An exact count of colored pupils turned away from Richmond schools for failure to have signed placement forms has been impossible to obtain. School officials said, however, it might top 100 by next week.

Mr. Hampton also said his group would open child care centers here Monday to take care of colored pupils who have been barred from schools on the placement application issue.

He said the centers won't be schools, "but they will be places where the children will be under supervision. . . . Parents who have no way to care for their children at home will be especially interested in these centers. We also expect from the statements of our members that parents will welcome having some place to keep their older children off the streets."

had not been notified of the school officials' stand, said "it dsn't responsive to our motion and misses our point." He said "we'll shoot our guns come Sept. 4 in Staunton" when both sides will argue the reinstatement motion.

The Placement Board made the same offer to Mrs. DeFebio last spring and she refused.

The school attorneys contended that the Board "has heretofore accepted and processed hundreds of applications filed under protest and without prejudice to the legal rights of the applicants, and is continuing to accept and process such applications."

More than 50 Richmond Negro parents who also have refused to sign placement forms, have authorized Oliver W. Hill, chief counsel for the Virginia NAACP, to file suit in their behalf if their children are denied admittance to school.

Hill said he was authorized last night to bring suit in the event that Negro students were refused admisison to white schools or if Negro students were refused readmission to Negro schools because they failed to sign the placement forms.

Richmond school authorities have estimated that some 300 to 400 parents here, mostly Negroes, have failed to sign the placement forms.

Temporary Seating Of DeFabios Fought

RICHMOND, Aug. 30 (Special)—Theo T. DeFebio should be required to sign Virginia's pupil placement forms—"under protest," if necessary—before her two sons are allowed to return to school, the Virginia Supreme Court was told today.

Attorneys for State and Fairfax County school officials took the stand in answer to a motion that Mrs. DeFebio's sons, Nicky and Teddy, should be temporarily reinstated pending a court decision.

The attorneys said the Fairfax mother could sign the placement applications "under protest" without prejudicing her rights to challenge the constitutionality of the Pupil Placement Act.

Mrs. DeFebio's sons were expelled from Fairfax schools when she refused to sign a placement form which requires the name of the last school attended. The Placement Act is being challenged by Mrs. DeFebio in the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

Stanley Hints Use Of Surplus Schools

RICHMOND, Oct. 8 (AP)—Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's responses at a press conference today indicated the possibility of private purchase of surplus public school buildings to continue segregated schooling if court - ordered integration brought closure of public schools.

In response to a reporter's questions, Stanley said:

"I have been advised that, if it is determined that it is surplus, any public building can be sold." The advice presumably came from his legal advisers.

Pressed on this point, Stanley cited examples in which public school buildings have been declared surplus by local governing bodies and sold for a variety of private uses by their purchasers.

One such school building in Henry, his own county, Stanley said, was bought privately after it had been declared surplus. It now is being used as an office and warehouse.

At no time during today's conference with reporters did Stanley advocate that public school buildings should be declared surplus and sold to private educational groups.

The governor said he did not believe that any public school in Virginia would operate on an integrated basis in the foreseeable future. He drew a distinction between continuing operation on an integrated basis and the technical integration that would force a school to close automatically.

Virginia ready for private plan—

Negroes may go unschooled if courts force race issue

BY CHARLES BARTLETT
North American Newspaper Alliance

FARMVILLE, Va., Nov. 5—The center of resistance to school integration in Virginia and perhaps in the entire South seems to lie here in Prince Edward County. Its school system was one of the five directly concerned in the Supreme Court's integration decision of 1954, and Virginians are preparing to do battle on the county level.

Virginians hope the showdown takes place in this county, where the white population is united and where firm plans have been laid. Prince Edward County is prepared to switch from a public school system to private schools the moment the courts set a deadline for integration.

THE EXECUTION of an order for integration has been stayed by U. S. District Judge Sterling Hutcheson. He declined to set a deadline for integration on the grounds that it would serve only to interrupt the education of some 1500 white and 1900 Negro children.

THE NAACP has petitioned the U. S. Court of Appeals to direct Hutcheson to set a firm date as a deadline for integration. The ruling is expected in the near future.

The public school system in the county will not endure, under the new plan, one minute beyond any deadline that might be set. The county board of supervisors has arranged payment of school board's bills at the end of each month and can therefore suspend support at any time.

PRIVATE HALLS and facilities have been designated to house the private system if it comes into being. All teachers in the white schools have agreed to serve in the new system, which would be financed by the Prince Edward Educational Corp. The corporation is headed by private citizens and has no legal connection with the county government.

This educational corporation, charged with meeting expenses that are expected to amount to $250,000 a year, acquired pledges of $190,000 and $10,000 in cash at the time of its formation in 1955.

THE PLEDGES have expired but the white community is more determined than ever and local leaders are confident that the financing can be provided if the need arises.

There will be no provision for Negro schooling in the private system. While the county is obligated by law to spend around $100,000 a year on education, this would be far short of the $400,000 a year needed to meet the costs of Negro education.

Mr. Hill, as well as most sources involved in the State's side of the Virginia school litigation scene, were in agreement this week that the usefulness of the act as a court weapon to preserve segregated schools is at an end.

The consensus was that the law can no longer be used as a defense against integration, even though both Gov. Stanley and Atty. Gen. Kenneth C. Patty say that the three-man pupil placement board will continue to operate.

Mr. Hill maintained that the effect of Monday's United States Supreme Court decision refusing to review the Norfolk-Newport News cases was to destroy the placement law.

New Virginia Integration Appeal Is Due

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 26 (AP).—An attorney representing Negro children in the Norfolk-Newport News school segregation case said today he will ask Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman to order integration in the localities beginning with the February semester.

Oliver W. Hill, of Richmond, said he could not say just how soon the request for a new effective date will be made. He pointed out that Judge Hoffman may feel no further order is necessary.

Judge Hoffman, in an order entered last February, directed Norfolk and Newport News school authorities to integrate their public schools beginning with the term which opened last month. The order has been stayed pending successful appeals to higher courts.

Mr. Hill could see no reason "at this time" to ask Judge Hoffman to declare that the United States Supreme Court had held the Virginia pupil placement act is unconstitutional.

Integration order held up by judge

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 18—(AP)—U. S. Judge Albert V. Bryan today held up, pending appeal, the application of his order for integration of four Arlington County, Virginia, white schools next Monday.

The stay had been asked by the school board, largely on the ground that great damage would be done if the admission of Negro pupils proved only temporary.

Attr. James M. Simmonds argued for the school board that admission of the seven Negroes involved in the order would result in closing schools serving more than 5000 pupils. He said that was because of state law requiring withholding of state funds from any integrated school.

The school board is carrying to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals the case in which Bryan last Saturday ordered the seven admitted.

ARLINGTON GAINS INTEGRATION STAY

Court Defers Order Pending State's Appeal—No Mixed Classes This Term Seen

Special to The New York Times.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 18—A critical test of Virginia's stand against racial integration in public schools was postponed today. Pending an appeal, Federal District Judge Albert V. Ryan suspended his order that seven Negro children be admitted next Monday to all-white schools in Arlington County. Arlington is a suburb of Washington.

The appeal process will delay integration in Arlington probably for the rest of this school term, and possibly until next fall.

The chief effect of the action may be political. It means that the dominant Democratic organization in the state will go into the gubernatorial election Nov. 5 with its program of "massive resistance" to integration unbroken.

No Mixed Classes Yet

No white public school in the state has admitted a Negro since the Supreme Court's 1954 decision outlawing segregation. The preservation of that record at least through Election Day, it is believed, would help J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Democratic candidate for Governor. He is opposed by Ted Dalton, Republican.

State Statutes passed last year require the automatic closing of any school that is integrated and the suspension of state school aid to the county. If these laws were enforced to close schools in Arlington, observers felt, the resulting confusion might turn voters to Mr. Dalton.

The next important legal test of Virginia's stand is likely to come in Norfolk or Newport News.

Negro children in those cities have won Federal court orders for their admission to nonsegregated classes. The orders have been stayed pending a petition to the Supreme Court for review.

The Supreme Court is likely to pass on the petitions soon after its next term begins Oct. 7. If it denies them, the stage will be set for a clash between Federal law and the state position.

Warning by School Board

Judge Bryan's postponement meant the granting of a stay requested by the Arlington School Board. The board's attorneys had warned that unless a stay were granted, any school admitting the Negro plaintiffs next Monday would be closed. Four schools with more than 5,000 pupils are involved.

"I'd rather shoot my own child than do anything that would close the schools of Arlington," Frank L. Ball, a board attorney, said. He said that "complete chaos" would result if Negroes were admitted to white schools.

Oliver W. Hill, an attorney supplied to the plaintiffs by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, replied:

"If the schools have to be closed to bring the people of Virginia to their senses, the sooner it's done [the better]."

Mr. Hill and Edwin C. Brown, an associate, accused the state of using delaying tactics "to keep an endless chain of litigation going." They said they feared that while the case was on appeal the state would pass new legislation and then urge the courts to delay integration until further tests.

Judge Bryan ruled for the stay on the ground that there would be confusion should his order take effect now and be overruled later on appeal. He said requests for stay were almost always granted in cases of this kind.

The case now goes to the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. A hearing is likely by December. After decision, a review could be sought in the Supreme Court.

Mr. Brown and other N. A. A. C. P. attorneys were subpoenaed today to appear before a state legislative investigating group. Local association records were also subpoenaed and will be supplied, the attorneys said.

The committee begins two days of hearings here tomorrow. Witnesses include several persons who have taken anti-segregation positions in legal proceedings.

Placement Act Curtailed

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 18—The state's Pupil Placement Act was curtailed temporarily today for the second time.

Judge Sterling Hutcheson in Federal District Court signed an order ruling that Negro pupils barred from Negro schools because of their parents' refusal to sign pupil placement applications should be admitted to the schools pending a higher court decision on the constitutionality of the law.

Most of the more than 100 Negroes who had stayed away or had been sent home since school began two weeks ago returned to classes as soon as principals were told to obey Judge Hutcheson's decision.

U.S. Court Bids Virginia Let Negroes in Schools

By The Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 14.—A Federal judge today ordered the admission of seven Negroes to all-white schools in neighboring Arlington County. He said their parents need not comply with Virginia's pupil-placement law.

United States District Judge Albert V. Bryan used sharp language to attack the placement act—the heart of Virginia's declared policy of "massive resistance" to radical integration in the schools.

"Submission to that act amounts almost to assent to a racially segregated school," he said.

The judge ordered the seven Negroes admitted to three Arlington schools on Sept. 23. The parents of only one of the seven signed a pupil-placement form required under the state law.

Judge Bryan said that if a Negro parent signed this form, he "would not have an unfettered and free tribunal to act on his request" for admission of his child to a white school.

The State Pupil Placement Board, which considers such requests, "still deliberates on a racial question," he said, "under threat of loss of state money to the applicants' schools if children of different races are taught there."

Judge Bryan referred here to another new state law which would deny state [illegible] to integrated schools.

The judge signed an order which restrained the Arlington school board from "refusing to admit" the students "or enroll or educate them at the schools to which they had made application for admission."

The seven Negroes were refused admission to white schools on opening day of classes Sept. 5.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had sought an injunction to prohibit county school officials from barring the Negroes from white schools.

Pupil-placement laws have been adopted by a number of Southern states since the Supreme Court ruled in 1954 that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

Virginia's placement act, enacted last year, took the power of assigning pupils to specific schools from local school boards and placed it in a three-man board appointed by the Governor.

The avowed purpose of the law has been to circumvent the Supreme Court's integration decree.

No mention of race is made in the placement law but a half dozen standards for making pupil assignments are specified. These include the welfare of the child and other children in the school, availability of facilities, availability of transportation, aptitude and "intangible social scientific factors."

Laws' Requirements

The law requires the signing of a form by parents of any pupil seeking to transfer to another school or entering school for the first time.

Arlington County lies on the Virginia side of the Potomac River, just across from Washington, D. C.

Judge Bryan on July 27 ordered integration of Arlington schools this fall. The N. A. A. C. P. asked for immediate enforcement of this order.

In his decision Judge Bryan noted that the Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals had upheld a ruling that the placement act is unconstitutional. Judge Bryan said he could not "fairly require the plaintiffs even to submit their applications" to the State Pupil Placement Board.

The judge called "untenable" the state argument that the pupil placement act is a reasonable administrative remedy.

Procedure Held Prolix

"The procedure there prescribed is too sluggish and prolix to constitute a reasonable remedial process," he said.

Judge Bryan heard testimony and arguments on the motion at a two-day hearing Wednesday and Thursday.

Negro School Is Damaged By Vandals

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 28 (AP).—Vandals yesterday caused extensive damage to a Negro elementary school here by setting fires in two rooms, ransacking five others and breaking out dozens of windows.

Fire Chief John F. Finnegan described the scene at the Albert H. Norrell School on the city's south side as "the worst piece of vandalism I ever saw in my life." Police said it was probably the work of teen-agers bent only on destruction. Nothing was stolen. No arrests have been made.

One school official set damages at more than $20,000.

School Principal Mrs. Ethel T. Overby burst into tears when shown the cafeteria. Intruders had thrown eggs against windows and had taken milk, ice cream, vegetables and other food and strewn it on the floor.

Police said they didn't believe any of the 750 children enrolled at the school were guilty. Norrell has pupils only through the fifth grade.

VIRGINIA SETS THE PACE FOR SOUTHERN RESISTANCE

Election Seems to Put the Seal on School Segregation But This May Be Modified

By JOHN N. POPHAM

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 9—Virginians this week elected a new Governor under the banner of the state's official policy of "massive resistance" to any court-ordered public school integration.

From the mood of the campaign and from the voting patterns at the polls there could be no doubt that the prevailing sentiment was in support of Virginia's so-called defense-in-depth laws, a complex set of anti-integration statutes now under court attack on several fronts.

But what this means in the way of total rigidity and end results is another matter. The fact is that Virginians, perhaps more than any other Southerners, are deeply attuned to a local sense of history.

Background Examples

Revealing examples of this are to be found in the background of the Governor-elect, J. Lindsay Almond Jr., who resigned as Attorney General to head the ticket fielded by the powerful Democratic organization under the leadership of Harry F. Byrd.

Mr. Almond is a former Representative in Congress, a former judge of the hustings court in Roanoke and an esteemed lawyer. He is an amiable man, widely popular in the state and a skillful "country politician" with a knack for lining up county courthouse support before he takes an important course.

Mr. Almond became a household name when he argued Virginia's school case in the historic suit that resulted in the 1954 Supreme Court decision that public school racial segregation statutes are unconstitutional.

At first, Virginia officialdom's reaction to the court ruling was relatively moderate. A type of local option in which communities could desegregate if they so desired was proposed and, in effect, endorsed by the voters on a 2-to-1 basis.

Then Senator Byrd, a political leader unexcelled at putting together winning combinations in his state and a Virginian to the marrow, who understands the shifting moods among the people, called for "massive resistance"—and the moderate policy was shelved.

Tough Laws

In its place was substituted a legislative package, the key provisions of which transferred to a central board the statutory power of local school boards to assign pupils and provided for cutting off of state funds and closing down schools that accepted a Negro student under any compulsion.

Through all this maneuvering, Mr. Almond issued the necessary defining statements to the public as the state's chief legal officer.

Always he spoke as a lawyer and a heritage-Virginian, referring to "honorable and legal defenses," "flexibility of position" and "historic commitment to Southern conceptions of inviolable state sovereignty."

Moreover, Senator Byrd and other leaders of the dominant political faction employed the same words in building their case. Woven into this were vehement arraignments of such "demons" as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Chief Justice Earl Warren of the United States and former Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., all depicted as implementers of civil rights measures for partisan political purposes.

In the Campaign

This same technique was introduced into the Gubernatorial contest against the Republican nominee, State Senator Theodore Roosevelt Dalton, a mountain section Republican with Confederate forebears. Mr. Dalton's own Virginian status was such that he could not personally be pictured as "evil," but his association with national Republican "integrationists" was a steady target.

Mr. Dalton accused the Democrats of "peddling trash" on the integration issue, said that "massive resistance" was actually "massive folly" and proposed that the Legislature adopt a "realistic" pupil assignment plan similar to the one in North Carolina to allow for limited and controlled integration in areas with few Negroes.

No Chance

The soundest pre-election assessment gave Mr. Dalton no real chance to defeat Mr. Almond. But there was considerable questioning about the "massive resistance" theme, particularly the flip-flop, and some believed that the highly personable Republican nominee might make as close a race as he did in 1953, when he got 45 per cent of the total vote.

But during the campaign President Eisenhower issued his order sending Federal troops into Little Rock, Ark., to enforce court-ordered public school integration. The Byrd forces struck hard and fast and the bottom fell out of Mr. Dalton's campaign effort.

What seems clear about all this is that Virginians have become deeply emotional on this subject, and many have unquestionably conjured up a strong feeling in response to such phrases as "honor" and "a fighting South."

There is no question that this sort of thing goes deep in the Tidewater and Southside sections, where Negroes are most numerous.

And yet, behind the phrase-making of the massive resistors there appears to be a willingness to come to terms when political leaders find that the shift can be made without injury to office-seekers.

Thus this week it seemed evident that Virginia leaders would continue with popular support to set a pace of stiff resistance for the rest of the South. But, held in readiness at the official level, there will be a "flexibility" more like the earlier policy, when the official attitude was grudgingly to give each community its own right of decision.

Court Alters Virginia Edict

Advertiser Pitt. Montgomery, Ala.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 12 (AP)—The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled today that a federal district judge was wrong in refusing to set a time limit for the end of school segregation in Prince Edward County, Virginia.

The case is one of the original five cases on which the Supreme Court ruled in its desegregation decisions of 1954 and 1955. It has been before the District Court ever since.

Tue. 11-12-57

State and county attorneys declined comment in Richmond on the opinion. Presumably they can appeal the Circuit Court decision to the Supreme Court.

The school population of 3,030 in Prince Edward County is 54 per cent Negro and 46 per cent white. It is virtually a certainty Prince Edward officials will close all the county schools before they will accept any integration, and they have set up machinery and funds for educating white children privately.

A lawyer for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People told the Circuit Court during arguments on this appeal, however, it would not stand by and see the schools closed without taking court action against it. Virginia's constitution requires that the state operate an efficient education system.

The ruling, issued by the Appeals Court sitting in Baltimore, was handed down in a case brought by Half E. Allen on behalf of his three children against the county school board.

Segregationist New Governor Of Virginia

Courier Journal Louisville, Ky.

Byrd Candidate Beats Moderate Republican

Richmond, Va., Nov. 5 (AP)—Democrat J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., Tuesday won election as Governor of Virginia under the Byrd-organization banner of massive resistance to racial integration in the public schools.

The 59-year-old son of a railroad engineer, who became a congressman and Virginia's attorney general, jumped into a quick lead over Republican Ted Dalton, picked up steam as the returns mounted, and rolled toward a victory of 2-1 proportions.

Wed. 11-6-57

Dalton's campaign of moderation on the school issue won him strength in the Northern Virginia 10th District and the Southwest Ninth, as well as in a number of isolated pockets. But in eight of the 10 Congressional districts the returns made it all Almond by margins that ran from comfortable to overwhelming.

Returns from 1,073 of the State's 1,911 precincts showed:

Almond	158,577
Dalton	80,313

Dalton, following the returns at his home in Radford in southwest Virginia, conceded Almond's victory at 9:20 p.m.

He congratulated the Democrat he battled down to the wire on the school issue, and said he believed the contest "will make for a better Virginia."

Feels His Plan Better

Dalton added, however, that he still felt "serenely confident" his plan of moderation for meeting the school issue was the better answer.

Elected with Almond were the other two members of the Democratic Ticket—A. E. S. Stephens for lieutenant governor and Albertis S. Harrison for attorney general. The ticket carried the all-out backing of the organization of Senator Byrd (D., Va.), which has proved dominant in Virginia state politics for 30 years.

A relatively heavy outpouring of voters bade fair to eclipse the 1953 election total of 412,000 by 100,000 or so.

Virginia Battles To Keep Segregated Public Schools

World Sat. 9-14-57 B'ham, Ala. P. 1

By ARTHUR KRANISH

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — (INS) — The state of Virginia battled in federal court Wednesday to prevent immediate enforcement of the integration law in the schools of Arlington County, a Washington, D. C. suburban area.

State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, who clashed hotly with representatives of the National Association feo r th Advancement of Colored People, pleaded for "reasonable delay" in implementation of the Supreme Court outlawing racially segregated schools.

CONSUMING FIRES

Almond told federal Judge Albert . Bryan that integration difficulties are "raging like consuming fires" in Arkansas, Tennessee, and elsewhere in the South.

The jurist rejected Almond's request for a delay in the hearing on the appeal of an attorney for seven Negro children for an order directing the Arlington County School board to admit them to all-white schools.

Bryan turned down four motions filed by the school board asking that a previous integration order be dissolved and that the hearing be postponed.

S. W. Robertson, an attorney for NAACP, told the court that the Negro children were denied entry to the white schools solely because of race. He charged that it was "impossible" under Virginia's pupil placement act for the Negroes to attend a non-segregated school.

PLACEMENT LAW

The desegregation order under attack by the state was issued by Bryan July 27, but when the county schools opened earlier this month Negro pupils were turned away on grounds that they had failed to comply with the pupil placement law.

The law was evolved in an open attempt to uphold segregated schools in Virginia. It has been held "unconstitutional on its face" by another judge.

Three Negro parents, summoned to the witness stand, testified that their children were denied admission to schools in defiance of the integration order

NEGRO PARENTS

The three were Dr. Harold M. Johnson, Robert A. Eldridge, and Mrs. George M. Nelson, all of Arlington, Va.

They were joined by Mrs. Geraldine Davis, also of Arlington, a white woman who said she escorted three Negro children to the schools because of her "Christian beliefs."

Mrs. Davis testified: "I thought if there was going to be any blood shed, it should be a white person's, mine if necessary."

Mrs. Nelson said she signed the pupil placement form for her son, but that he was nevertheless directed to a Negro school. Johnson and Eldridge refused to sign the form, which gives state authorities the right to assign pupils to an "appropriate" school.

All three of the parents testified that Negro schools were farther from their homes than white schools.

Johnson also testified that Negro schools did not offer some of the courses his children wanted to take, and that he was therefore sending them to schools in Washington, which are integrated, but where he had to pay tuition charges.

Plan for Segregation Key to Virginia Race

Contest for Governorship May Turn On How to Preserve School System

P. 1-2

The campaign for Governor of Virginia resolved around one transcendent point last week as the candidates ended their first full week of heavy politicking:

Whether a locally operated pupil assignment plan or "massive resistance" will best preserve Virginia's traditionally segregated public schools.

The opening of the public schools last week added more impetus, and left the issue headed for increasing debate in the gubernatorial campaign between Democrat J. Lindsay Almond, jr., and Republican Ted Dalton.

Mr. Almond's position, not yet spelled out in specific detail, is firmly on the side of unyielding resistance. Mr. Dalton is just as firmly on the side of evasive resistance, or specifically, a locally administered pupil assignment plan similar to the one in use in North Carolina.

Both men have declared themselves stout advocates of continued segregation. Each says the other's approach won't work but will lead only to early and widespread integration.

This conflict apparently will be amplified in great and confusing detail in the eight weeks of campaigning before Virginians go to the polls November 5.

Since the Supreme Court in 1954 handed down its decision declaring public school segregation based on race was unconstitutional, Southern States have looked long and hard for an answer to preserve the old order.

Difference in Systems

The solutions brought forth by Virginia and North Carolina are greatly different, both in theory and strategy.

Under Virginia's program, put through the legislature by the controlling Democratic organization, no integration would be permitted anywhere in the public schools of the commonwealth. The accent is on State control and would close a school, if necessary, to prevent integration.

The North Carolina approach, in effect, gives each city and county the option of deciding how to handle its own school situation.

A locality may, by vote of its people, decide to close the schools rather than submit to integration.

Each State has its first line of defense. In Virginia, it is the Pupil Placement Act. In North Carolina, it is the pupil assignment law.

The Virginia placement law vests full powers of assigning pupils to schools in a three-member State boarh named by the Governor. In North Carolina, each school board retains the assignment pozers. In both States, the laws set forth many legal standards for classifying and assigning pupils, so that a board may segregate for almost any reason other than race.

This difference stems from the basic difference in strategy and in legal opinions as to which plan is likely to prove more durable under attacks in the Federal courts—which will preserve the most segregation for the longest time.

Court Refusals Seen

Advocates of the North Carolina plan contend Virginia's placement act and other links which form the chain of massive resistance are doomed to early legal knockouts in the Supreme Court. They say this is so because the whole pattern plainly and explicitly forbids any integration and defies the Supreme Court.

By contrast, they contend, the North Carolina plan will stand up in the courts because it is not part of a rigid no-integration pattern. A little token integration where it is locally acceptable, they say, will serve to keep most schools segregated.

Advocates of Virginia's unyielding resistance strategy scoff at the idea that any pupil assignment plan which sanctions integration will effectively preserve segregation. On the contrary, they say, pupil assignment will lead to fast-mushrooming integration. An integration, as they see it, will surely destroy the public schools.

Champions of the Virginia plan made some capital of what happened in Virginia and in North Carolina when the schools opened. North Carolina, they pointed out, had integration and some disorders of disturbances. (Eleven colored children were admitted to previously all-white schools in three cities, Charlotte, Greensboro and Winston-Salem). And Virginia schools opened with the segregation front unbroken, and without any disorder or trouble.

Delegates Differ On Bryan's Order

Post + Times Herald Washington D.C.

Two Arlington members of the Virginia House of Delegates differed yesterday in their reaction to Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan's order for admission of seven Negro pupils to Arlington schools on Sept. 23.

Star 9-13-57

Del. Kathryn Stone, one of the leading liberals in the House of Delegates, said she was "not at all surprised. I was expecting it." P. 3-A

"It seems to me," she said, "that Virginia has reached the end of its legal rope and will have to face the problem confronting us in a rational manner."

Del. William L. Winston, a middle-of-the-roader, said he thought the State of Virginia should seek some method of appealing Bryan's decision. He said he thought Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's pupil placement legislation had the backing of the majority of Virginia voters.

"Although I was not a supporter at all of the Stanley legislation, I believe that it represents the will of the people of Virginia as a whole," Winston said.

"Until this legislation has been reviewed fully by the United States Supreme Court, the State should take whatever legal action is available to it to maintain the status quo pending such determination by the Supreme Court."

The pupil placement plan has been held unconstitutional by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and is now pending before the Supreme Court.

In his ruling yesterday, however, Bryan based his action enjoining Arlington School officials from denying entrance to Negro applicants on a 1956 order he said had been upheld by the Supreme Court.

Legal sources in Washington felt that Arlington attorneys seek a stay of injunction pending a determination whether Bryan's order is open to appeal.

Edwin C. Brown, Northern Virginia legal adviser for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and an attorney for the seven Negro children denied admission to Arlington schools Sept. 5, said:

"I'm very happy over the decision. I think the Court gave very serious consideration to all the testimony and evidence produced in Court and, as a result, reached a fair decision."

Brown said he was happy that Bryan "actually spelled out the fact that they (the plaintiffs) were denied admission because they were Negroes."

Parents Protest 4-Mile Bus Trip For Students Living Near a School

Post Times Herald Washington D.C. p. 2-D
Tue. 9-13-57

(Reprint from Yesterday's late Edition)

Alexandria's School Board faces the task of convincing irate parents of 147 school children that a daily 4-mile bus trip for the youngsters is unavoidable.

The parents pointed out, at a heated Board meeting last night, that the children live within walking distance of the Patrick Henry School. Yet they have been assigned to the newly reopened Prince Street School 4 miles away.

The Board agreed to answer 20 questions to be formulated by two attorneys for the parents. The lawyers, Seymour J. Spelman and Alfred Z. Bernstein, said that if the answers are not satisfactory, the parents may take the issue to court.

The Board's defense, according to Chairman Robert C. Howard, lies in the arithmetic of overcrowding in Alexandira's school system, and in the arithmetic of budgeting its building funds.

Howard said that the Board would have had to spend $30,000 to build another school in the Patrick Henry School's vicinity. But instead, it was able to "rehabilitate" the Prince Street School for $10,000.

The parents have not been convinced so far. They were notified of the transfers of their children in July, and shortly afterward hired counsel.

Last month, Spelman and Bernstein asked the Board a series of 27 questions in an effort to find out precisely why the 4 miles of commuting were necessary. The answers they received were "unconvincing," they said, and what they wanted was "raw data."

The Board promised last night to try to do better on a second list of questions which the lawyers will prepare.

The parents also feel that the faculty at the Prince Street School, where their children were transferred, is not as good as that at the school they formerly attended, and that the building is not in as good condition.

The Board also took action last night on three other matters:

It named the Alexandria Dairy Products Co. to supply the schools with milk for the coming year; appointed 30 teachers to various positions in the school system, and renamed the Lincolnia Hills-Dowden Terrace School the William Ramsey School.

Correction

Parents of 147 Alexandria children who are protesting the children's transfer from Patrick Henry School to Prince Street School said yesterday they had no criticism of the faculty or physical facilities at the Prince Street institution.

A story in Wednesday editions of The Washington Post incorrectly said the protesting parents were critical of the Prince Street School faculty and facilities. The parents are concerned only because their children must commute four miles to the Prince Street School. The Post regrets the error.

VIRGINIA PRESSES INTEGRATION STAY

Court Orders Final Pleas on Arlington Case—Plan of Resistance at Stake

New York Times 9-12-57

By ANTHONY LEWIS

Special to The New York Times.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 11—The State Attorney General urged the Federal District Court today to hold off any order for immediate school integration.

J. Lindsay Almond Jr., the Attorney General, appeared in opposition to a motion by a group of Negro parents to put into effect at once a long-standing court order to end segregation in Arlington County. Arlington is across the Potomac from Washington, D. C.

Mr. Almond is the Democratic candidate for Governor.

Judge Albert V. Bryyan denied a series of delaying motions by Mr. Almond. He ordered final argument on the move for early integration to be held tomorrow morning. How soon afterward he would rule was uncertain.

At issue is the program of "massive resistance" to integration pledged by the dominant Byrd Democratic organization in Virginia. The organization is named for United States Senator Harry F. Byrd.

No public schools in Virginia has ended segregation since the 1954 Supreme Court decision. The Byrd organization wants to keep that record intact until after next month's election.

Mr. Almond, supported by the organization, is a heavy favorite to defeat Ted Dalton, Republican. Mr. Dalton has been campaigning on the charge that "massive resistance" to integration will eventually bring "massive defeat." Any desegration before Election Day could win him votes.

On July 27, Judge Bryan ruled that Negro children involved in a pending suit must be admitted to white schools this term. However, he delayed a decision on the effect of the so-called Virginia Pupil Placement Act of 1956.

The statute was one of several passed at a special legislative session to prevent integration. It transferred all powers to assign pupils to schools from local authorities to a central state board. Students desiring transfers must apply to the board.

Policy Made Clear

Other statutes passed at the same time made plain the state's policy that the pupil assignment board should never assign a Negro child to a white school. One law provides that if any school is integrated, the entire country shall lose state school funds.

On July 13 the Federal Court of Appeals affirmed a lower court ruling that the Pupil Assignment Act was unconstitutional. It said the act provided "no adequate remedy" for Negroes seeking to enter white schools.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People called as witnesses today several Negro parents whose children had been refused admission to white schools last week.

All but one of the parents had declined to go through the procedure of asking the pupil placement board to reassign the children. They contended they had no obligation to follow a procedure that the Federal court had held unconstitutional.

Mr. Almond relied chiefly on the fact that the Supreme Court had not yet passed on the Pupil Placement Act. During the court's recess this summer, Virginia authorities filed a petition for a review of the Appeals Court decision.

The Supreme Court opens its fall term Oct. 7. Mr. Almond argued that until then, at least, integration should be withheld. He spoke of the Virginia anti-integration laws as having the purpose "to keep the peace."

Arlington Teacher Pay Found Low

Post Times Herald Washington D.C. p. 19-A
Sun. 9-15-57

Arlington's pay to its public schol teachers put the county in the bottom one-third among 37 suburban and metropolitan school systems in the Nation as of last spring, Assistant Supt. Charles J. Walsh told the County School Board yesterday.

"It came as a shock to me that a study made early this year showed Arlington placed 26th in minimum pay to teachers with a bachelor's degree and 23d in base salary to a master's degree holder," Walsh said. The study was made by the school system of Royal Oak, Mich.

Since the study, Arlington's basic minimum salary for teachers has been raised from $3700 to $3800.

"Our salaries have gone up but not so much as in many other school systems," Walsh said. The survey, which included schools in Los Angeles, New York City, Chicago, the District and its surrounding areas, showed Arlington's base pay was $164 below the average for the other teachers.

"It may seem strange to be comparing Arlington with big cities, but our teachers can get jobs anywhere after successful experience here. We are competing for teachers with every community in the Nation," Walsh said.

In other business the School Board announced its intention to help some 200 "trainable" retarded children in the county.

By a 4 to 1 vote it passed a resolution urging the County Board to "undertake steps" to add a $250,000 building to the Arlington County Health Center. The purpose of the program would be to help children with IQs below 55 become self-supporting or learn to care for themselves.

Helen S. Lane, who voted against the resolution, said "I am not opposed to the program, but I am opposed to the County government assuming total responsibility for the plan."

Barnard Joy, Board vice-chairman, said the cost would probably be paid partly by state funds and 55 per cent by the Federal government under the Hill-Burton Act.

Virginia Supreme Court Denies School Test Case

Tue. 12-6-57

RICHMOND, Va. — (NS) — The Virginia Supreme court has denied a white woman a petition to test the constitutionality of the State's anti-integration pupil placement act.

Calling the issue "quite narrow" and adding "it involves no broad constitutional question of racial discrimination," the State Supreme court Friday denied a writ of mandamus to Mrs. Theo Defebio.

Mrs. Defebio's two sons were expelled from Fairfax county public school when she refused to sign forms which she said in effect would endorse the state's segregation policies.

Although the State Supreme court did not rule on the constitutionality of the act, it has been previously nullified by the Federal courts as a barrier to racial desegregation.

The pupil placement act is one of Virginia's "massive resistance" school laws passed earlier this year by a special session of the general assembly to preserve segregation. The law provides for the placing of all new and transfer students by a special state board, supposedly on a basis of standards other than race and color. If a Negro however, tries to move to a white school, or a white to a Negro school, the board can refuse the transfer without mentioning segregation.

Tue. 12-3-57

Mrs. Theo Defebio refused to sign the forms necessary for all new and transfer pupils by saying her act would have the effect of endorsing the state's anti-integration school policies. As a result, her two sons, Theodore, 14, and Dominick, 9, were dropped from school.

She subsequently turned down the state's offer to sign the forms under protest.

In denying Mrs. Defebio a writ of mandamus the court did not pass upon the constitutionality of the statute on the apparent grounds that no racial issue was involved.

The act has been nullified as a barrier to racial desegregation in the schools in an opinion by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. The U.S. Supreme Court declined to review the circuit court finding.

In today's ruling the court said the issue in the Defebio case involved no broad constitutional question of racial discrimination nor did Mrs. Defebio show her constitutional rights had been violated.

Virginia's Placement Board Is Illegal

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

Richmond Times-Dispatch

UNITED STATES District Judge Walter Hoffman becomes the second federal judge in Virginia to hint strongly in the past six months that the pupil assignment method of meeting the Supreme Court's integration decision of 1954 is a method which he deems to be constitutional. He stipulates that it must not involve "discrimination solely by reason of race."

Judge Albert V. Bryan said something substantially similar in his July 31 decision in the Arlington case.

The assignment plan, which provides for allocation of pupils by local school boards on almost any ground, except race, was a part of the original Gray commission recommendations, which subsequently were discarded by Gov. Stanley and his advisers. Certain members of the commission conceded that the plan contemplated that a few colored children would have to be assigned to white schools for the plan to be legal. This appears to be the thought of federal Judges Hofman and Bryan. The former said in his opinion yesterday in the Newport News and Norfolk cases:

A local school board may . . . pass on individual application for school changes, and as long as discrimination solely by reason of race does not appear, there is no inherent right of any child to attend any particular school in which children of another race are in attendance.

"But as long as the school boards maintain an announced policy of refusing to consider the applications separately and take no steps toward removing the requirements of segregation in the schools, which the Supreme Court has held violative of the constitutional rights, there appears to be nothing any court may do other than to enjoin the violation of constitutional rights in the operation of schools by the authorities and, in the event of continued violation, proceed by way of contempt."

JUDGE BRYAN said on this same point in a memorandum issued by him in connection with his decision last summer in the Arlington case:

"It must be remembered that decisions of the Supreme Court . . . do not compel the mixing of different races in the public schools. No general reshuffling of the pupils in any school system has been commanded. The order of that court is simply that no child shall be denied admission to a school on the basis of race or color.

"Indeed, just so a child is not through any form of compulsion or pressure required to stay in a certain school, or denied transfer to another school, because of race or color, the school heads may allow the pupil, whether white or Negro, to go to the same school as he would have attended in the absence of the ruling of the Supreme Court. Consequently, compliance with that ruling may well not necessitate such extensive changes in the school system as some articipate."

SINCE the assignment approach, which now is apparently endorsed by Judges Bryan and Hoffman, was not approved by the General Assembly last year, that body set up a series of legislative road blocks which included the three-man Pupil Placement Board. The board was held yesterday by Judge Hoffman to be unconstitutional, but the other elements of the General Assembly's plan were not in issue before Judge Hoffman. Consequently he did not pass upon them.

These include the closing of schools where integration takes place, at least, until the governor has a chance to intervene and achieve a reorganization. There is also the automatic cutoff statute, which withholds state funds from any integrated school.

These plans remain to be tested in the federal courts. Not only so, but an appeal will be taken from Judge Hoffman's adverse ruling on the Pupil Placement Board, if the NAACP wins the Newport News and Norfolk cases next month in Judge Hoffman's court. So it will be perhaps a year or two before these cases finally reach the Supreme Court.

Meanwhile the manner in which both Judges Hoffman and Bryan have seemed to approve a racially unbiased assignment plan is worth bearing in mind, as we seek a way out of the extremely difficult and complex situation brought about by the Supreme Court's psychological and sociological ruling of 1954.

Pupil Placement Law Ruled Unconstitutional In Virginia

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Sat. Jan. 13-57

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 11 (AP) — Virginia's pupil placement law, designed to maintain the state's traditional system of racially segregated schools, is "unconstitutional on its face," U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman ruled today.

The placement plan, enacted by the State Legislature last year as part of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's "no integration anywhere" program for public schools, provides that pupils shall be assigned to schools by a three-member board. The board's rulings may be appealed to the governor and to the state courts. State funds would be withheld from any integrated schools.

In a 12,000-word opinion, Hoffman reviewed the course taken by Virginia to keep the races in separate schools, and said: "The pattern is plain. The legislature has adopted procedures to defeat" the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the schools.

Hoffman's opinion was contained in a ruling that denied state motions to dismiss desegregation suits against the city school boards of Norfolk and Newport News. At a hearing on these motions in November, state and local authorities had argued the pupil placement plan provided administrative remedies which should be exhausted before Negro plaintiffs turn to the federal courts.

Pupil Placement Unit To Instruct Secretary

RICHMOND, Jan. 29 (AP). — The three-member Virginia Pupil Placement Board meets with its new executive secretary here at 9 a.m. Thursday to spell out his duties.

The announcement came as the official, Joseph W. Bland of Alberta, reported for his first day's work yesterday.

Mr. Bland, 44, a former member of the House of Delegates, was named over the week end to the $900 per month job.

Placement Board Sets 15-Day Limit

Post + Times Herald

Washington D.C.

RICHMOND, March 11 (AP) — Virginia's Pupil Placement Board today set a 15-day deadline for parents or guardians of children subject to assignment to comply with its application form requirement.

The Board said no child would be permitted to attend school beyond that period without an application for assignment from the person or persons responsible for him.

If a parent or guardian refuses to file an application form, the Board said, the child or children concerned will not be allowed to continue school until compliance has been effected.

The deadline would apply to those children who have started school in Virginia, transferred, or who have been graduated from elementary to secondary schools since Dec. 29, 1956.

(AN EDITORIAL)

THERE ARE ALWAYS differences of opinion where legal questions are involved. These do not always prove the exception to the rule as has been demonstrated throughout the South on the question of the Supreme Court decision in the school cases.

There is one important question which members of the minority group should carefully ponder in the present crisis. We have been confronted with an almost universal defiance of the decision of the Supreme Court by the persons who favor segregation of the races in schools as well as in other fundamental areas of life.

We have felt that it was strange that these people, or at least most of them, would not accept the law as laid down by the high court. At the same time we feel that our hope is in a final determination on the part of the people to submit to the law of the land as interpreted by the courts. There seems to be no other workable idea under our form of government.

The Virginia Pupil Placement Plan calls for the establishment of a board which took over from the local school boards the responsibility for placing pupils in schools determined by the board. Placement forms were given to all parents requiring them under the law. In three places in Virginia: Fairfax, Richmond and Norfolk, some parents have declined to sign these forms.

Attorneys for the plaintiffs in the Norfolk and Newport News cases raised the question of the constitutionality of the placement plan after attorneys for the school boards in the cities asked the court to dismiss the cases of the complainants on the grounds that the State now has an adequate legal remedy in the placement plan.

The court ruled that the placement plan was unconstitutional on its face and the cities appealed this ruling. The appeal will be heard by a three-judge federal court sitting in Asheville, N. C., on June 11.

Until the placement law is ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States, to which court it will certainly be carried by either the plaintiffs or the defendants in the Norfolk-Newport News cases, the state's placement plan is the law. It will be the law until the present appeal affecting its constitutionality is passed upon adversely by the Supreme Court.

It appears that since the strongest moral basis for our own contentions is that the law is the law until it is reversed or overruled, the thing for the parents to do in the present situation is to comply with the law and sign the placement forms.

Should they not do so, for such time as may elapse before the Supreme Court settles the issue these parents have no recourse except the long and tedious trail to the State Supreme Court, via appeal to the Placement Board, from which they go to the State Circuit Courts; and from there to the State Supreme Court. Meanwhile their children are out of school by the state's form of legal expulsion, plus the final authority resting in the Governor's hands to close the schools to all children.

If the placement plan is ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court when the case reaches it—if that is its final decision—then the signing of the placement plan by parents will have amounted to no more than their willingness to comply with the law until that law is sustained or overruled by the court of final jurisdiction.

Virginia School Unit Defies Stand of Federal Judge

Special to The New York Times.

Times 1-15-57

The law setting up the three-man board, a means of preserving segregated schools, was called "unconstitutional on its face" by Federal Judge Walter Hoffman in Norfolk Friday.

An appeal of such a ruling is expected when it is made formally after a hearing next month.

The board at a meeting today continued preparing to handle reassignment of pupils in mid-term changes.

Decades Of Litigation OK

REACTIONS in political quarters to JUDGE HOFFMAN'S decision declaring Virginia's Pupil Placement Plan unconstitutional indicated the state would appeal the ruling to the 4th Circuit Court.

There is little doubt among good lawyers, however, that JUDGE HOFFMAN'S ruling will be sustained, even if the matter goes up to the Supreme Court.

Under the BYRD-STANLEY plan of "massive resistance" the State is determined to appeal every adverse decision in school segregation made by a Federal District Court, or sustained by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

MR. BYRD and GOVERNOR STANLEY are apparently following this course as a phase of non-compliance.

Another reason may stem from the large number of laws which are like stepping stones to a basement, most of which may have to be tested in the Federal Courts, unless some court rules out the hamper basket-full of segregation acts passed by the last special session of the General Assembly, at one stroke. This may happen.

The contention of the complainants that the school Placement Act was unconstitutional, and that JUDGE HOFFMAN could decide that question having been settled, the Norfolk and Newport News cases brought to obtain compliance with the United States Supreme Court's May 31, 1955 decree will now be tried in JUDGE HOFFMAN'S court.

ATTORNEY GENERAL ALMOND has already announced that if this decision is against the local school boards, it will be appealed.

This is additional evidence that the state intends to stall and unnecessarily consume the time of the courts in appeals, which it knows in advance will be denied.

SENATOR BYRD and GOVERNOR STANLEY are probably hoping that their laws making it unlawful to test the constitutionality of their acts may add to the delays and almost indefinitely delay the day of compliance. At least, they too will have to be put to a constitutional test.

MR. BYRD and the Governor, and their successors, may be assured that their circumventions will be contested as long as there are any courts in which to contest them, and that will be a long time.

142,000 Start School in Washington D.C. Area Today

Post + Times Herald
Wash. 9-5-57

Arlington County will be a major testing ground in Virginia's desegregation battle as an estimated 142,000 Washington area youngsters return to classes today.

Schools open in Arlington, Montgomery and Prince Georges Counties. In the District and Alexandria the back-to-school trek doesn't start until Monday.

Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan last July ordered Arlington to drop segregation barriers in its public schools. But Virginia invoked its 1956 Pupil Assignment Act to bar Negro pupils in Arlington from entering white schools nearer their homes.

Two to Contest Ban

Two Negro pupils who were denied admission to white schools by the State assignment board will contest the action when schools open today.

They are George Tyrone Nelson, 14-year-old son of Metropolitan Police Pvt. George M. Nelson Jr., 2005 N. Cameron st., and Gary Boswell, 13, son of Mr. and Mrs. Stanley L. Boswell, 2401 S. Seminary rd.

Both youngsters were assigned to Hoffman-Boston Junior-Senior High School, together with four other Arlington Negro pupils who were denied admission to white schools.

A group of more than 20 Negro and white parents who did not file assignment forms also are expected to initiate a new court test of the Pupil Assignment Act if their children are denied admission to school.

To Seek Injunction

Edwin C. Brown, legal adviser for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Northern Virginia, said the parents would ask Judge Bryan to carry out his injunction order.

Montgomery County expects an enrollment boost of 5200, biggest increase in the area, bringing its total school population to 62,500.

In Prince Georges enrollment will mount to 57,000, an increase of 3500. Arlington County's school population will go up by 800 to a new high of 23,000.

The District expects 110,865 students on Monday, a jump of 2400. Alexandria will enroll 13,500 pupils, 600 more than last year. Fairfax County and Falls Church schools opened on Tuesday.

Catholic schools of the Washington Archdiocese also open their doors today to a record 48,000 pupils. The Most Reverend Patrick A. O'Boyle, Archbishop of Washington, marked the start of the new term with a mass yesterday in St. Matthew's Cathedral.

Arlington Board Members Declared Hostile to System

P A 19

Edmund D. Campbell, campaign chairman for Arlingtonians for a Better County, charged yesterday that the appointment to the Arlington School Board of Robert A. Peck was a "grave threat to the Arlington school system."

Star 8-25-57

Campbell accused Peck of long-standing hostility to Arlington's school system. Peck was named to the School Board last week by a 3-2 vote of the County Board.

Campbell charged that Peck "constantly undermined the continued improvement of our schools" when he was on the County Board. Peck was not immediately available for comment.

Washington Post

"His idea of fundemental education' was fundamentally penny - pinching," Campbell said. "He advocated that school costs be cut by employing inexperienced teachers because they could be paid less.

Fewer Classrooms

"At a time when Arlinton's distinguished school board was trying to reduce to normal the size of classes, he demanded that more children be crowded into fewer classrooms."

Campbell said Peck was one of a group of three who told the Governor of Virginia in 1954 that Arlington's schools "were rotten from the ground up."

Peck testified in favor of the Moncure bill in 1956, which took away Arlington's elected school board, Campbell said.

"It is a bitter pill to Arlington voters to have Robert Peck, who helped to deprive them of their rights to choose their school board members, now appointed to the very position he never had the courage to seek at the polls," Campbell said.

AIM Has Majority

The AIM faction now has a 3-2 majority on the County Board, and control of the 1958 Board, which takes office Jan. 1, depends on the November election. Since the Board also appoints School Board members, the election will affect the makeup of the School Botard.

The School Board now consists of three members who beat AIM candidates in elections and Peek and Helen Lane, who were appointed by the AIM majority on the County Board.

The interim appointment of Peek and School Board member E. R. Draheim will end Dec. 31. An appeal is pending befoe the State Supreme Court of Appeals to determine whether the present County Board or the 1958 Board will fill the vacancies. The Arlington Circuit Court has ruled the present County Board has this power.

Ministers Appeal on Integration

Arlington Asked To Accept Court Decision Quietly

The Arlington Ministerial Association has made a county-wide appeal for "calmness, dignity and good will" in meeting a possible court order to integrate public schools.

Post and Times Herald

Passed unanimously by the Association at a meeting last Tuesday, the resolution was read from Protestant pulpits on Sunday.

P. B 1

It was the first official statement by the Association on the integration question and the first appeal from a County group to accept integration quietly.

Washington Post

The statement was approved the night before a stay was granted in a desegregation order which would have permitted seven Negro children to enter white schools yesterday. Judge Albert V. Bryan's desegregation order is now held up pending an appeal by school authorities to the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

Post 9-24-57

The Rev. Louis C. Shearer of Christ Methodist Church, pressident of the association, said it was decided to release the statement despite the stay because "our presumption is it will be applicable in the months ahead."

Some 20 ministers were present at the meeting and about 30 more agreed to the statement when reached later by telephone, Shearer said.

No direct stand was taken on integration, but the statement asked people to comply with the law in a dignified manner.

The statement pointed out that the United States "is preserved upon the principle of justice and the process of law." It also placed faith in the "wisdom" of individuals charged with "interpreting and enforcing the law as applied to Arlington."

Complete Statement

Here is the complete statement:

"The Arlington Ministerial Associaton, recognizing the implications of impending legal decisions regarding the integration of out county schools, affirms to the people of Arlington the conviction of their religious leaders in the following statement:

"1. We recognize that this Nation was founded and is preserved upon the principles of justice and due process of law.

"2. We believe and trust that the authorities and individuals assigned to the tasks of interpreting and enforcing the law as applied to Arlington County will perform their task with wisdom and considerateness.

"3. We believe and trust that the citizens of Arlington County will reflect the principles of their faith by responding with calmness, dignity and good will."

Sign Placements, Arlington Warns

Post and Times Herald

Arlington school officials warned yesterday that new pupils will not be admitted to classes on the opening day of school unless their parents sign placement forms by Friday.

P. C 2

Principals of all schools will be at their respective schools today and Friday to assist parents in filling out the required forms, School Superintendent T. Edward Rutter said.

Star 8-22-57

He said there will be at least a week's delay in entering school if the forms are not signed by Friday, and two weeks if not signed by the opening day of school, Sept. 5.

Arlington Marks 10-Year Fight on Integration

Evening Star Mon 8-19-57

Washington Post 9-B

BY MARY LOU WERNER

The attempt of five Negro students to enter white Arlington schools marks the county's 10th anniversary as one of segregation's favorite battlegrounds.

Ever since Constance Carter filed suit in 1947 to win equal high school facilities for Negro students, the county has been tied up in legal skirmishes over separation of the races.

One colored boy was taught alone in a white school building for a semester because facilities for the course he wanted were not available at the Negro school.

Located almost anywhere else in the United States, a county like Arlington with a small percentage of Negro residents would not ordinarily know racial strife. At last count, the county had 20,569 white and 1,397 Negro students.

But Arlington is poised on the banks of the Potomac River—segregation's last frontier. On one side of the county is the rest of Virginia, leader of southern "massive resistance." And on the other side is integrated Washington, seat of the civil-rights-conscious Federal Government.

The suit brought by Constance Carter charged that the Arlington School Board was offering white high-school students better educational opportunities than it offered Negro high-school students.

Three Years Before Courts

It took the Constance Carter case nearly three years to get through the Federal Courts. Judge Albert V. Bryan held that the Negro and white high school facilities were substantially equal, but his ruling was reversed by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

By this time, Constance Carter had married and other Negro students had been allowed to join the case.

With the appellate court ruling to be met, Arlington had to offer Negro students the same courses it offered white students.

A 17-year-old colored boy put the ruling to a test the following September by applying for an automobile mechanics course which was offered at Washington-Lee, but not available at Hoffman-Boston where he was enrolled. Hoffman-Boston at that time didn't even have a shop in which to teach the subject.

Given Special Class

The school board decided to teach the boy, Richard C. Green, in a special class at the Washington-Lee shop while no white students were using it. For one semester, he was carried from Hoffman-Boston across the county to Washington-Lee for the shop class each day.

Richard, now 24, is employed as an automobile mechanic and lives at 3506 South Eighteenth street, Arlington. He said it wasn't too pleasant attending classes all by himself, and he hoped the Negro students now seeking admission to Washington-Lee have better luck breaking down racial barriers.

"If they are successful, I'd like to think my effort helped a bit," he said.

In 1952, the county built an addition at Hoffman-Boston, remodeled the old building and confidently thought the appellate court's equal facilities mandate had been obeyed.

Co-Mingling Assailed

The segregation question exploded again in 1953, when the late John Locke Green charged the school board with malfeasance for permitting the co-mingling of white and colored students in violation of Virginia law.

Mr. Green, a former Republican county treasurer and self-appointed watchdog of county government operations, asked for removal of the entire school board. A grand jury called to consider the charges cited four instances of "racial co-mingling" at such things as a music festival, a teachers' meeting, and the like.

A friend of the school board, Lindell F. Shrum, promptly filed suit asking removal of all County Board members for permitting co-mingling of white and colored persons at public meetings. Mr. Shrum said, "I'm just sick that the school board is being made a goat for something that is common practice."

Both the county board and school board were cleared of the charges by Arlington Circuit Court Judge Walter T. McCarthy.

New Set of Suits

The Supreme Court decision on May 17, 1954 outlawing racial segregation in public schools set off a new string of lawsuits, and made the county more race conscious than ever before.

The school board appointed a 30-member committee of citizens and school personnel to "study the problem of integration." In Richmond, Gov. Stanley appointed a commission of legislators to recommend what the State should do as a result of the Supreme Court decree.

The Governor's commission recommended what became known as the Gray plan. This plan would have left student assignment authority in the hands of local school boards, and provided tuition grants for the private education of any students who objected to attending integrated schools.

Arlington Leads Way

But before the Gray plan was carried out with appropriate legislation Arlington County upset State leaders by announcing a tentative desegregation program which the school board thought was in line with the Gray plan.

The Arlington plan, which was indorsed by the county's special committee on integration, would have admitted some 60 Negro students to white elementary schools last September, admitted Negro junior high students to white junior high schools this coming September, and admitted Negro high-school students to white high schools in 1958.

Startled by the prospect of any integration in Virginia schools—no matter how small—the General Assembly scrapped the Gray plan in favor of Gov. Stanley's no-integration laws. The laws finally adopted took assignment authority away from the local school board and put it in the hands of a State placement board.

A group of Negro and white parents meanwhile went to court to ask for enforcement of the Supreme Court desegregation decision.

New Court Action Looms

On July 31, 1956, Judge Bryan granted the complaining parents an injunction forbidding the Arlington County School Board from denying students admission to schools on account of race.

Enforcement of the injunction was held up until the ruling was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and by the Supreme Court. The injunction will be in force when schools open September 5.

The five Negro students who have applied to enroll in white county schools are the first to test the injunction.

The school board is sending their applications to the State Placement Board. If the applications are denied—and it is presumed they will be in light of other Virginia laws to prevent integration—Arlington County will be right back in court again.

"Long, Hard Pull"

HEADLINE PERSONALITY

Brown's Chief Aim: Full Rights for Negro

Edwin Cicero Brown, who has had a big hand in Arlington's desegregation case, has one big aim in life—"to do all I can to attain full citizenship for the Negro race."

"Segregation makes second-class citizens of Negroes," said the stocky built, gray-haired lawyer. "When the progress of Negroes is impeded, the progress of the Nation is impeded. Certainly segregation impedes the progress of the Negro.

"We want to be treated like everyone else. We want all the educational opportunities given the white people. There is no such thing as separate but equal.

"Moreover, the Negroes have to live here with the white man, so why shouldn't he go to school to learn to live with him?"

Star B2

Leaning back in his leather chair in his office in the Negro section of Alexandria, Mr. Brown said the Negroes "aren't seeking to associate with white people on a social basis. We're not concerned with that. That's a myth that a minority of people, mostly Southerners, use to back up their opposition to integration."

Washington Post

Native of Oklahoma

Mr. Brown, legal representative for the Northern Virginia region of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was born on an Indian reservation near Guthrie, Okla. His father was a farm worker and his mother a school teacher. A brother is a minister in Kansas City and another brother is a Government worker in Washington.

Most of his elementary and high school education was obtained in Kansas.

"I went to an integrated high school in Witchita," he said.

Fri. 9-20-57

"It wasn't called an integrated school, it was just a school.

"There were about 75 Negroes among 3,000 students. I played in the band, and on the football team, track team and wrestling team.

"They didn't call out the soldiers when we went to school. Why, I can recall that often when I wasn't in the lineup at the football game, the students would yell, 'We want Brown.'"

Mr. Brown said that a desegregation suit filed in Topeka, Kans., about 180 miles away from his integrated school, was one of those which resulted in the May, 1954, decision of the Supreme Court which ruled segregation unconstitutional.

Took Interest in Law

After high school graduation, Mr. Brown worked for three years at odd jobs to save money to go to college. He said he got interested in law in high school when he used to stop by evening police court for about two hours nearly every day on the way home from school.

He used part of his savings to buy a model T Ford to come to Washington to go to Howard University. Now he drives a Cadillac.

Mr. Brown said he ran an elevator seven nights a week at the YWCA for $50 a month to help pay his way through two years of undergraduate work and three years of law school.

He received his law degree in 1938 and worked for a while with the National Labor Relations Board. In 1942 he started practicing law in Alexandria at 1200 Cameron street, where he still has his office.

In 1947 he was appointed to the NAACP legal staff.

"It has been a long, hard pull," he commented.

He has another big problem facing him which he declines to comment on. He has been indicted in Baltimore on an income tax evasion charge.

Mr. Brown, who lives at 1029 Girard street N.E., has three children. A son, 21, is attending Howard University. A daughter and another son are students in the Washington public schools.

Clergy Sees County Integration Okay

Pastors Read Resolution In Arlington

14d(1) Va

Arlington churchgoers heard ministers predict yesterday that the county would accept school integration with good grace.

A resolution to this effect, adopted by the ministerial association last week, was read from pulpits at the services.

The statement declared that the association recognizes the "implications of impending legal decisions regarding the integration of our county schools."

Emphasizing that the Nation was "founded and is preserved upon the principles of justice and the due process of law," the ministers went on to declare that:

Post. 9-23-57

"Calmness and Dignity"

"We believe and trust that the citizens of Arlington County will reflect the principles of their faith by responding with calmness, dignity and good will."

The resolution was passed by the association on Tuesday—the day before Alexandria Federal Court Judge Albert V. Bryan granted his stay on the desegregation order.

Meanwhile, 14 parents who were plaintiffs in the Arlington desegregation suit, sent an open letter to the Thomson Racial Investigations Committee protesting against tactics used by investigators.

14 (1) Va

Protests Guarded Room

Specifically, the letter protested against the use of hidden wire-recording devices and the fact that witnesses were herded into a guarded room while waiting to testify.

The leter said:

"We, the undersigned plaintiffs in the Arlington school suit consider preposterous Chairman Thomson's statement that we did not control our suit. We entered the suit of our own volition by written requests authorizing Attorney Edwin C. Brown to take legal steps, including litigation if necessary, to secure for our children nondiscriminatory and unsegregated public school education.

"Plaintiffs of both races were present at the court hearings, often at the cost of taking leave without pay. Attorneys Brown, Hills and Robinson have conducted the suit according to our wishes at all times, securing favorable decisions in five court actions.

Assail Recording Devices

"We protest the use by Thomson Committee investigators of hidden recording devices when they called at our homes to question us. None of us was informed by the investigators, nor realized at the time that recordings were being made. We further protest the locking up of witnesses and the refusal of permission to some of us to telephone our neighbors that we could not be home when our children returned from school.

"Finaly, we protest the efforts of the Thomson Committee to intimidate us and the heckling and bullying, particularly of Negro witnesses by questions such as 'Have you no pride of race?' 'Why should attendance at segregated schools make your children feel inferior?' These questions after all were answered in the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954. It should be quite obvious to everyone, that we plaintiffs are merely seeking our constitutional rights through orderly court procedures and that there is nothing that the Thomson Committee has uncovered or can uncover to refute this."

Lawyers Offer To Meet Probe Group

Norfolk, Va. P. 1

NORFOLK, VA.

The two attorneys for parents suing the Norfolk School Board to end segregation in public schools in compliance with rulings of the United States Supreme Court, have offered to answer questions put to them by a legislative investigation committee here last week.

14d(1)

When they were abruptly summoned before the committee and asked to testify about their dealing with their clients, Victor J. Ashe and J. Hugo Madison, Norfolk lawyer, declined until they could themselves be represented by counsel.

THEY WERE then cited for contempt for failing to answer, and taken before Judge Clyde H. Jacobs in Norfolk's Circuit Court. Told by the jurist they would have to answer or be punished for contempt, they invoked their rights guaranteed by the fifth amendment to the Constitution.

Mr. Ashe and Mr. Madison were present at the scheduled hearing by the Thomson Committee, created earlier this year by the special session of the Legislature to investigate primarily activities of the NAACP, as counsel for 11 of the parents who had received subpoenas to appear as witnesses.

IT WAS WHILE there in the capacity of lawyers that they were unexpectedly required to take the stand as witnesses. They declined to answer a series of questions propounded to them by committee members.

In their telegram sent on Monday afternoon to James M. Thomson, chairman of the Committee on Law Reform and Racial Activities, Messrs. Ashe and Madison said:

"ON LAST Thursday when we were summarily summoned before your committee and denied the right to obtain legal counsel, we felt compelled to invoke the protection of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States, in order to safeguard our rights against the questions propounded to us.

"We have maturely considered the entire matter and are now willing to waive our privilege and appear before the committee upon some mutually agreed date, and answer any pertinent questions relating to any litigation in which we have participated involving the segregation laws of the Commonwealth of Virginia, provided we are granted the right to be represented by counsel."

Race-Mixing Claim Arises

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 25 (AP) — The politically explosive Republican claim that there has been race-mixing in Page County schools brought a crisp "no comment" from Virginia's Gov. Stanley today.

Richmond News Leader

At the same time, the state Department of Education denied any knowledge that Negroes have gone to school with white students in the Shenandoah Valley county, where there are only about 125 Negroe children of school age.

Randolph Dovel of Luray, 7th district GOP chairman, told the Republican state central committee in Lynchburg yesterday there has been some mixing of races in the Page public schools during the last 20 years. P. 3

Defiantly, Dovel said Gov. Stanley "can cut off Page County funds if he wants to." Under a law passed by a special General Assembly session last year, the governor can deny state money to any locality in which public schools are integrated.

Dr. Davis Y. Paschall, state superintendent of public instruction, said the claim that Negroes have attended school with whites in Page County was news to him.

"I am not aware of any such condition. It certainly has not come to the attention of the Department of Education," said Paschall.

Richmond

In Luray, S. P. Dovel, oldest member of the Page County school board and no relation to Randolph Dovel, said "there is no integration that I know of in the county. . .. there are no Negroes attending white schools."

Randolph Dovel, however, said today that litterally "hundreds of people will back up what I say."

His statement came in the middle of a heated debate between state Sen. Ted Dalton, the Republican candidate for governor, and Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., the Democratic candidate, on the best way to prevent integration in Virginia's public schools.

Dalton advocates a plan of pupil assignment which he admits would result in some race-mixing but which he contends would keep integration at a minimum. Almond champions the state Democratic administration's plan of "massive resistance" which has the fund-cutoff plan as its principal feature.

Sands Running Out

Lest it be thought that all the school desegregation difficulty is in Little Rock, one only need look at the situation in Arlington. Happily there has been no resort to the National Guard, and there was no threat or violence when eight Negro students were turned away from all-white schools yesterday. But the defiance of the law of the United States in Virginia is just as real as that so foolishly undertaken by Governor Faubus in Arkansas.

Fortunately, the subterfuge by which desegregation has been prevented appears to be entering its last stages. The students who have been denied their rights may go back to Federal Judge Albert Bryan in Alexandria and protest that the "administrative remedies" provided by the Virginia pupil placement plan are not adequate. Judge Bryan may then, if he finds that the facts warrant such action, hold the Arlington School Board in contempt. In such circumstances the School Board could appeal—and one ground might be that the Supreme Court has not finally ruled on the pupil placement plan, although the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has held it invalid. But presumably the School Board would be obligated to comply with a Federal Court order pending any appeal. Presumably members could be fined or jailed for failure to comply.

No one can want members of the Arlington School Board to be placed in this predicament over a scheme for evasion that is none of their doing. The real culprit is the Stanley plan, which denies all local control by centralizing decisions in Richmond, and which has become an embarrassment even to its sponsors. Nothing could more graphically demonstrate the poverty of Virginia's approach to the problems of school desegregation than the crumbling of the Stanley plan, which leaves the state bereft of any system of orderly transition such as provided in the kind of pupil assignment plan upheld in North Carolina. One may hope, in any event, that members of the Arlington School Board will place their obligations to the United States first—and that the state leaders who got communities into this mess will recognize an obligation to help get them out.

AIM and the Schools

It is interesting and in some degree comforting to have the denials by leaders of the Arlington Independent Movement that they plan a sweeping investigation of the school system. The story published in this newspaper on Tuesday, indicating that the conservative group had in mind a reexamination of textbooks, curriculum and staff, was carefully based on interviews with four prominent AIM members and on past statements by others. AIM has now refuted any such intention.

"School matters are entirely up to the School Board," the AIM president, Fred A. Gosnell Jr., has asserted, "and not up to AIM or ABC (the liberal Arlingtonians for a Better County)." On its face this statement is unexceptionable.

The fact remains that AIM, by courtesy of the Moncure bill passed by the Virginia Assembly with AIM support, has succeeded in obtaining the appointment of two of its members to the five-member School Board—something AIM was never able to accomplish when the School Board was elected. A third AIM appointment depends on a court test of whether the present AIM-controlled County Board has power to name a new School Board member in advance of the vacancy on Dec. 31. If the County Board can do this it can assure AIM control of the School Board irrespective of whether AIM retains a majority on the County Board at the November election. Thus Mr. Gosnell's insistence that AIM's principal present objective is to elect J. Maynard Magruder to the County Board (his ABC opponent is Herbert Brown) does not necessarily prove that AIM has no direct objectives in the schools.

There is no need to impute bad faith to AIM. It is entirely possible that past statements by individual AIM members about the need to reform textbooks and curriculum, to eliminate "frills" in the schools and so on were in the category of campaign rhetoric. It is possible that AIM appointees, when confronted with actual school problems, would meet them as broadmindedly as they could.

No one could object to additional efforts to consult all segments of the community in the formulation of school policy, or to the sort of reevaluation that ought to be the job of any school board. Much would depend, however, on the actions and attitudes of the AIM appointees. If they performed moderately, they could expect to command respect; if they attempted wholesale and doctrinaire changes, they would invite a community revolt. Tinkering with the schools would assuredly make of them the political football which Mr. Gosnell so properly decries.

Bryan Order May Bring Stanley Plan Into Effect

Virginia's involved laws designed to maintain segregated schools will be called into play for the first time if Judge Albert V. Bryan's integration order is carried out next Monday.

The measures, enacted by the Virginia General Assembly in September, 1956, as the backbone of the State's "massive resistance" program, set up a series of actions to be followed in the event any school is integrated.

Ultimately, State funds would be withheld from school districts containing integrated schools.

First, the law requires that any school that is integrated must be closed immediately on a temporary basis.

Then the Virginia Governor will take over direct of that school and is directed to use the influence of his office to attempt to restore the status quo, presumably by persuading the Negroes to return to their own schools. He may reassign pupils.

Can Withdraw

If the Governor decides his attempts are useless, he can withdraw and return the operation of the school to the local Board. Or, the local Board can petition him to withdraw and he is required to follow its wishes.

If the Governor retains jurisdiction over the school, the law permits him to operatae it on a segregated basis under state jurisdiction. Of course, he would face the consequences with Federal courts.

If the local board retains control and the school remains integrated, then the fund withholding provisions come into effect. The law requires that all State funds be withheld from the affected school district for schools in the same class as the integrated school.

For example if the integrated school is an elementary school then all State elementary school funds for that district would be withheld.

Since Judge Bryan's order, if carried out, would integrate schools in the elementary, junior high and senior high classes in Arlington, this could mean that all State funds could be withheld from Arlington.

The School Board can either attempt to operate its school system without State funds, a procedure that presumably would be attempted in Arlington, or close its schools. Only about $1.4 million of Arlington's annual school budget of $10.8 million is provided by the State.

Tuition Grants

If the schools are closed as a result of the State's action, then the withheld funds will be used to provide tuition grants for pupils to attend private non-sectarian schools. Tuition grants also will be made to pupils who refuse to attend an integrated school, if there is no segregated school in their district they could attend.

Since Judge Bryan's order would integrate only four of the County's 36 all-white schools, provision could probably be made to transfer any child wishing it to a non-integrated school without the necessity of paying his way through a private school.

Virginia Called Schools Target

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. Aug. 27 (AP).—A Mississippi Congressman told an audience of more than 1,000 here last night that the "front line" in the battle against school integration is in Virginia.

"The integration forces are concentrating their fire on you because they think if they can break the will of the people of your State, the other States will capitulate as a matter of course," Representative Williams declared.

Representative Williams was the principal speaker at the rally in Lane High School Auditorium sponsored by the local chapter of the defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties.

"Direct Assault"

Other Southern States "know that direct assaults upon us are in the planning stage, but for the present the front line is in Virginia," Representative Williams said.

The Mississippi Congressman called proposed Federal civil rights legislation "a Frankenstein monster" and called on Southern Senators to "talk until hell freezes over if necessary to kill that vicious legislation."

"Evil Purpose"

Mr. Williams said the civil rights bill "was created with an evil purpose in mind—the political and social enslavement of 50 million American citizens; the dissolution of white and Negro civilizations, and the surrender of American freedom to a super police-state Gestapo."

Mr. Williams, who spoke for 90 minutes, prefaced his speech by saying he wouldn't tell Virginians how to manage their own affairs, including the school integration crisis.

He was introduced by Judge J. Segar Gravatt, who spoke at a similar rally that attracted about 1,200 in July of last year.

Admission On Sept. 23 Is Ordered

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. Sun. 9-15-57

Judge Bryan Says Schools Must Take in 7 Negroes

By Paul Sampson
Staff Reporter

Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered yesterday that seven Negro children be admitted to all-white schools in Arlington County on Monday, Sept. 23.

Bryan brushed aside Virginia's Pupil Placement Act as "too sluggish and prolix" to provide a remedy for Negro pupils seeking admission to white schools.

"Submission to the Act amounts almost to assent to a racially segregated school," Bryan said in his 9-page decision.

The judge's decision reaffirms his order of July 31, 1956, which enjoined the Arlington County School Board from denying pupils admission because of race. The original order was upheld by the Supreme Court. Since yesterday's action was based on the original order, methods of appealing the case were in doubt.

The order paves the way for other Negroes to apply to all-white schools for admission.

Text of Judge Bryan's ruling. Page A-2

Bryan also overruled the claim of the Arlington School Board and Superintendent that they should not be held to answer for denial of admittance of the Negroes who applied to white schools.

'Injunction Is Paramount'

The School Board had argued that the Pupil Placement Board had sole control of admissions. Bryan pointed out that the Pupil Placement Act and Placement Board are not acceptable as remedies to suspend his injunction. He said the School Board was responsible to know this and also to know that his original injunction is binding upon the Placement Board.

Bryan ruled that the Placement Board, as a successor to part of the School Board's duties, "is one of those specifically restrained by the injunction."

Bryan conceded that the school board and superintendent did not intend any defiance of the injunction, but warned them that they "must now understand that the injunction is paramount in the present circumstances and that they can no longer refuse admittance to the plaintiffs."

James G. Stockard, school board chairman, said that the board and superintendent would have no comment until after conferring with its attorneys. He said a conference would be arranged as soon as possible.

The order apparently makes possible a contempt citation against the school board if they continue to deny admittance to the Negro children.

In a Dilemma

Post + Times Herald

The order places the School Board in a dilemma because Virginia law requires that funds be cut off from any school attended by Negroes and whites.

9-15-57

The seven Negro children were turned away when they applied for admission to white schools nearest their homes on the opening day of the Arlington school term. Six of them refused to file pupil placement forms, and the seventh applied for admittance to a white school.

P. 3-A

Attorneys for the Negro children contended before Bryan last Wednesday and Thursday that denial of admission of the children violated Bryan's order of last July 27 requiring immediate desegregation of Arlington schools. This order reaffirmed the injunction of the preceding year.

Bryan said his original injunctive decree directed that complainants comply with existing and future state and local rules and administrative remedies for assignment of children to public schools before turning to the court.

He pointed out that his decree contemplated reasonable regulations and remedies.

Procedure "Too Sluggish"

"Defendant's position that the Pupil Placement Act is such a regulation or remedy is untenable. The procedure there described is too sluggish and prolix to constitute a reasonable remedial process," Bryan wrote.

Bryan took note of the fact that the Pupil Placement Act was declared unconstitutional by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. Hoffman was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. An appeal is pending before the Supreme Court.

Bryan said the situation before him was different than before the other court. He said the Act then was appraised as a remedy to be observed before the persons aggrieved could seek judicial relief. In Arlington the Act is measured against a decree already granted and a decree already approved by the final courts of appeal.

Bryan said he had hoped that the initial step provided in the Placement Act might "be isolated and utilized as a fair administrative remedy." He found, however, that the Court could not "fairly require the plaintiffs to submit their applications to the [Pupil Placement] Board for school assignment."

"The reason is," Bryan continued, "that the form prescribed therefor commits the applicant to accept a school which the Board deems most appropriate in accordance with the provisions of the Pupil Placement Act.. Submission to that Act amounts almost to to assent to a racially segregated school. But even if the form be signed 'under protest' the petitioner would not have unfettered and free tribunal to act on his request. The Board still deliberates, on a racial question, under threat of loss of State money to the applicant's school if children of different races are taught thhere."

Intention Immaterial

Bryan devoted a large portion of his findings to determining whether race or color was the basis for the denial of admission of the seven children to the all-white schools.

He said it was immaterial that the School Board may not have intended to deny admission on the basis of color, explaining that the result, not the intention, was the determining factor.

Bryan emphasized that the court was not "undertaking the task of assigning pupils to the schools." He added, however, that it is the obligation of the court to determine whether the rejection of any of the plaintiffs was solely for race or color.

Bryan said that nothing in the evidence indicated that any of the seven children is not qualified in his studies to enter the school which he sought to enter. Bryan wrote:

"A review of the evidence is convincing that the only ground, aside from the provisions of the Placement Act, for the rejection of the plaintiffs was that they were of the Negro race. The rejection was simply the adherence to the prior practice of segregation. No other hypothesis can be sustained in any of the seven instances."

Bryan then considered the case of each of the seven children in some detail to support his contention.

In conclusion, Bryan argued that the injunction will affect school attendance very slightly. In a white school population of 21,245, only seven Negro children will enter, he said.

"One Negro will be with 11,420 white children in the elementary grades; and no more than six Negroes among the 9824 white high school students. Of 36 previously 'all-white' schools in the County, four will be affected by the decree, and then not to a greater extent than two Negroes in any one of the four schools."

Integration has been delayed in Charlottesville, Newport News and Norfolk, pending a Supreme Court decision on the constitutionality of the Pupil Placement Act. The Act also has been chcallenged in the Virginia Supreme Court and a decision is pending in that court.

Bryan's order specifically prevents the School Board, superintendant or their agents from refusing to admit Harolyn, 16, and Rita Johnson, 15, of 2901 N. Lexington st., to Washington and Lee High School; Robert A. Eldrige III, 9 of 2716 S. 1st st. to the Fillmore School or Patrick Henry School; George Tyrone Nelson, 14, of 2005 N. Cameron st., to the Stratford or Swanson Junior High Schools; E. Leslie Hamm Jr., 11, of 900 N. Cameron st., to the Stratford or Swanson Junior Highs; or Louis George Turner, 14, and Melvin H. Turner, 13, both of 5132 N. 22d st., to the Swanson Junior High.

Edwin C. Brown, attorney for the seven children, said he saw no reason why they should n ot re-enter school on Sept. 23.

Integration Stay Still Unsettled

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. Tues. 9-17-57

Judge Bryan Won't Be Available Until Wednesday

By Connie Feeley and Mechlin Moore
Staff Reporters

The Arlington School Board yesterday appealed Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan's desegregation order to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

School Board attorney James H. Simmonds said he considered the desegregation order appealable because the judge passed upon the validity of the Placement Act" in his decision.

Still unsettled is the question of whether Judge Bryan's order, which directs that desegregation begin on Monday, will be stayed pending outcome of the appeal.

Bryan Unavailable

Simmonds was unable to ask Judge Bryan to stay his order yesterday because the jurist was attending a legal conference in Washington which continues today. Indications were that Wednesday will probably be the earliest opportunity for Judge Bryan to hear a request for a stay.

Simmonds and attorney Frank L. Ball Sr. filed the appeal in Alexandria Federal Court where Judge Bryan handed down his decision last Saturday. The appeal, along with the case record, will be forwarded to the Fourth Circuit Court in Richmond.

Patty said Governor Thomas B. Stanley may confer with local and State attorneys "if it should appear that something imminent might be approaching on Sept. 23."

Judge Bryan's order directed that seven Negro children who were turned away from white schools on opening day be admitted to those schools by Monday.

If the judge should turn down the request for a stay while the case is being appealed, the School Board will be faced with these alternatives Monday:

- Turning away the Negro chidlren and thus inviting contempt action.
- Admitting them in violation of laws on the books in Virginia.

The latter action would bring into play the balance of the State's no-integration program.

This program — in addition to a pupil placement act designed to prevent integration — includes provision for closing any integrated school and for the withholding of State funds if the school reopens on an integrated basis.

In addition, tuition grants would be available for private schooling for any child who objects to desegregated classrooms.

State aid to Arlington schools in fiscal year 1957-58 is estimated at $1.4 million. Of this amount, the main item is $1,197,000 in pupil-teacher ratio aid, paid on a quarterly basis.

The first payment of $299,250 was made before school opened. The second installment is due before Jan. 1, 1958. The remainder of the $1.4 million is divided among various special aid projects and is paid at different times throughout the year.

School Board Chairman James G. Stockard would make no prediction of action the board will take if a stay is not granted.

"The Board wants due process of law to operate and give us as final a conclusion as possible before Monday morning. We're hoping for an early decision from the court so we'll know how to plan for next week," he said.

"I am confident this is something that all of the citizens of Arlington are thinking and praying very seriously about."

Meanwhile, State Sen. Ted Dalton, Republican nominee for Governor, contended that Judge Bryan's desegregation decree "underscores as nothing else has the need for a pupil assignment plan administered by local school boards."

State Sen. Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington, said he is "very sorry" that Judge Bryan ordered desegregation.

"I had hoped the matter would be further delayed until the Supreme Court had passed on Norfolk and Newport News cases," Fenwick said.

In those cases, the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has upheld a lower court ruling that the Virginia placement act is unconstitutional

Advertiser Sat. 9-7-57 Montgomery, Ala. p.2a

RICHMOND, Va., Sept. 6 (AP)—A school-by-school check of principals of Richmond's Negro public schools showed today that scores of Negro children have been denied admission because they failed to present signed pupil placement applications.

The applications, part of Virginia's anti-integration laws, must be filled out by parents of all children transferring from school to school or entering school for the first time.

The only reported incident in Virginia today of a Negro child trying to gain admission to an all-white school also occurred in Richmond.

An unidentified five-year-old Negro boy, accompanied by his mother, showed up at an East End white school. The principal directed him to a nearby Negro school and the child and his mother amicably agreed. There was no disturbance.

There was no immediate indication as to whether the failure of many Negro children to present signed placement forms was defiance of the state's laws or oversight.

At the city's Negro Randolph Junior High School, only 18 returned today of 45 students who failed to present the signed applications yesterday.

At Maggie Walker High School, 12 were refused admission yesterday and only four returned today with the forms properly filled out.

Lawyers plead 5th Amendment in school case

Pittsburgh Pa. Sat. 8-24-57

NORFOLK, Va. — Victor J. Ashe and J. Hugo Madison, NAACP attorneys for pupils in the Norfolk school segregation case, took the Fifth Amendment at a closed hearing of the Thompson Committee here last week.

They declined to answer a committee question as to who paid court costs and lawyers fees in the Norfolk school integration suit, now under appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court.

After hearing a few of the large number of subpoenaed witnesses — all plaintiffs in the Norfolk school integration case—the committee dismissed the remainder of the group, saying no good purpose would be served by hearing others.

Second Negro Asks Arlington School Change

Star Sun. 8-13-57

Son of D. C. Police Private Applies for Stratford Entrance

George Tyrone Nelson, 14-year-old son of Pvt. George M. Nelson, jr., of the Metropolitan Police force, filed an application yesterday for transfer from Hoffman-Boston School to Stratford Junior High School.

The first application was filed last week by 15-year-old Sadie H. Phillips, who is seeking transfer from Hoffman-Boston to Washington - Lee High School.

Under Virginia anti-integration legislation, both applications will go to the State Pupil Placement Board for consideration. The board's next meeting is August 29 in Richmond.

The Nelson youth has completed the eighth grade at Hoffman-Boston and is due to enter the ninth grade when school open September 5.

He said he decided to seek the transfer "to help solve to the intregration problem by breaking the ice and making it easier for the children who follow."

The Arlington County School Board has decided to pass all such applications on the State Placement Board without any recommendations.

A Federal Court injunction is in force against the Arlington County School Board, forbidding racial discrimination in county schools.

Schools in Dilema

If Negro students fail to transfer to white schools, they are expected to go back to court and complain that Arlington is violating the injunction.

But if they do win transfer, the white schools involved are subject to closing by the governor and the county will lose State school funds.

The placement law meanwhile is headed for the Supreme Court in the Norfolk and Newport News desegration cases.

Judge Walter Hoffman ruled it was invalid in those cases, and his opinion was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. Yesterday, Norfolk and Newport News school officials asked the Supreme Court to review their cases.

Appeal Has New Emphasis

A new emphasis is made in this latest appeal: that is that the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals was in error in holding the act unconstitutional at a time when it was being tested in Virginia's highest state court.

This is a reference to a suit filed by a Fairfax mother, Mrs. Theo T. DeFebic, Challenging constitutionality of the act.

The Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has been asked for a writ of mandamus requiring Fairfax school officials to reinstate in school Mrs. FeFebio's two sons, expelled under provisions of the act. The boys were expelled because Mrs. DeFebio refused to sign placement forms prescribed by the Pupil Placement Board under the act.

Time Difference Noted

The DeFebio suit had not been lled when the Norfolk and Newport News cases were tried before Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk last winter. But the DeFebio case was pending on July 13 when the 4th Circuit Court upeld Hoffman's ruling in the two cases.

Defense lawyers at that time said they would appeal to the United States Supreme Court. The Circuit Court granted a defense request that Hoffman's desegregation order be held up until the case was finally decided by the highest court.

The nited States Supreme Court, now in recess for the summer, is not expected to act on the matter until October.

Delay Seen In Decision On DeFebio

Post and Times Herald P.B4

RICHMOND, Aug. 20 (Spl.) Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals officials said today that the DeFebio case had been excluded from the September docket.

Thus, no decision on the validity of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act will be reached until well after the Nov. 6 election and the law's status will be removed as an active issue in the gubernatorial campaign.

At the same time, it appeared that efforts will be made soon by counsel for Theo T. Febio of Fairfax County to have her children admitted to public schools there in September, pending the outcome of legal arguments about their status.

In late spring, Mrs. DeFebio's two sons were dropped from Fairfax schools because she refused to sign application forms required by the state pupil Placement Board.

She countered with the mandamus petition to the Supreme Court asking that her children be ordered readmitted. Her petition was based on the ground that the legislation creating the Placement Board is unconstitutional.

The court granted time limits for the filing of written briefs on this contention from Mrs. DeFebio's lawyer and from counsel for both the State and the Fairfax school board.

Court Clerk Howard G. Turner said today that these time limits extend beyond the period required for the case to be argued at the September term at Stanton. The earliest subsequent date on which arguments could be heard would be at the October term in Richmond. Cases argued then would not normally be settled by the court before its next opinion day, reasonably expected to fall on Nov. 25 or Dec. 2. Election day is Nov. 5.

Albert I. Kassabian of Annandale, one of Mrs. DeFebio's lawyers, acknowledged today that this appeared to be the likely timetable for the court decision. He said, however, that he would file a new motion with the Supreme Court in the next few days to try to get the children in school by the start of the term next month.

Neither Kassabian nor other lawyers in the case would comment further. But attorneys familiar with the issues expressed the view that the likliest form of the next legal move would be a motion for temporary admission of the children. The state is not expected to oppose such a request.

Earlier developments in the Federal Court had made it unlikely that any Negro child would be ordered admitted to the white school in Virginia at least prior to election day by the United States Supreme Court.

Both the United States District Court in Norfolk and the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit here have held the placement act unconstitutional. But an appeal has been lodged with the United States Supreme Court which is in recess until October.

Parents Test Racial Ruling In Maryland

Post 4-10-57

ANNAPOLIS, April 9 (AP)—Attorneys for a group of Howard County parents today tried a Court of Appeals test of the Supreme Court ruling that outlawed segregation in public schools.

They asked the state's high court to force the Howard County School Board to maintain separate schools for white and Negro children as required under Maryland law.

In doing so, they argued that the Supreme Court ruling under which the county began partial desegregation of schools last fall was in error and that Maryland's high court "has the residual power and right to aid in the correction of the decisions in the segregation cases . . ."

Lower courts in Maryland have held in at least three cases that the Supreme Court ruling is the law of the land and that they had no authority to uphold Maryland's law.

This is the first such case to reach the Court of Appeals. It was argued by George Washington Williams and C. Maurice Weidemeyer, attorneys and officials of the Maryland Petition Committee, which has been fighting the Supreme Court decision. They have said they were anxious to get the matter before the Supreme Court again to test the validity of the 14th Amendment.

The Amendment provides that no state shall make or enforce any law abridging the right of a citizen nor deny any person equal protection of the law.

Williams and Weidemeyer contended in briefs prepared for today's argument that the Amendment "was never constitutionally proposed or adopted." They said more than a fourth of the states refused to ratify it.

They contended further that if the Amendment is legal, the sole power to enforce it "is reposed constitutionally in the Congress" instead of the Supreme Court. They said this is specified in Section 5 of the Amendment.

Older DeFebio Boy Set To Drop Out of School

Evening Star 3rd. 4-19-57

Washington, D.C.

Fourteen-year-old Teddy DeFebio turned in his school books yesterday on a matter of principle his mother feels strongly about.

His mother, Mrs. Theo T. DeFebio, refuses to sign pupil placement applications required under one of the new laws Virginia has passed in its attempt to preserve segregated schools.

The Fairfax County School Board Office said Teddy actually has until the end of the four-day Easter vacation on Tuesday to bring the application to Mount Vernon High School, but Mrs. DeFebio said she had no intention of filing it.

So Teddy turned in his books, filled out the necessary withdrawal papers and bade his teachers farewell yesterday.

Brother Dropped Week Ago

Teddy's 9-year-old brother Nicky was dropped from the Hollin Hall Elementary School a week ago yesterday, when the deadline for his application expired.

Mrs. DeFebio objects to the applications because she considers them a subterfuge to thwart the Supreme Court's desegration decision.

The DeFebio brothers entered Fairfax County schools January 18, after moving to the county from North Carolina. They live with their mother at Wellington on the Potomac River.

When placement applications became available the State Pupil Placement Board notified local school authorities that parents had to fill them out within 15 days after receiving them, or their children would be sent home.

"I talked with my principal, Mr. (Melvin) Landes, before I left," Teddy said. "He said he was sorry to see me leave, but the matter was out of his hands."

Doesn't Intend to File

George Pope, assistant superintendent, said he had written Mrs. DeFebio, advising her the boys could be reinstated in school whenever the placement applications are filed.

Mrs. DeFebio, a Smith College graduate who drives a taxicab to support her family, said that day would never come.

"You can bury your conscience sometimes so deep you never can find it," she declared.

Mrs. DeFebio said she thought a long time about getting her children involved in such a controversy, "but if any children are conditioned to this sort of thing, it is mine."

Controversy in Carolina

Nicky and Teddy were the center of a long controversy in North Carolina, where Mrs. DeFebio and her husband Frank refused to send them to public schools. The State finally took the boys away from their parents, but returned them three years ago. Mr. DeFebio still lives in a lighthouse on the coast of North Carolina.

Mr. Pope said Tuesday is the deadline for a number of other students to turn in their placement applications, but he did not know whether anyone else intended to challenge the law, or perhaps hadn't gotten around to filling them out.

The Fairfax School Board Office has turned the whole DeFebio matter over to the State Pupil Placement Board and Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr.

Mother Retains Lawyer To Fight Pupil Ousters

Star Fri 4-26-57

Washington, D.C. P. 19a

By MARY LOU WERNER

Mrs. Theo T. DeFebio has retained the legal firm of Adams & Kassabian to seek re-admission of her sons to Fairfax County public schools.

The DeFebio boys, Nicky, 9, and Teddy, 14, were dropped from school because Mrs. DeFebio refused to sign Virginia's new pupil placement applications for them. She said she objected to the applications because she considered them part of a scheme to foil the Supreme Court desegregation decision.

Albert J. Kassabian, a partner in the Annandale firm retained by Mrs. DeFebio, said "our objective is to get the children back in school as quickly as possible."

Mr. Kassabian said the first move would be to request a conference with local school officials "in the hopes we can get the children readmitted while a suit which originated elsewhere to challenged the placement law is going through the courts."

Refers to Suits

He said he was referring to the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation suits, in which Judge Walter Hoffman ruled last January that Virginia's pupil placement law is "unconstitutional on its face."

The placement law is part of the legislative program Virginia adopted to preserve segregated schools. It requires all new students entering State schools to fill out placement applications, and a three-member board assigned by Gov. Stanley makes student assignments after reviewing the applications.

If any integration occurs, other legislation provides for the automatic closing of affected schools temporarily and the permanent withholding of State funds from school systems where integration occurs.

Ruling Not Binding

Mr. Kassabian acknowledged that Judge Hoffman's ruling is not binding on State courts until it has been appealed all the way to the Supreme Court and upheld. But he contended the boys should have the opportunity of going to school in the meantime.

"The Hoffman ruling ultimately will decide whether or not Virginia's placement law is constitutional or unconstitutional," said Mr. Kassabian.

"As long as that case is pending, we hope it won't be necessary to initiate additional legal action in the DeFebio case."

Richmond Parents Gird For Fight On School Plan

Call P. 13 Fri. 4-26-57

Kansas City, Mo.

By VICTOR CALVERTON

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — Over 25 Negro parents of Richmond public school children have secured Lawyer Oliver W. Hill to fight Virginia's assignment program which is being conducted by the Virginia Pupil Placement board.

The board appointed by Governor Thomas Stanley, who is a bitter foe of desegregation in the public schools, has the authority to assign pupils, white and colored, to all the schools in the state. The appointment is supposed to be on any basis except race, but the plan was adopted to prevent a single Negro child from attending a school with white children.

In other localities in the South where the assignment plan has been used the result usually is complete segregation of the children of the two races in schools. The only reason for any assignment plan is to prevent any mixing of the races in the schools.

Governor Stanley is so anxious that the plan in Virginia for continued segregation in the schools be 100 per cet proof that he recommended his plan a few weeks previously that the report of the Gray commission was all right. Actually he had the legislature bypass the Gray report, and took out of the hands of the local school boards the power to assign pupils after it was found Arlington County school board was ready to begin desegregation in its schools.

At Stanley's request the selection of local school board members was taken out of the hands of local officials and put directly under the authority of the state. Mr. Stanley fired Blake Newton, chairman of the state board of education, because Mr. Newton was against the governor's program to preserve segregation.

Fearing that the procedures of the Pupil Placement board will nullify the desegregation order of the U. S. Supreme court, the parents who are seeking a test of the authority of the board have refused to sign the application forms. Mr. Hill said he advised them not to sign, but that he hadn't advised his clients as to whether they should return them unsigned. They may or may not do so, he explained.

No date has been set for court action on the issue.

County Delay In Integration Is Appealed

RICHMOND, April 24, (AP) Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) have appealed Federal District Judge Sterling Hutcheson's refusal to set a deadline date for integration of Prince Edward County schools.

Counsel for the NAACP asked the Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday to reverse an order in which Judge Hutcheson gave the County unlimited time to integrate its schools. The lawyers are also complaining of his decision not to rule on the constitutionality of Virginia's new pupil placement plan.

Judge Hutcheson last January said in an opinion it was imperative that additional time be granted for Prince Edward to prepare for integration.

He also kept the case on his docket, ruling that the Negro plaintiffs have a right to come back into his Court after Prince Edward school officials have had a reasonable time to solve their problem.

The Circuit Court is not expected to hear the NAACP appeal until its October term here.

Arlington Pupil Cost Tops State

RICHMOND, Jan. 31 (AP)—Arlington County ranked rst in the state in the last school year in local expenditures per pupil for education, the State Department of Education said to-

day. Star 8-8

In a revision of its annual survey of local effort and ability, the department said Arlington's expenditures topped every other locality at $249 per pupil.

Richmond ranked first among all localities with a per pupil expenditure of $237.

But neither Richmond nor Arlington County had as much wealth per child as did Virginia Beach. The Tidewater beach had $54,522 in taxable wealth for each school child and spent only $145 per pupil.

Arlington achieved its top rank in expenditure per child with $27,112 in taxabl ewealth per pupil and Richmond was between the two with $31,301.

Falls Church ranked second among cities with a per pupil expenditure of $223 with $18,441 taxable wealth per child.

Fairfax was second among counties wtih $157 per pupil expenditure with only $9458 in taxable wealth. To make this expenditure, it taxed its residents at a true rate equal to $16 per $100 of property.

Alexandria ranked third in cities in per pupil expenditure with $199. It was also third in wealth per child, with $28,704.

Senate Fist-Tightener

Harry Flood Byrd

Associated Press

The most consistent old-time conservative in the Senate

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 1—Perhaps the most powerful one-man caucus in the United States Senate meets in the shapeless old felt hat of Harry Flood Byrd of Virginia.

Senator Byrd more often than not is on the losing side of great issues. Certainly he has hardly had what he could consider a satisfying victory in his twenty-year struggle with the spending habits of three administrations. Yet, considering the nature of his political rationale, which runs counter to the dominant mood of a certain liberalism in both parties, his influence is enormous—in both parties. The surprising thing is not that he loses many actions; the surprising thing is that he makes such a good showing as repeatedly he does against such overpowering odds.

Man in the News

P. 24

Times

Times 4-2-57

Thin-Red-Line Man

Senator Byrd in politics is what his British ancestors for centuries had been in the world's battles—one of those thin-red-line men who never knows when he is defeated and fights with a smiling good humor that covers an unbreakable determination.

If he could, he would turn the clock back in public affairs — back beyond the Republican Administration of President Eisenhower, far beyond the Fair and New Deals.

For Senator Byrd is the most consistent old-time conservative in the Senate, if not, indeed, in all American public life. He is far more the representative of a point of view than of a political party.

His ties to the Democratic party rest so lightly upon him that his state (in which he is boss in a genteel but effective way) has gone Republican in the last two Presidential elections.

New York N.Y.

To say that he planned it that way would be slightly to overstate the case, but to say that he was not unhappy at the result would understate it.

His point of contact with the Senate Republicans, particularly the old guard, is at least as good as with the Democrats. The Democrats generally look upon Senator Byrd with the affection (and great basic respect) of impatient nephews trying to modernize an old-fashioned and highly thrifty uncle who is fond of them but distinctly not fond of their notions.

Classical Conservative

Senator Byrd, for illustration, has been a doughty foe for many forms of foreign aid spending. But, unlike some others, he has taken this position not in an isolationist spirit not because he is hostile to Britain or France, but simply for the reason he has always given: to save public money.

Unlike some right-wingers, for example, he is not against aid for underdeveloped areas and for aid to Franco Spain; when in 1950 the two issues were posed in a single session he voted No both times.

The Senate knows that Senator Byrd, right or wrong, means what he says. Thus it listens carefully to him when, rarely, he rises to speak, his blue eyes snapping over applered cheeks. (They are an unwitting commercial for the Senator's main nonpolitical activity the operation of vast apple orchards in the Shenandoah Valley of Virginia.) His speech is invariably flat, unemotional, a bit high and nasal and not very Southern in enunciation. When Senator Byrd's kind of Virginian speaks of "the war" it means the Revolution, and not the more recent hostilities with the North.

Opponent of Integration

As Governor of Virginia, Mr. Byrd had the State Legislature enact the first anti-lynching law in the United States. As senior Senator from Virginia he is a leading and implacable opponent of the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decision.

His first ancestor in this country, William Byrd, came from England in 1674. The Senator, who will be 70 years old June 10, owns newspapers in Winchester and Harrisonburg, Va., apart from his huge chain of orchards. He took most of his formal education at the Shenandoah Valley Academy. The late Admiral Richard Evelyn Byrd was a younger brother.

Senator Byrd's wife is the former Anne Douglas Beverly. There are three sons, Harry, Jr., Beverley and Richard Evelyn. A daughter, Westwood, died in 1952.

Integrated PTA Meetings Approved in Arlington

Star Sat. 3-2-57 P. 24-N

Washington D.C.

Virginia's Attorney General, J. Lindsay Almond, jr., has ruled that the Arlington County Council of PTAs may continue to hold integrated meetings.

Mr. Almond said a council session does not need to be racially segregated because it is not a public "assemblage" within the meaning of a State statute.

In a letter to Arlington Commonwealth's Attorney William J. Hassan, the attorney general pointed that the council never extends a public invitation to attend its meetings.

Mr. Almond's ruling came in response to a council request, forwarded by Mr. Hassan, for an official opinion on the matter.

The parent-teacher group's inquiry was made as the result of Mr. Almond's decision last October that Arlington County Board campaign debates must be held on a segregated basis. In this instance, Mr. Hassan had first stated a contrary opinion —that the meeting in question need not be segregated — but went on to ask for the attorney general's ruling.

As a result of the Attorney General's October ruling, Arlington school officials posted signs calling for segregated meetings at any public assemblage in a school building.

The PTA council, which had been meeting in school buildings on a non-segregated basis, asked school officials whether its sessions were covered by the public assemblage law. The council was told that, to play it safe, it should not hold integrated meetings. The inquiry to Mr. Almond followed.

At its last meeting, while the request was in the works, the council met at a church hall. The PTA organization's president, William M. Lightsey, said the council will now ask school officials for permission to meet in a school building again on a non-segregated basis.

Mr. Lightsey explained that the council has "an associate membership" of representatives from Negro schools.

In his opinion, the Attorney General said that because of the facts in the case he was "constrained to believe" that the council meetings do not constitute a public assemblage.

City to Decide On Pupil Plan

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Jan. 15 (Special).—The School Board here will debate within a month whether or not to admit some county pupils to its classrooms on a tuition basis next fall.

In a letter presented to the Albemarle County School Board, Charlottesville School Supt. Fendall R. Ellis said city officials are sympathetic with the county's student housing problem.

If circumstances permit, he said, the city would like to provide school housing for about 175 elementary students on a tuition basis. These children are, for the most part, the same pupils who would attend city schools if annexation plans materialize.

Washington, D.C.

Last October, county school officials indicated the best solution to the overcrowding at the McIntire Elementary School probably would rest with Charlottesville because of the city's annexation plans. P. 2

McIntire had 100 additional pupils this year, and expects the same increase this fall.

A Virginia Exercise In Sophistry

Journal + Guide

IT IS A MATTER of official and common knowledge that the state of Virginia has passed laws and taken other steps to wholly circumvent the supreme law of the land as enunciated by the Supreme Court, and is committed under GOVERNOR STANLEY and the Democratic candidate for governor, J. LINDSAY ALMOND, to a course of "massive resistance" to desegregation.

It therefore strikes us as highly ironical that one of the STANLEY-sponsored agencies of mass resistance has invoked "compliance with the law" in an effort to have parents sign school transfer applications.

Sat 9-14-57

The Pupil Placement law, administered by the Placement Board, takes all control of pupil assignment away from the localities in Virginia and centralizes it in Richmond. The transfer applications give to the state's political dictatorship the sole authority to assign students, and the signer of the application automatically waives all further rights as to assignment.

But hundreds of parents throughout the state, dozens of them white persons, are refusing to sign at all, or only "under protest." Noting this situation last week, the board—which holds star chamber, secret sessions—issued the following appeal:

"As long as the Pupil Placement Act is the law of this commonwealth, it is the positive duty of all citizens to comply with this, as with any other, law."

That, indeed, is a strange position for the board to be taking, in view of official Virginia's admitted determination to disobey higher federal law and the very Constitution of the United States. It is arrogant sophistry, and it is ridiculous. The Constitution and its relevant amendments antedate the Pupil Placement Act, and no state law can legally or morally supersede, bypass, or circumvent the federal Constitution's guarantees of equal protection of the laws for all citizens, massive resistance and the delusion of interposition to the contrary notwithstanding.

The Placement Board made some of the understatements of the century when it declared in its recent pronouncement that "to avoid hardship on any child" it has provided a regulation "that any parent, regardless of his or her views, may execute the application form 'under protest' and without any prejudice to the legal rights of the parent or the child," and further, that it recognized that "a small minority of our citizens are opposed to the legislation under which the board is exercising its duties."

Faced with the dreadful choice of signing a carte blanche agreement or depriving their children of the education for which they pay as taxpayers, any parent with scruples would decide in favor of education for their children —while the courts are adjudicating the issue—and sign "under protest" the necessary application. That is our sober, second-thought judgment now.

The Federal Court in Norfolk has declared the Pupil Placement Act "unconstitutional on its face" and been upheld by the U. S. Third Circuit Court of Appeals. Virginia has taken the case to the Supreme Court of the United States for final judgment. A white parent has challenged the act in the Virginia Supreme Court.

The act, in its language, is lily-white so far as explicit discrimination is concerned. Actually and admittedly it is intended to flaunt the verdict of the courts. The judges of those courts will look beyond the language of the act; they will look at its objectives and its administration. We are satisfied that the Supreme Court will agree with JUDGE WALTER HOFFMAN that it is "unconstitutional on its face."

An Absurd Situation

News that a judge in Arlington County, Va., confounded courtroom spectators by asserting that an attorney had not proved that his client was white is a logical development in the world of absurdity now known as the unreconstructed South.

In this case the individual arrested was charged with violating a segregation statute by sitting in a colored section of a public meeting room. With the police taking the initiative, one would assume that it is very easy to know who is white and who is colored just by a quick glance. Apparently, this is not so.

Ohio-Pittsburgh Courier

When times were less turbulent and police officials more alert, this would not have happened. Old hands in Virginia know that there are many colored people in the state who voluntarily remain in the non-white status. In peaceful times, an official charged with enforcing segregation just pretends that white persons who sit in the so-called colored sections are really not white.

Pit Post 9-14-57

HOWEVER, VIRGINIA has been in a state of confusion for some time. During World War II Dr. John A. Davis, who is now a member of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, was riding in a railway coach with three white marines.

A conductor ordered them out of the coach because he said it was for colored mostly. The Marines left before Dr. Davis, whose blue eyes and fair hair have confused many people. Someone told the conductor that Dr. Davis was really colored! "I've heard that before," the conductor snapped, "no white man can fool me — he must leave this coach."

Baltimore Md.

A few years ago a man was arrested on a charge of being a partner in an interracial marriage. One of my friends who was his lawyer visited the jail and found that the prinsoner was in the same cell block with whites.

"WHEN WE arrest people," the sheriff said by way of explanation," we make them take a shower. In the shower," the official continued, "that man looked like a white man to me so I am going to keep him with the white folks until somebody proves he ain't."

The lawyer then decided that he would follow up on this idea and show that the state had to prove that his client was not white. Later the idea of challenging the racial purity of everyone in Virginia crept into the lawyer's mind.

He started a great deal of research and unearthed a book which he said would help him prove that a great many of the leading families in Virginia could not qualify as whites under the present Virginia law.

ONE DAY, just before his case was scheduled to come to trial, the lawyer was heard to boast: "When I get through in that courtroom the judge and I will be the omy two people in it who will be able to say that they are white."

I waited eagerly for the day when the hearing would take place and there would be some disposition of the case. That was at least six years ago and, although the man was quickly released, I am still waiting for the hearing.

Final Arguments Slated Today on Barring of Negroes

Washington, D.C.

By Meghlin Moore
Staff Reporter

Virginia's controversial Pupil Placement Act was attacked vigorously yesterday in Alexandria Federal Court by attorneys seeking immediate admission of seven Negroes to white schools in Arlington.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond defended school officials' refusal to admit the Negro pupils. They were turned away last week from white schools on opening day, on grounds that adverse Federal court rulings on the placement law are pending review by the U. S. Supreme Court.

The Pupil Placement Act has been under "heavy assault; it hasn't fared very well —but it's still the law in Virginia," Almond declared.

After nearly four hours of testimony, District Judge Albert V. Bryan adjourned court until 10 a. m. today when closing arguments by attorneys for the Negro pupils will be heard.

Spottswood W. Robinson, Richmond attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, argued that the seven Negro children were denied entry to white schools under the placement law because of their color. This violated Judge Bryan's July 27 order to desegregate Arlington schools this Fall, Robinson said.

The placement law was declared unconstitutional and an inadequate administrative remedy by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. Hoffman's decision was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and is awaiting Supreme Court review.

Authority to assign all public school children in Virginia was transferred to a 3-member board in Richmond by the Act. Although race is not mentioned in the act as a basis for public assignment, the Pupil Placement Board is required to maintain an "efficient" school system defined in other legislation as a segregated system.

Robinson argued that the Act "attempted to do by indirection what could not be done directly" — segregate pupils by race. The placement law is therefore unconstitutional, not an administrative remedy and school applicants cannot be legally required to abide by its provisions, Robinson argued.

Of the seven Negro children represented in yesterday's hearing only one had filed a pupil placement application for transfer to a white school.

Almond argued that George T. Nelson, the child who filed the placement form, had not actually applied for transfer from Negro Hoffman-Boston to white Stratford Junior High, close to his home, because of an administrative technicality.

Although Nelson presented the form to Principal Claude Richmond of Stratford, he did not write on the form that he was applying for that school, Almond argued. No space is provided on the form to note the school to which transfer is sought.

As for the six Negro pupils who refused to turn in placement forms, Almond argued that they had not legally applied to white schools because the placement act is still in force.

The six are: E. Leslie Hamm Jr., 11, of 1900 North Cameron st.; Rita, 15, and her sister, Harolyn Johnson, 16, both of 2901 North Lexington st.; Louis G., 14, and his brother, Melvin H. Turner, 13, both of 5132 North 22d st., and Robert A. Eldridge III, 9, of 2716 1st st. S. Nelson, 14, lives at 2005 N. Cameron st.

Robinson argued they were qualified to attend white schools close to their homes and presented themselves at the schools last Thursday. According to Robinson, this constituted sufficient application.

Mrs. A. J. E. Davis, a white Arlington woman who escorted three Negro applicants to Stratford, was asked why she accompanied them to school.

"There were threats; someone had announced there would be bloodshed and I it should be a white person's—mine if necessary," she answered.

All five Negro parents who testified claimed they wanted their children to attend white schools because they lived from 3 to 5 miles closer to the white schools. Those who refused to sign the placement form said they did so because they believed it unconstitutional.

T. Edward Rutter, superintendent of Arlington schools, was placed on the stand by Robinson in an effort to prove by examination that the Pupil Placement Act operates to preserve segregation.

Rutter confirmed that the placement board has effectively retained segregation by apparently assigning pupils on the basis of school districts which have been in force for years. These districts are based on proximity to schools except in the case of Negro neighborhoods, Rutter admitted on questioning.

Early in the hearing, Judge Bryan denied attempts by attorneys for Arlington schoo officails to delay the hearing. They complained of short notice, but Bryan said the "known urgency" of the situation required an immediate hearing.

Bryan also denied motions to dissolve his previous injunction against segregation by race, to dismiss the present case and to reverse an order allowing four additional Negroes to enter the case.

Almond made a short closing argument because he said he would be unable to attend today's hearing because of business in Richmond. He reiterated his opening statement that the placement law is valid until reviewed by the Supreme Court. Therefore, the plaintiffs failed to make legal application to white schools, he added.

Representing the Negro pupils in addition to Robinson were Edwin C. Brown, Northern Virginia adviser to the NAACP and Richmond attorney Oliver Hill, a member of the NAACP legal staff.

In addition to Almond, the State was represented by Kenneth C. Patty, an assistant to the attorney general who is slated to take over the job when Almond's resignation to run for governor becomes effective Monday, and Henry Wickham, a special assistant. Arlington school officials were represented by former State Sen. Frank Ball of Arlington and James Simmonds, an Arlington attorney.

INTEGRATION ORDER STAYED IN VIRGINIA

Appeal Pending Affected Four White Schools

LAWYERS SAW 'CHAOS'

By The Associated Press

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 18. —An order for integration next Monday of four Arlington County, Va., white schools was suspended Wednesday by a Federal judge pending an appeal.

Judge Albert V. Bryan of United States District Court granted a stay in his order of last Saturday which directed the admission of seven Negroes to the four schools.

School board attorneys requested the suspension, pending appeal to the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, on the grounds that integration Monday would create a chaotic situation.

Would Close School

They said that under Virginia laws the integrated schools would be closed, affecting more than 5,000 pupils, and that state school funds would be cut off for the county.

Attorneys representing the seven Negro pupils argued that the school board was merely seeking a further delay. They pointed out that the court already had issued an injunction barring pupil assignment on the basis of race and color alone.

These attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had resuested an immediate enforcement of Judge Bryan's July 27 order directing integration of Arlington schools this fall.

In granting the stay, Judge Bryan told attorneys it is a rare case indeed in which a trial court does not suspend execution of its order pending an appeal. The circumstances in this case, he added, did not in his opinion put the suit in such a rare class.

Judge Bryan concluded that if he did not grant the stay and his integration order was reversed on appeal, a tremendous injury would be involved.

On the other hand, he said if he granted the stay and his order was upheld, the possibility of injury would be a great deal less.

Other Developments

In other integration developments Wednesday:

Dr. Harry N. Jones, a Negro physician of Deale, Md., withdrew his son from a newly integrated srhool after watshing 12 carloads of white men ride past his home and the newly desegregated Deale School Annex a block and a half away Tuesday night. He also reported having received threats over the telephone.

Dr. Jones said he made his decision "for fear of repercussions against both white and Negro residents of Deale who have supported my son's right to attend an integrated school."

The boy had been the only Negro pupil in the 26-pupil first grade.

At Morganfield, Ky., an all-white elementary school, sponsored by the Union County Citizens Council, began classes on a limited basis Wednesday.

Officials said no enrollment figures are available but at least 150 pupils are expected. The school was opened to meet the demands of parents who did not want their youngsters to attend the integrated Sturgis High School.

At Oklahoma City, Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler declared the Democratic Party will not be deterred in its stand on civil rights "by any threat of a third party in the South."

To demands by South Carolina Democratic State Chairman Nevelle Bennett that he resign or be fired, Mr. Butler said, "I will not resign and I don't believe they are going to fire me."

Judge Is Asked To Stay Order On Integration

'Irreparable' Harm Seen if Negroes Are Admitted

Arlington's plea for postponement of a Federal court order to integrate schools was being heard today by Alexandria Judge Albert V. Bryan.

Judge Bryan, who ordered admission of seven Negro students to four white schools next Monday, was asked to stay his order pending an appeal of his decree to the Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals.

First School Closing Would Be Monday Page B-1
Placement Act Stayed in Richmond; in Force in Falls Church. Page B-1

See "Irreparable Damage"

Arlington School Board attorneys asked the stay on the ground that "irreparable damage will have been done" by the admission of the Negroes into white schools if Judge Bryan's order later is overruled on appeal. The attorneys said that:

State funds may be cut off for all Arlington schools.

The Arlington School Board will lose control of the schools, resulting in inefficiency and confusion in the shifting of control.

The attorneys also said that "serious legal questions have been raised and decided" by the court in its order issued last Saturday. Judge Bryan ruled that Virginia's Pupil Placement Act, one of the State's anti-integration laws, did not have to be followed by the students.

Cites Similar Cases

The motion for a stay said in similar cases where the Placement Act has been ruled invalid, decrees ordering desegregation have been stayed pending action of the Supreme Court on the placement law.

"Any harm to the plantiffs (Negro students involved in the case) by reason of such stay, would be minimal in itself and certainly out of all proportion to the injury of every public school child in Arlington," the motion said.

Could Appeal Ruling

The four schools to which the seven Negroes sought admission and which the Arlington attorneys said would be closed if integration occurs are Washington-Lee High School with 2,596 pupils; Stratford Junior High, 1,065 pupils; Swanson Junior High, 749 pupils, and Patrick Henry Elementary, 699 pupils.

If Judge Bryan refuses to grant a stay, Arlintgon can ask any of the three judges of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals for one. The attorneys said they would do this immediately if Judge Bryan refuses to grant the stay.

If no stay is granted, Arlington School Board wlil be faced Monday with either admitting the students in violation of Virginia law or turning away the Negroes in violation of Judge Bryan's order. The school board would be subject to a contempt citation by Judge Bryan if it violates his order.

Stanley Plan Loses A Round

Herald Guide

NOW THAT the Circuit Court of Appeals has upheld JUDGE WALTER HOFFMAN ruling that the Virginia Pupil Placement Plan is unconstitutional, it will be interesting to note which way GOVERNOR STANLEY, SENATOR BYRD and ATTORNEY-GENERAL ALMOND will go about repairing their circumvention machinery.

Norfolk, Va. 14d(1)

There is, of course, the United States Supreme Court, to which MR. ALMOND has given notice that he will appeal. But the Supreme Court only recently knocked out the Louisiana Plan, which was not so obviously ridiculous as the Plan which bears the name of Virginia's illustrious governor. The next step may be a 1957 special session of the General Assembly.

Sat. 7-20-57

It was a bit ironical that the morning after SENATOR BYRD and CANDIDATE ALMOND had once more torn JUDGE HOFFMAN apart with verbal blasts at Old Point Comfort, the appeals court upheld JUDGE HOFFMAN. That was one of the most severe jolts we have ever known Virginia's two most vocal Claghorns (borrowed) to take.

We are about to conclude that if SENATOR BYRD and CANDIDATE ALMOND continue talking as they have been doing they will elect MR. DALTON and prepare a quiet resting place—politically—for MR. BYRD.

We cannot conceive that the white people of Virginia—as much as a majority of them may be opposed to integration—want to see the men whom they have elected to the highest political offices in their state, become a Bilbo-Blease symbol of vituperation directed at the personal character and integrity of judges of the Federal courts, and disobedience to all court decisions which they do not like.

U. S. Court Voids Curbs On Virginia Negro Pupils

Sun. 7-14-57

RICHMOND, Va., July 13 (AP).—A Federal appellate court today upheld Virginia's unconstitutional pupil placement act designed to maintain racially segregated schools.

The act of 1956 creates a three-man state board appointed by the Governor and gives to it all pupil assignment powers formerly held by local school boards. It automatically reassigns all pupils to their present segregated schools and provides that any new assignments — occasioned by promotion or transfer—would be by the state board for many reasons other than race.

The 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in its decision today upheld the decisions of District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk in Norfolk and Newport News school segregation cases. Judge Hoffman held the act unconstitutional and ruled that schools must be desegregated in the two cities by this September.

". . . This statute furnishes no adequate remedy to plaintiffs (Negro parents and school children) because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation and because of the provisions of (1956 Virginia law) which provide for the closing of schools and withdrawal therefrom of state funds upon any departure from this policy in any school," the Circuit Court said.

This was in reference to Virginia's appropriation act which provides that all state funds shall be cut off from elementary or high schools of a local school division if one elementary or high school in that division admits a single Negro child.

The pupil placement act provided for a system of appeals from the assignment board to the Governor and from the Governor to the state courts up through the state Supreme Court.

The Comonwealth and Norfolk and Newport News school boards, defendants, had argued that the cases should be dismissed or proceedings stayed until administrative remedies had been exhausted under the pupil placement act.

VIRGINIA EXPECTS HEATED FALL VOTE

New York

Varied Plans for Preserving Segregation Fan Interest in Governorship Race

Sun. 7-14-57

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., July 13—Virginia faces the prospect of an unusually heated campaign for the November election in a state in which the July Democratic primary often decides everything.

One reason is that the voting will indicate the way in which most Virginians hope to preserve segregated public schools.

The democrats are committed to an approach of massive resistance to integration. This has been advocated by United States Senator Harry E. Byrd, leader of the dominant Democratic conservative organization in Virginia.

The Republicans approved last week a platform calling for a pupil assignment plan, which might permit some limited integration.

A second reason for the unusual campaign is the assurance of keen competition for the governorship between two established vote-getters.

The Democratic candidate is Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. He was nominated Tuesday in a primary that apparently attracted the fewest voters in twenty-five years. In the only state-wide contest he won by a four-to-one margin over Howard Carwile, Richmond lawyer and perennial candidate for office.

The Republican candidate will be State Senator Ted Dalton, a Radford lawyer whose strong race four years ago won forty-five per cent of the vote against Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, Democrat.

Three-Way Race Likely

A third reason is the unusual possibility of a three-way race for Attorney General. This year the Democratic nominee, Howard C. Gilmer, withdrew after the ballots had been printed because insurance organizations had criticized his connection as a lawyer with the sale of some insurance policies.

Within twenty-four hours three candidates stepped into the campaigns. They are State Senator Albirtis Harrison, endorsed by the Byrd organization's state central Democratic committee; Robert Whitehead, Nelson County lawyer and long-respected leader of the more liberal minority in the House of Delegates, and J. Livingston Dillow, former commonwealth's attorney of Giles County in western Virginia, who was nominated in convention by the Republicans.

Political speculation this week has centered on two factors.

Significance in Doubt

One is whether the Democratic primary, with its unexpected support for Mr. Carwile, indicated backing for or protest against Govenor Stanley's school segregation plan.

That plan, enacted by the Legislature last year, could cut off state school funds where any racial integration occurred. Governor Stanley and other Democrats saw support for the program in the voting results.

Mr. Dalton, on the other hand, said he did not think the light election returns can be construed as endorsing the Stanley program.

The other matter of speculation was whether Mr. W[illegible]ard would qualify for the Attorney General's race before the July 19 deadline. Observers foresee mixed effects of the three-way race, with voting split along both party lines and over racial plans. The two Democrats, one for no integration and one for pupil assignments, would run as independents. The Republican will take the same general segregation position as the Liberal Democrats.

The campaign promises to be more interesting in some respects than that of four years ago when Governor Stanley beat Senator Dalton. The main issue then was road financing rather than segregation.

Prince Edward County Has Organized Private System to Thwart Integration

Sun. 7-21-57

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., July 20—The county in which Virginia's school integration suit originated is ready to operate private schools for white children if integration comes.

Details of the program for Prince Edward County were disclosed this week by B. Blanton Hanbury, a Farmville manufacturer who is president of the Prince Edward Educational Corporation. The private organization began two years ago preparing to set up schools in view of the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

The program is the only one of its kind in Virginia, which traditionally has racially segregated schools. Any integration, white and Negro leaders in Prince Edward County agree, would end public schooling in the county.

Outline of Program

Mr. Hanbury, in his announcement this week, said that teachers, classroom facilities, curriculum and financing had all been arranged. Here is the program as he outlined it:

¶All except one of more than sixty white principals and teachers in the county's school system have signed up to teach in the private system.

¶Space has been lined up and churches, homes, organization buildings and even warehouses.

¶More than $10,000 in cash and renewal of $190,000 in pledges made during a campaign in 1955 will be counted on for basic financing.

One disadvantage, Mr. Hanbury said, is the possible elimination of some athletic and school social functions.

The same administrative arrangement could be used, Mr. Hanbury suggested, to put Negro children in their own private system.

The Rev. W. F. Griffin, acting president of the Prince Edward County Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, commented, however, that such an arrangement would be, in effect, a compromise on integregation.

Whether the Educational Corporation's plan is put into effect apparently will depend on the outcome of Virginia's original litigation on the school racial issue. The litigation dates to May, 1951, when a group of Prince Edward County Negroes challenged the constitutionality of the county's segregated schools. The case was one of those on which the Supreme Court based its decision of May, 1954, outlawing racially segregated public schools.

A later Federal District Court ruling here set no deadline for the county to begin desegregating of its schools. Lawyers for the Prince Edward County Negroes have appealed that ruling. A hearing on it has been scheduled for the October term of the Federal Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit, based here.

Figures of June, 1955, showed that Prince Edward County had a school population 54 per cent Negro. The figures for average daily attendance were: white, 1,389; Negro, 1,641.

Sun 7-14-57

The law of 1956 created a state board of three members appointed by the Governor and gave to it all pupil assignment powers that had been held by local school boards. The law reassigns all pupils automatically to the segregated schools they have been attending, and provides that any new assignments, occasioned by promotion or transfer, be by the state board listing many reason other than race.

District Judge Upheld

The United States Court of Appeals in the Fourth Circuit upheld its decision today Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk in ruling on Norfolk and Newport News school segregation cases. Judge Hoffman declared the state law unconstitutional and ordered that the schools of the two cities be desegregated by this September.

The Court of Appeals said today:

"This statute furnishes no adequate remedy to plaintiffs [Negro parents and school children] because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation and because of the provisions of [1956 Virginia law] which provide for the closing of schools and withdrawal therefrom of state funds upon any departure from this policy in any school."

The reference was to Virginia's appropriation Act of 1956, which provides that all state funds be cut off from elementary or high schools of a local school division if one elementary or high school in the division admits a Negro child.

The Pupil Placement Act provided for a system of appeals from the assignment board to the Governor and from the Governor to the state courts up through the State Supreme Court.

The state and the Norfolk and Newport News school boards, defendants, had argued that the cases against them should be dismissed or proceedings stayed until administrative remedies had been exhausted under the Pupil Placement Act.

U S Court KOs Virginia School Segregation Law

Informer Houston, Tex. Sat. 7-20-57

RICHMOND, Va — The U S 4th Circuit Court of Appeals knocked out Virginia's pupil placement act, which purported to maintain segregation as is, and in effect sustained the lower court's ruling that Norfolk and Newport News must desegregate their public schools in September.

This was another part of the package of bills prepared by the Virginia Assembly as a means of keeping Negroes segregated, said package of bills having been presented in the legislatures of all the southern states, including Texas. The particular statute out of this package was objectionable to the Appellate Court because it provided for maintenance of segregation, and also because the total package provided that if any school were desegregated, the district would lose all of the school appropriations.

U S District Judge Walter E Hoffman of Norfolk had ruled that the group of laws were fashioned to get around the Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, and therefore unconstitutional, in addition to ruling that they were unconstitutional on their face, because they provided no adequate remedy for Negroes against the present laws, which require a continuance of segregation.

The corresponding bill in the package that was presented to the Texas Legislature in the spring, and defeated in the Senate, was in almost identical words with that of the Virginia statute.

It would seem that the only thing between Norfolk and Newport News' integration by September is an appeal on this case to the Supreme Court of the United States, accompanied by a stay of the circuit court's decree; since the Supreme Court will hardly convene again until October, too late for the two schools to be desegregated in September. But on the other hand, in the light of the Supreme Court's consistent ruling, the stay may not be granted. But whether Virginia gets a respite of one semester or of a school year, desegregation is inevitable.

LOUISIANA IN VISE

Last week the U S Supreme Court sustained the 5th Circuit Court of Appeals, which in turn had affirmed Federal District Judge Wright's ruling that contested Louisiana segregation laws were unconstitutional, and that the New Orleans public schools should be desegregated.

This is a final ruling from the Supreme Court, subject only to petition for a rehearing. New Orleans parish is really in a vise.

Sat. 7-20-57

A more accurate statement is that the whole rebellious South is in a vise with the court decisions now pressing from Virginia on the east, and from New Orleans on the southwest, how can any of the southern states escape desegregation? If you add the Tennessee trial of the Clinton rioters, the vise is pressing from Clinton to Virginia and from Clinton to New Orleans.

Board Bans Race Issue Commitment by Schools

The Fairfax County School Board last night ordered the school administration not to take any action that might commit the board on the racial issue.

"We want to make it clear that we have taken no position on the segregation issue," said Robert F. Davis, who initiated the action.

"We are trying to keep our skirts clean and our schools open for both white and colored," Mr. Davis added. "The school board has been able to keep out of this segregation business up to now," he said.

Unanimous Passage

His motion was passed unanimously that the "administration should not take any action in any way to commit the board" and that the administrative staff be instructed that any question on the issue be brought before the board.

Mr. Davis told a reporter after the meeting that there have been "assumptions by courts in various places that stood "that we have no policy."

State Laws Follow

Board members said school officials would continue to follow State laws dealing with segregation. They said that, even though the Pupil Placement Act has been ruled unconstitutional by the appeals court, the law is still in effect because the case has not yet gone to the Supreme Court.

"We can do nothing about the State law," Mr. Davis said. "We have to do what the law says. We do it because it's the law, not because we favor segregation or integration.

policies have been formulated by many school boards."

He noted that the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ruled the State Pupil Placement Act invalid Saturday and its decision said the State's policy was to keep schools segregated. Mr. Davis said he wanted it clearly under-

Virginia Law, Southern Pattern, Ruled Invalid

Wednesday Birmingham, Ala. Wed. 7-17-57

RICHMOND, Va. — (INS) — The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Saturday declared Virginia's pupil placement law unconstitutional. This law has been passed by many Southern States as a means of circumventing the integration of races in public schools.

The court, handing down its opinion in Richmond, declared that the law leaves Negroes without legal recourse because of Virginia's unique package plan which would close the schools and withdrew state funds upon integration.

The decision was rendered in desegregation suits against the school systems of Newport News, and Norfolk. In each case, U. S. District Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman ordered the cities to end segregation in schools by August 15.

APPEAL INDICATED

Attorneys for the school board have indicated an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court on the ruling, and have asked the Circuit Court to stay its mandate.

The court said that Virginia's pupil placement law "furnishes no adequate remedy to the plaintiffs because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation ..... and because of the act which provides for the closing of schools and withdrawal of state funds upon any departure from this policy in the schools."

Virginia Judge Suspends Own Integration Order

Constitution Thurs. 9-19-57 Atlanta, Ga. P. 2

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 18 (AP)—An order for integration next Monday of four Arlington County, Va., white schools was suspended today by a federal judge pending an appeal.

Judge Albert V. Bryan of U.S. District Court granted a stay in his order of last Saturday which directed the admission of seven Negroes to the four schools.

School board attorneys requested the suspension, pending appeal to the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, on the grounds that integration Monday would create a chaotic situation.

They said that under Virginia laws the integrated schools would be closed, affecting more than 3,000 pupils, and that state school funds would be cut off for the county.

Attorneys representing the seven Negro pupils argued that the board was merely seeking a further delay. They pointed out that the court already had issued an injunction barring pupil assignment on the basis of race and color alone.

These attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had requested an immediate enforcement of Bryan's July 27 order directing integration of Arlington schools this fall.

In granting the stay, Bryan told attorneys it is a rare case indeed in which a trial court does not suspend execution of its order pending an appeal.

Bryan concluded that if he did not grant the stay and his integration order was reversed on appeal, a tremendous injury would be involved.

Court Bars Virginia Move To Delay Pupil Integration

Supreme Bench Rejects an Appeal From Rulings That 2 Cities End School Bias —North Carolina Children Lose Plea

By LUTHER A. HUSTON

Special to The New York Times

WASHINGTON, March 25—Virginia lost in the Supreme Court today an attempt to delay racial integration in its public schools.

The court, in a brief order, refused to hear the state's appeal from lower court judgments ordering desegregation of schools in Charlottesville and Arlington. The effect is to leave standing a decision of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals that district court orders for the admission of Negroes to hitherto all-white schools are valid.

The Supreme Court's ruling was unanimous. The order noted, however, that Justice Charles E. Whittaker, who took his seat today, did not participate.

In the Charlottesville case Judge John Paul ordered the schools integrated for the term beginning in September, 1956. Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington elementary schools integrated at the second semester of the 1956-57 terms and high schools with the beginning of the 1957-58 session.

Both orders have been in abeyance, however, because of appeals.

The situation with regard to enforcement of the order remained to be clarified. Officials noted, however, that failure to obey might result in citation of school authorities for contempt.

Although Virginia lost, North Carolina won a temporary victory, at least. The Supreme Court denied a hearing for Negro children who sought immediate admission to a white school in Old Fort, N. C. This left undisturbed a ruling of lower courts that the Negroes must exhaust administrative remedies provided by North Carolina's Pupil Enrollment Act before seeking relief in the Federal courts.

The difference appeared to be that Charlottesville and Arlington officials, in the words of Chief Justice John J. Parker of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, had manifested an "attitude of intransigence" toward compliance with the Supreme Court's 1954 decision outlawing segregation while North Carolina had set up a statutory procedure for determining the rights of Negroes to attend non-segregated schools.

Judge Parker noted that the question of whether the North Carolina procedure had been constitutionally applied was not before his court because the administrative remedy it provided had not been invoked.

Although decided separately, the issues in the Charlottesville and Arlington cases were substantially the same. Judge Parker said that they were:

¶Whether the suits should have been dismissed as suits against the state.

¶Whether the plaintiffs had failed to exhaust administrative remedies.

¶Whether there was abuse of discretion by the district courts in issuing the injunctive orders.

Defines the Actions

Judge Parker held that they were not suits against the state but actions "for the protection of individual rights under the Constitution by enjoining state officers and agencies from taking action beyond the scope of their legal powers."

Virginia argued that school boards in the state had been given corporate powers. Judge Parker said this was no reason why a school board should be exempt from restraint "from unconstitutional action."

"A state can act only through agents; and whether the agent be an individual officer or a corporate agency, it ceases to represent the state when it attempts to use state power in violation of the Constitution and may be enjoined from such unconstitutional action," Judge Parker declared.

In the Arlington case, particularly, J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Attorney General of Virginia, said that the right of a Negro to attend a white school existed, under the Supreme Court's decision. But he said that the Negro child must show that he is fully qualified and desires to attend a particular school; must make these facts known to the school authorities and show that the school and his residence are so located geographically as to make his attendance practical.

There should be no finding of discrimination unless these factors were proved, Mr. Almond maintained. No such proof had been offered, he declared, and therefore the courts had "abused their discretion" in issuing orders restraining the school authorities from refusing admission to Negroes.

Judge Paul, in his decision, pointed out that the Supreme Court's ruling was more than two years old and said the school authorities had admitted that they had taken no steps to comply with it.

Judge Parker held that the school authorities had not admitted that they had taken no steps to comply with it.

Judge Parker held that the school authorities had not acted with the "deliberate speed" demanded by the Supreme Court and that Judge's Paul and Bryan had not abused their discretion in issuing injunctions against the continuation of racial discrimination.

In the North Carolina case Judge Parker also wrote the opinion. He said that "Federal courts should not condone dilatory tactics on the part of state officials in according to citizens of the United States their rights under the Constitution; but it is for the state to prescribe the administrative procedure to be followed so long as this does not violate constitutional requirements." He saw no such violation in the procedure provided by the North Carolina law.

He thus upheld the opinion of Judge Wilson Warlick of the Federal court for the Eastern District of North Carolina.

Parents fighting placement

Afro-American
Testimony Md.

RICHMOND

"We will not sign this paper."

This was the sentiment this week of Richmond parents whose children face expulsion from school if they (the parents) do not authorize the State Board of Pupil Placement to assign their children in to whatever school it designates.

Meetings sprang up all over the city as parents sought to evade signing the paper and still keep their children in school.

THE PUPIL Placement Board, created in the special session of the State Legislature last fall, issued the blanks last week through local school systems, for parents of new children in various schools to sign.

An estimated 6,000 blanks were sent out before the supply was exhausted. Children not "new" in the various schools were considered by the Pupil Placement Law to be "frozen" in their respective schools.

The law specified that school superintendents and boards were divested of their authority to place children — that authority being turned over to the board.

TYPICAL REASONS for the attitudes of the parents are given as:

("I'm not) going to sign away the constitutional rights of my children."

"The Pupil Placement Law has already been called unconstitutional. We (parents) can't give the board the authority to do what the Constitution doesn't authorize it to do."

"If the Pupil Placement Plan was legal, they wouldn't need the signatures of parents—they would just go ahead and place the children anyhow."

JOSEPH BLAND, executive secretary of the State Pupil Placement Board, was contacted Tuesday afternoon by the AFRO and asked why it was necessary for parents to sign the paper. The reply was:

"The state law requires that parents sign this application and they must conform to state law."

Q: "Why does the law require them to sign, if the law is valid, would it not be valid without their signatures?"

A: "It's not a question of validating the law, it's just a question of fulfilling a requirement. It's just something they have to do.

Q: "Why is it, then, necessary to threaten the children with expulsion if the parents do not sign the papers?"

A: "We've found that parents get papers a lot of times to sign and don't return them as they should. I guess this is just a way to get them to sign and return them."

Q: "Is there any remedy or hope for parents who do not sign the paper.?"

Q: "What if they don't sign but still want their children in school?"

A: "You see, one requirement for a child to be in school is to sign this paper. If you don't sign the paper, then your child can't be in school."

Q: "How about the status of the Pupil Placement Law in terms of Judge Hoffman's January decision that the law was unconstitutional on its face?"

(A spokesman for the Pupil Placement Law contended that Judge Hoffman, constituting a one-man court, could not declare a state law unconstitutional. In his ruling however, the judge contended he had sufficient precedent to declare the law unconstitutional "on its face.")

A: "I'm not a lawyer, I don't want to answer that for publication."

MR. BLAND identified the members of the Pupil Placement Board as Beverly Randolph Jr., Richmond attorney; Andrew A. Farley, Danville newsman; and Hugh V. White, Nasemond County (Suffolk) school superintendent.

Contracted at his office, Mr. Randolph declined to discuss the matter.

"The whole thing's been in the papers," he said. "I don't have the thing we issued right here before me and I don't want to trust my memory on it.

"Call Mr. Bland he can tell you all about it."

Assignment Opposition Said Still Developing in Richmond

Washington D.C.
4-16-57

RICHMOND, April 15 (AP)—A group of Negro parents here have retained counsel to fight pupil assignment procedures in some of the city's public schools.

Lee 4-16-57

Their attorney, Oliver W. Hill, said he has advised the parents not to sign the assignment application forms being sent to them.

Hill said they are the parents of some 25 or 30 children living in scattered sections of the city and who are now enrolled. He said if the children are refused admission to school because their parents refuse to sign the forms he will seek court action.

The Pupil Placement Board was given authority to assign certain public school students in the State by the General Assembly last fall.

Integration: Slow Retreat

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.

Virginia's retreat before the forces of public school integration is still as slow and dogged as Lee's at Petersburg—and apparently just as hopeless.

Star 3-31-57

When the Supreme Court last week refused to review lower court decrees directing Arlington and Charlottesville to desegregate, State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., immediately threw into the breach Virginia's pupil placement law to stave off the final day. The law already has been declared unconstitutional by a Federal District Court, but the decision has been appealed to the United States Circuit Court.

It is not generally expected that the law will reach the decision stage of the Supreme Court before 1958—if, of course, the District Court decision is upheld in the Circuit Court.

P.23-A

Under the placement plan, a three-man board is empowered to authorize any pupil transfer. The law was written to permit continued segregation for reasons "other than race."

Upon hearing of the high court's refusal to review the decrees last week, Gov. Thomas B. Stanley repeated what he has said time and again: "Any integration in the public schools of Virginia will destroy our system of public education."

MR. SMOOT'S REVOLT

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.

Segregation Dispute Shakes the Byrd Camp

By MARY LOU WERNER

Virginia's Byrd organization is talking big about Democratic solidarity on the segregation front, but there are rumblings of a revolution in staid old Alexandria.

1,224

The last corner of conservatism in Northern Virginia is the scene of a lively House of Delegates campaign, with a once-loyal Byrd disciple in the forefront of a fight against the determined segregation stand taken by the Old Dominion's senior Senator and his cronies.

Sun. 3-31-57

The renegade Democratic campaigner is Albert A. Smoot. On segregation, his platform sounds as though it might have been written by Republican State Senator Ted Dalton.

Certainly, the State's Democratic leadership is accustomed to noisy opposition from North-side party members—but it doesn't usually come from people like Mr. Smoot. He is an Alexandria businessman, former vice mayor and son of a former mayor.

This is the same Mr. Smoot who led Gov. Stanley's campaign in Alexandria two years ago. That was the year State Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington also sought the nomination. Campaign leaders for Gov. Stanley weren't easy to find in the Arlington Senator's backyard.

Four years ago, Mr. Smoot managed the Alexandria campaign of the mighty man himself, Senator Byrd. Traditionally, he has stood with Senator Byrd, Gov. Stanley and company on the side of conservative democracy in Virginia.

Still an Admirer

In a speech last week, Mr. Smoot commented that he still admired and respected the Berryville apple grower's fiscal views. But the school segregation issue finds Mr. Smoot in the camp of the enemy.

Like Senator Dalton, who is the Republican's favorite choice for Governor, Mr. Smoot advocates a locally administered pupil assignment plan which could result in the admission of some Negro students to white schools. He believes in this way the State can in large measure preserve its customs, and at the same time keep the public schools open.

This approach got a shot in the arm last week when the United States Supreme Court refused to review a segregation case arising in Old Fort, N. C., leaving intact a lower court decree which held that North Carolina's placement plan is constitutional on its face. The North Carolina plan is locally administered, like the program advocated by Mr. Smoot, and there is no fund cut-off legislation in the Tar Heel State like there is in Virginia.

Virginia's placement plan already has been held unconstitutional on its face in a lower court ruling—principally because of the school fund cut-off that automatically occurs whenever integration takes place.

Mr. Smoot is aware that his position on segregation is akin to that of the man the Republicans want to run for Governor. But he isn't the first of the party faithful to rebel in Alexandria. His close friend, State Senator Armistead Boothe, cosponsored local pupil placement legislation with Senator Dalton at the last General Assembly, and has been a leader in advocating that approach to the segregation issue.

Opposes Zealous Segregationist

The man Mr. Smoot is out to defeat in the Democratic primary is the incumbent, Delegate James M. Thomson.

Compared with Mr. Smoot, the incumbent is a real freshman in the Byrd clan. But he has more than compensated for his brief tenure by his zeal for the defiant segregation stand Virginia has taken.

He voted for every bill in the Governor's legislative package to prevent any integration—including the fund cut-off legislation. He sponsored one of the two investigative committees created by the General Assembly to study racial activities and is its chairman.

He is forthright about his determination to fight forever to prevent integration, and bluntly has told "integrationists" to vote for Mr. Smoot.

By Gov. Stanley's definition, Senator Dalton and Mr. Smoot are integrationists. He says the label fits anyone willing to accept the slightest degree of integration.

No one expects the Byrd organization to crumble overnight—least of all in this election year when so much has been done to arouse Virginia's segregation-minded voters. But the revolt of Mr. Smoot indicates that all is not well.

Norfolk to Resist

NORFOLK, Va., March 18 (AP)—Norfolk school officials, attorneys, state legislators and councilmen have agreed on a plan of "operations as usual" for the city's public schools.

Washington Times Herald

At a meeting late last week, it was decided that a plan for integration in the schools will be sought only if there is no other alternative. Meantime, all legal recourses will be employed against a Federal District Court order calling for desegregation of the city's schools starting in September.

The city's General Assembly delegation warned against any formal planning "at this time" that would give the impression Norfolk is ready to integrate. "To consider any moves now," said one legislator, "would touch off a statewide effort to stop Norfolk."

Neff addressed the annual conference here of the Division Superintendents of Virginia.

1500 Applications Are Processed By State's Pupil Placement Board

Post + Times Herald Fri. 4-5-57

Washington, D.C.

RICHMOND, April 4—The State Pupil Placement Board approved today 1500 applications from parents for placement of pupils in Virginia public schools.

This formality was the first such action since the board came into being in late September. Local school boards since then had made temporary placements and the applications approved today continued those placements, with one exception.

The board said the exception involved a white child and did not concern the question of segregation.

In other actions, the board approved the rental of new quarters and employment of two additional persons.

The placement applications approved today represented approximately half those received thus far by the board and came from approximately 25 school divisions scattered over the state.

Differences of opinion exist, however, Neff said, as to how far to go in injuring the schools to prevent any integration.

"Many do not agree," he said, "to the definition of integration as the admission of one or a few colored children in a predominantly white school. In

Ask high court speed integration

Afro-American Baltimore Md. Sat. 3-23-57

WASHINGTON

The U.S. Supreme Court was called upon Monday to urge the school officials of Arlington County and Charlottesville, Va., to take immediate steps leading to the elimination of segregation in the public schools of those areas.

The request was made in two separate briefs filed by attorneys for Clarissa S. Thompson of Arlington County and Doris Marie Allen of Charlottesville.

In the opposition brief filed Monday, NAACP attorneys contended that the high court had already found "that the solution of the problems incidental to desegregation must not diminish the constitutional rights involved."

And it has stated that schools must make a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance with the May 17, 1954 desegregation ruling.

IT FURTHER contended that "The burden rests upon the defendants (school officials) to establish that such (additional) time is necessary in the public interest and is consistent with good faith compliance at the earliest practicable date."

The Arlington County brief contended that the right to be educated in public schools should be determined by criteria other than race.

It further asserted that students should enjoy "their constitutional privilege to freedom from racial classifications and distinctions in assignments to schools and classes."

"Once race is eliminated as a factor determinitive of the school a pupil is to attend, the constitutional issue is resolved . . ." it said.

FOR THESE reasons the attorneys urged the high court to deny petitioners "a writ of certiorari" in these cases.

The NAACP attorneys representing pupils in the Arlington case are Edwin C. Brown, Oliver W. Hill, Robert L. Carter, Thurgood Marshall and Spottswood W. Robinson 3rd.

The same attorneys, with the exception of Brown, are representing pupils in the Charlottesville case with additional counsel of Martin A. Martin, Roland D. Ealey and S. W. Tucker.

VIRGINIA CLERGY AID INTEGRATION

Times P. 39-C Wed. 4-3-57

Limited Survey Shows Many Worshipers Protest, but Later Support Pastors

STANLEY ROWLAND Jr.

A Southern clergyman who works actively for racial integration may keep the support of his congregation in the long run, a study of Protestant clergymen in Virginia has indicated.

The survey found that working for integration provoked death threats and other unpleasantness, including withdrawals of congregation members and of pledges of money. But after a few months, it was found, the money and members usually flow back to the church.

Details of the study, believed to the be first of its kind, were learned yesterday. It was conducted by Dr. James H. Fox, a sociologist at the American University in Washington, under a grant of $3,000 from the Fund for the Republic. It was instigated by churchmen, who believe it will be of considerable help in planning to meet racial problems.

The study was intensive rather than extensive. It was made by Dr. Fox last summer in the Alexandria, Arlington, Lynchburg, Norfolk, Richmond and Roanoke areas. In each place he interviewed clergymen.

Virginia Plan Is Key

To pin down the responses to the general integration matter, a specific issue was chosen—the Gray Plan. That is a Virginia program for pupil assignments and tuition grants for "private" schools. It is one of the measures Virginia adopted to avoid the Supreme Court order to desegregate schools.

The study was made "to determine the factors encouraging or inhibiting the clergy in taking a public stand" on the plan. It also explored what happened to them as a result of their stand.

Twenty-nine who worked in some way against the plan and for integration were threatened from within and without their congregations. Members withdrew from churches and some cancelled pledges, or wrote across them "if this church ever becomes integrated, this pledge is void." Some clergymen were ostracized. A few, not included in the research, were "sent packing."

But after the initial storm was weathered, pledges were renewed and the angry members repented and returned in a month or two. In one case, however, a group set up its own church.

Clergy Groups Aid

Local ministerial associations, often thought to be a relatively "impotent" level of clergy activity, were found to be the greatest source of strength to integrationists. They often persuaded clergymen who had planned to do nothing to work instead for integration.

The survey indicated that a clergyman's denomination was not a "significant factor" in determining his stand. Included in the study were thirty-six clergymen—twelve Protestant Episcopal, ten Methodists, four Presbyterians, three Baptists and seven not classified.

Age, length of service and length of time in Virginia also were found to be relatively insignificant factors. The size of a congregation, however, was a factor.

"The ministers of the congregations larger than 1,000 tend to be more cautious than those of smaller groups," the report said.

Among the clergymen interviewed, fifteen were found to exemplify the active, or prophetic stand. They spoke and worked publicly against the Gray Plan and strongly favored integration.

Fourteen were termed cautious. They generally favored integration, but did not speak publicly for it. Instead, they talked to small groups and set examples of inter-racial Christian fellowship.

Seven clergymen were classified as "inactive." They did nothing and generally opposed the mixing of the races. However, they as well as the others all said integration was inevitable.

Had Members' Support

All the clergymen who took an active role felt that a majority—sometimes only a bare majority—of their congregations were behind them.

The cautious clergymen felt that a majority in their congregations opposed them. They worked quietly and were not sure whether the issue was primarily moral or political.

Many said they were trying to ease tensions within their congregations before taking leadership toward acceptance of integration. They generally agreed that integration should come step by step.

Inactive clergymen were generally supported by their congregations in their acceptance of segregation. They saw the issue as political. There were some suggestions that the "purity of the white race" should be preserved, and occasional imputations that the prophetic clergymen might have been influenced by communism.

Virginia Stands Pat

Newsweek P. 32

Of all the Southern states, Virginia has the most intricate strategy to combat the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation in the public schools.

Virginia has only a slim hope of ultimate victory, but it hopes to delay integration for years, if not for decades, by fighting delaying action after delaying action, falling back from one prepared position to another. The legislature, in a special session last September, passed sixteen anti-integration bills. As soon as the Supreme Court declares one unconstitutional, Virginia plans to put the next into effect.

New York Mon. 4-8-57

Last week, Virginia started the first of the delaying actions. The Supreme Court unanimously refused to review a decision of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals ordering integration in Arlington County and Charlottesville. Promptly Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. warned the Arlington and Charlottesville school boards that under the pupil-assignment law, one of the sixteen, they still cannot integrate. This law strips local school boards of authority to decide which school a child shall attend. It gives that power to a three-man commission whose members were chosen partly because they are fervent segregationalists.

If the Supreme Court holds the pupil-assignment law unconstitutional (a U.S. district judge already has ruled it is), the governor can then personally take over operation of the schools, keeping them segregated, and challenge the Federal government to put a governor in jail. A last-ditch law authorizes the state to cut off financial aid to any school district the moment it begins integration.

Leading Virginia attorneys agree that all sixteen of the delaying-action laws eventually will be declared unconstitutional—but, they point out, eventually can be a long time away.

Boatwright Body Hears Petitioner

Post & Times Herald P. 2-B Thurs. 5-16-57

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., May 15 (AP)—A witness testifying before the Boatwright Committee in a closed session here today said he did not know he was signing a petition to bring a suit against the city School Board.

Robert L. Drakeford, a waiter, told a reporter after testifying before the Committee, that he was told he was signing his name to a list of Negro parents who had children eligible for school.

He said he did not know he was authorizing attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to list him as a plaintiff in the Charlottesville school desegregation case last year.

The Boatwright Committee, officially titled the Committee on Offenses Against the Administration of Justice, is headed by Del. John B. Boatwright of Buckingham. It was set up in the General Assembly last fall to investigate whether desegregation cases had been stirred up and financed by persons not directly involved.

Today's sessions here mark the first time the Committee has traveled outside Richmond to question Negro parents involved in any of the desegregation lawsuits brought in Federal courts against local school boards in Virginia. Fifteen persons, most of them plaintiffs in the Charlottesville school desegregation case here last July, were under subpena order to appear before the Committee here today.

Byrd Racial Views Make Pawns Of School Children, Dalton Says

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C.
Sun. 3-24-57

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

RICHMOND, March 23—Republican Ted Dalton, waded boldly into touchy territory ftoday with a two-fisted attack on the unyeilding racial stand of Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) and the Byrd organization, Virginia's dominant Democratic power.

The Byrd organization was calling on the state's 800,000 school children to bear the brunt of the school desegregation battle, when it threatened to close schools, Dalton charged.

Such "feeble, unthinking" resistance is not resistance but surrender of public education, he said, and "makes hostages out of the little children of Virginia."

He lumped the Byrd organization and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People together for "performing a disservice to Virginians by stirring up this racial problem."

Dalton's forthright stand on the emotional issue surprised many members of his party and the Byrd organization. Observers felt the Republicans would have a hard enough time making headway in tthe forthcoming gubernatorial campaign without opening the door to a group on the racial problem.

But Dalton said Virginians will have to face the issue "and for one stand ready to speak my mind on the subject."

He made his remarks to members of the Republican State Central Committee in a strategy session. In preliminary comments, he told Republican leaders he still was undecided whether to run for Governor, adding "the chances are I will not do so."

Dalton, state senator from Radford, came close to defeating Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, the Byrd organization candidate in 1953.

Dalton virtually eliminated himself from appointment to the Federal District Court in western Virginia by stating a judge should remove himself from the controversy of politics. He added:

"I am not satisfied that I am ready to seek a more peaceful pursuit."

Dalton made it clear he personally preferred segregated schools.

"But it is folly for us to be deluding our people into believing that we are going to get that court to change its decision," he said. "What we need to be doing is to help work out an intelligent approach that will meet the situation in our schools by keeping the white schools as white as possible under law and order—but by all means to keep the public schools open."

Dalton said a pupil assignmen program, which he and Democratic State Sen. Armistead Boothe of Alexandria twice sponsored unsuccessfully, is the only solution "to keep the white schools white under law and order but keep the public schools."

Arlington Candidate Puts Spotlight on Segregation

Star Fri. 5-3-57 P. 3-B
Washington D.C.

The school segregation controversy was assured a place in Arlington's Democratic primary campaign for the House of Delegates last night as one of the five candidates attacked integration as a "Communist Pary dream."

Miss Bety A. Thompson, a newcomer to politics, pitched her campaign squarely on the anti-integration issue in a talk to the Democratic Club of Arlington.

The club also heard the other four Democratic candidates seeking nominations in the July 9 primary for Arlington's three seats in the House of Delegates. They are Mrs. Kathryn H. Stone, Harrison Mann, and William Winston ,all incumbents, and Thomas A. Broyhill.

Miss Thompson, an attorney, said the school-segregation issue is not a "safe" one but is "uppermost in the minds of Arlington County citizens today."

The "clamor" to integrate Arlington schools, Miss Thompson declared, is "a cancer on our body politic." Reading from what she said was a work published in 1912 by "an English Communist" she charged that integration is "a Communist Party dream (which) has become a stark reality just across the Potomac."

Attended Arlington Schools

Miss Thompson said she is "perhaps" the only candidate educated in Arlington public schools. "You can well understand," she declared, "that my interest in and concern for the future welfare of the public schools of Arlington rests on a higher plane than the pseudo-interest and concern of a social welfare worker or international 'do-gooder'."

Miss Thompson denied to a reporter that she was referring to anyone in particular. Mrs. Stone has been an active member of the General Assembly's Welfare Committee and a frequent speaker at gatherings of welfare workers.

Mrs. Stone, seeking her third term as a delegate, attacked the anti-integration legislation passed last year by a special session of the General Assembly as a "Rube Goldberg legislative contraption, erected as a barrier." The special session, she declared, was "heartbreaking, expensive and futile."

The legislation, strongly backed by Gov. Stanley, among other things would deny State funds to localities which integrate their schools.

Mrs. Stone predicted eventual adoption of a "more flexible" solution to the school problem, "possibly with the use of a pupil assignment plan."

Mr. Mann, predicting a "tax crisis" will dominate the next two sessions of the General Assembly, said Virginia is "moving toward adoption" of a sales tax.

Explains Opposition

He has opposed a sales tax, Mr. Mann explained, because proposed versions of it have unfairly benefited rural areas at the expense of urban sections.

A sales tax, he declared, should be enacted in place of some other tax, and only after collection of existing taxes has been tightened.

Mr. Mann promised to work for repeal of "Virginia's antiquated distribution laws" for widows. Specifically he attacked the provision that a widow must pay an inheritance tax on property unless she can produce receipts to prove she owned it jointly with her husband.

Mr. Winston, the third incumbent, called for a "more equitable" distribution of highway funds to the densely traveled Northern Virginia area.

He said the new May 1 date for collecting the income taxes has resulted in a $48.5 million "windfall" for the State to make needed repairs and additions to schools, hospitals and other facilities.

Mr. Broyhill called for an end to the price-fixing powers of the Virginia Milk Commission. The commission, he said, is "a product of the depression (which) has outlived its usefulness."

Mr. Broyhill suggested a proposed mental hospital for Northern Virginia be built in conjunctio nwith an existing local hospital.

Educational Swin

FOR MORE than a quarter of a century, the United States has been wrestling with a shift in the methods and objectives of public school education. So-called "progressive" education has been in the ascendancy, and the emphasis has been less on training in subject matter than on producing happy, well-adjusted citizens.

Now there seems to be a growing movement back toward more emphasis on mastering fundamentals, and toward better discipline. If the pendulum is not allowed to swing too far, this will be a healthy trend.

The idea of turning out young people who are happy and well adjusted to society is basically a good one. But more and more educators and parents have reached the conclusion, in recent years, that over-emphasizing "adjustment" at the expense of sound discipline and training is good neither for the individual pupil nor for society as a whole. There has been increasing dissent, sparked by sharp controversy over Junior's grasp of subject matter and his ability to read and spell.

The subject is complex. The argument cannot be resolved decisively one way or another simply by balancing out what the various groups say.

The old system of rigid drilling and of strict discipline backed by the rod does not fully meet the requirements of our day. Yet it had certain merits which should be preserved. By the same token, "progressive" education that strives toward pupil adjustment, and to some extent plays down the importance of fundamentals, has both good and bad things about it. The minority, and disadvantaged economic groups have not done well under the "progressive" system. That is generally agreed.

Educators must rise above vitriolic defense of this or that view. If they will think solely in terms of what is best for the pupil, we can evolve a system of education that welds the best elements of all systems that have gone before.

Virginia Pupil Placement Law Held Invalid By Federal Judge

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C.

Sat. 1-12-57

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 11 (AP) — Virginia's pupil placement law, designed to maintain the state's traditional system of racially segregated schools, is "unconstitutional on its face," U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman ruled today.

The placement plan, enacted by the State Legislature last year as part of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's "no integration anywhere" program for public schools, provides that pupils shall be assigned to schools by a three-member board. The board's rulings may be appealed to the governor and to the state courts. State funds would be withheld from any integrated schools.

In a 12,000-word opinion, Hoffman reviewed the course taken by Virginia to keep the races in separate schools, and said: "The pattern is plain. The legislature has adopted procedures to defeat" the U.S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in t schools.

Hoffman's opinion was contained in a ruling that denied state motions to dismiss desegregation suits against the city school boards of Norfolk and Newport News. At a hearing on these motions in November, state and local authorities had aruged the pupil placement plan provided administrative remedies which should be exhausted before Negro plaintiffs turn to the federal courts.

Desegregation Suits.

The desegretation suits will be tried in Hoffman's courts in Febuary. His opinion today made it clear the state will have to seek means other than the pupil placement plan if it is to maintain segregated schools.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., said "of course we'll appeal" if Hoffman's final decision in February is returned for the plaintiffs.

Hoffman said in his opinion the legislation setting up the pupil placement plan "is directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court . . . where it is declared 'the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional' and 'all provisions of federal, state or local law requiring or permitting such discrimination must yield to this principle.' "

Governor's Suggestion.

Hoffman's opinion said "Manifestly, the governor of Virginia has suggested that there shall be no integration of races in the public schools of Virginia, irrespective of how slight it may be.

"The question remains: Has Virginia now enacted constitutional act which is non-discriminatory in nature and hence not in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the U.S. Supreme Court. . ?

"I must answer this question in the negative as it is my firm conviction that Chapter 70, known as the pupil placement plan, is unconstitutional on its face."

Hoffman said nothing in his ruling should be construed as granting automatically to the plaintiffs a right to enter schools of their choice. A local school board, e said, may pass on individual applications for transfers and as long as "discrimination solely by reason of race does not appear, tere is no inherent right of any child to attend any particular school in which children of another race are in attendance."

But as long as the school boards maintain an announced policy refusing to consider the applications separately and take no steps toward removing the requirements of segregation in the schools, there appears to be nothing any court may do other than to enjoin the violation of constitutional rights in the operation of schools by the authorities and, in the event of continued violation, proceed by way of contempt."

Virginia's three-man placement board would in theory assign pupils to schools for reasons other than race or color and would consider health, welfare, aptitudes and sociological, psychological and similar "intangible social-scientific factors."

Hoffman's opinion rejected the state's contention a three-judge federal court should be convened.

"There is abundant authority," he said, "to support the view that only a single judge is required to determine these motions to dismiss. . . The mere fact that the issues involve the delicate question of racial problems affords no reason for ordering a three-judge court."

School officials in Norfolk and Newport News declined comment on Hoffman's action.

Court Edict Is Upheld in Arlington School Case

Post + Times Herald P.1 Tues. 1-8-57 Washington, D.C.

Desegregation — Dates Are Set; Placement Law Test Expected Now

Text of decision, Page A12

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld school desegregation decisions against Arlington and Charlottesville yesterday and cleared the way for an early test of Virginia's new pupil placement law.

The three-judge court handed down its decision in Richmond. By affirming lower court decisions, the appeals court ruled, in effect, that Arlington must take steps toward desegregation in elementary schools by Jan. 31 and in high school by next September.

In Charlottesville, desegregation must begin in all grades at once. The decision ordered the school boards to stop assigning pupils according to race, but did not order integration.

A petition for a review of the decision by the Supreme Court could postpone desegregation and such action by the Commonwealth appears likely.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., however, said he would study the appeals court decision and confer with school board attorneys before deciding whether to appeal.

The appeals court decision was unanimous and written by Chief Judge John J. Parker of South Carolina.

He noted Virginia contended the Negro pupils involved in the suits had not actually applied for admission to white schools and were not entitled to relief until they had applied and were refused admission.

"The answer is that in view of the announced policy of the respective school boards any such application to a school other than a segregated school maintained for colored people would have been futile; and equity does not require the doing of a vain thing as a condition for relief," wrote Judge Parker.

He also noted the school boards had taken no steps toward desegregating schools since the 1954 Supreme Court decision, despite repeated demands, stating:

"This was not 'deliberate speed' in complying with the law as laid down by the Supreme Court but was clear manifestation of an attitude of intransigence . . ."

The lower court decrees were handed down on July 31 by Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan in the Arlington case and on July 12 by Judge John Paul in the Charlottesville case.

"The decrees here," wrote Judge Parker, "are not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated."

The decision did not involve directly the State's new assignment plan, which has taken over the assignment of pupils from the local school boards and the district superintendents. The Arlington and Charlottesville cases were decided in lower court before the General Assembly enacted the new law, part of an anti-integration program, in September.

But the new placement law has been made a part of desegregation cases in Norfolk, Newport News and Prince Edward County. The State also made the same points in those cases it made in the Charlottesville and Arlington suits.

Opens Way To Test

Judge Walter E. Hoffman decided to wait until the appeals court ruled on those points before considering the legality of the new law in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. Judge Sterling Hutcheson did the same thing in the Prince Edward case.

Thus, the appeals court decision yesterday clears the way for early decisions on the legality of the pupil placement law.

Last Nov. 17, Judge Hoffman after hearing arguments on the pupil placement law, said: "If I had to rule on it today, I would throw it out the window."

The apeals court decision in the Charlottesville and Arlington cases surprised few people. But school officials in the two communities had no comment.

Emergency school board sessions to discuss the impact of the ruling will be held in the next few days.

Contempt Possibility

Unless the State and school boards appeal to the Supreme Court, the local School Boards will be caught in a dilemma. A spokesman for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which argued the suits, said the Arlington Negro pupils involved undoubtedly will apply to the nearest school for admission at the beginning of the February term.

If the school officials admit them, State funds automatically will be cut off as provided in an amendment to the appropriations act by the General Assembly. The new State Pupil Placement Board, however, could reassign the students—and face possible contempt of court action.

Under State law, the State Pupil Placement Board must assign pupils to maintain an "efficient" school system, and "efficient" is defined as meaning segregated.

Members of the Attorney General's office said they feel any contempt action now would be brought against the State Pupil Placement Board, rather than the local school boards which have no final authority in assignments.

The appeals court mandate—official notification of the decision which is sent to the lower court—will not be issued until Jan. 31.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, who has led Virginia's anti-integration stand, received a copy of the decision but said he would have no immediate comment.

Arlington's Negro student population is about 6 per cent of its total public school students Charlottesville, 23 per cent; Norfolk, 35 per cent; Newport News, 50 per cent and Prince Edward, 56 per cent.

Stanley Group Takes Over

Local School Boards Lose Pupil Assignment Powers

Journal and Guide Sat. 1-12-57 p. 21

Norfolk, Va.

(Editor's Note:—The 130 separate public school boards in Virginia received Wednesday of this week their orders from the Pupil Placement Board under the Stanley Segregation Plan. The telegram from the placement board, and Superintendent Brewbaker's implementing directive to principals are published below.

Until the United States Supreme Court decides the legality of the Stanley laws, already in District Court in the Norfolk and Newport News cases, the 700,000 school children in the State will be placed and replaced by the Nansemond County Superintendent of Schools, a Danville (Va.) newspaper publisher, and a Richmond lawyer.)

The wire from the Placement Board at Room No. 3 in the State Capitol building says:

"Under provisions of Chapter 70, Acts of Assembly, extra session of 1956, effective Dec. 29, 1956, the power of enrollment or placement of pupils in all public schools of Virginia is vested in the Pupil Placement Board. The local school boards and division superintendents are devested of all such powers.

"Within a reasonable time you will be furnished a supply of application forms, placement forms and such other forms and instructions as may be necessary for the proper administration of the act. In the interim, and pending official placement by the Pupil Placement Board, under terms of said statute and such regulations as may be promulgated, the pupils who may be entitled to be placed in school under Section 4 of said act, may, in the discretion of the school board and division superintendent and in conformity with your practices, be permitted to attend school on a temporary basis, subject to placement by this board.

"You will please make proper distribution and publication of this notice."

"To comply with the attached directive from the Pupil Placement Board appointed by the Governor, it will be necessary to have available for use at any time a complete list of all pupils withdrawing or enrolling in Norfolk city schools."

The information that is needed for withdrawing students includes the date of withdrawal, name in full, address, new address, reason for withdrawal and school transferred to (if any). For new enrollees, the information that principals must have on hand is the date enrolled, name in full, previous address, previous address at other school, last school attended and reason for leaving.

Virginia Pupil Plan 'Unconstitutional'

Norfolk, Jan. 11 (AP)—Virginia's pupil placement law, designed to maintain the State's traditional system of racially segregated schools, is "unconstitutional on its face," United States District Judge Walter E. Hoffman ruled today.

The placement plan, enacted by the State Legislature last year as part of Governor Thomas B. Motions To Dismiss Are Denied

Hoffman's opinion was contained in a ruling that denied State motions to dismiss desegregation suits against the City school boards of Norfolk and Newport News. At a hearing on these motions in November, State and local authorities had argued the pupil-placement plan provided administrative remedies which should be exhausted before Negro plaintiffs turn to the federal courts.

The desegregation suits will be tried in Hoffman's courts in February. His opinion today made it clear the State will have to seek means other than the pupil-placement plan if it is to maintain segregated schools.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., said, "Of course we'll appeal" if Hoffman's final decision in February is returned for the plaintiffs.

Hoffman said in his opinion the legislation setting up the public-placement plan "is directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court . . . where it is declared 'the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional' and 'all provisions of U. S., State, or local law requiring or permitting such discrimination must yield to this principle."

Tell Va. Schools To Desegregate

RICHMOND, Va. — (INS) — The Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals last week directed Charlottesville and Arlington counties to desegregate their public schools.

Chronicle

The ruling upheld earlier lower court decisions calling for desegregation by specified dates.

Sat. 1-12-57

Unless an appeal is made to the U. S. Supreme court, the two cities would be obliged to begin school desegregation — Charlotteville immediately and Arlington by January.

Both Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, jr., declined "at this time" to say if they would bring the case before the high court.

The district court was acting on a two year old Supreme court order that Negro leaders claimed the local school boards had done nothing about.

On July 31 a district court ordered all elementary schools in Arlington county desegregated by the end of January, and desegregation of junior and senior high schools by next September.

Sat. 1-12-57

On July 12, the Charlottesville school board was ordered by Fed. Judge John Paul to begin to plan for school desegregation during the past fall. A delay had been granted, however, last August in order to allow the appeal to a higher court.

Negro leaders said the state was not proceeding with "deliberate speed to desegregate as the Supreme court had ordered."

While upholding the Negro protest, the Appeals court, in an opinion written by Judge John J. Parker, said the move was not deliberate "but was a clear manifestation of an attitude of intransigence which justified the issuance of the injunction."

He said it was the school authorities' "obligation under the law" to carry out the integration program.

Virginia Law, Like Southern Pattern, Ruled Invalid

Daily World Sun. 2-14-57

Atlanta Ga.

RICHMOND, Va. — (INS) — The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Saturday declared Virginia's pupil placement law unconstitutional. This law has been passed by many Southern States as a means of circumventing the integration of races in public schools.

The court, handing down its option in Richmond, declared that the law leaves Negroes without legal recourse because of Virginia's unique package plan which would close the schools and withdrew state funds upon integration.

The decision was rendered in desegregation suits against the school systems of Newport News, and Norfolk. In each case, U. S. District Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman ordered the cities to end segregation in schools by August 15.

APPEAL INDICATED

Attorneys for the school board have indicated an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court on the ruling, and have asked the Circuit Court to stay its mandate.

The court said that Virginia's pupil placement law "furnishes no adequate remedy to the plaintiffs because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation ..... and because of the act which provides for the closing of schools and withdrawal of state funds upon any departure from this policy in the schools."

Mother of 2 Refuses To Sign Applications Under Virginia Law

By MARY LOU WERNER

A 9-year-old boy has been dismissed from Hollin Hall Elementary School in Fairfax County because his mother refused to fill out one of Virginia's new pupil placement applications.

The dismissed boy's older brother is due to be ousted from Mount Vernon High School on Friday for the same reason.

Center of Virginia's first pupil placement controversy to result in school expulsion are Nicky De Febio, who was the Hollin Hall student, and his 14-year-old brother Teddy.

They are the same De Febio brothers who were taken away from their parents in North Carolina six years ago because the parents refused to send them to public schools.

Returned Two Years Ago

They were returned to their parents two years ago, and in January were brought by their mother, Mrs. Theo T. De Febio, to live in a little cottage on the banks of the Potomac River at Wellington in Fairfax County.

Mrs. De Febio, a Smith College graduate who drives a taxicab in Washington to support the two boys and a younger son, Carl, said she was anxious for her children to remain in Fairfax County schools but would not sign the placement applications.

She enrolled the boys in Fairfax schools on January 18. That was two weeks after Virginia's new placement law took effect, requiring all new students entering the school system to fill out assignment applications.

Law Adopted Last Fall

This is part of the legislation Virginia adopted last fall to preserve segregated schools. There is no mention of race on the placement application, but if any integration occurs State funds automatically are withheld from the school system involved.

Last month the placement board approved a regulation specifying that the application blanks must be filled in and returned within 15 days after parents receive them. If the blanks are not returned by the deadline, the students are not eligible to remain in school.

The parents of 26 Negro students in Richmond have announced their intention to ignore the placement applications and precipitate a court test of the law. So far, their children have not been sent home from school, however.

Sent Home Last Week

The Fairfax County chool board office said Nicky was sent home from school last Thursday after his mother had been given 15 days to fill out the assignment application. Teddy, who receiveid his application later, is due to be dropped from Mount Vernon High unless his application is returned by Friday.

Mrs. De Febio said her refusal to return the application blanks "is a matter of conscience and morals — the purpose of this placement program is to deny a segment of the American population the right to equal education."

She calls herself an integrationist, but says she does not belong to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People "or any other organization for that matter—Iam anti-organization."

Objects To Pressure

"I didn't object to putting my sons into segregated schools," she declared, "but I object to being pressured by the South into going along with their views —and that's what they were trying to do by telling me I had to sign those papers."

Mrs. DeFebio said she did not seek to impose her views on anyone else, and wanted the same treatment in return.

She also called the placement application "arbitrary and capricious — I believe that's the proper legal definition" because they asked the same information she had supplied when the boys first were placed in school.

"Even people who believe in segregation ought to get excited about this placement law," said Mrs. De Febio. "If they say assignments aren't made by race, perhaps they'll make them according to economic standing—it's conceivable they might refuse to let my sons attend a certain school because I'm a taxicab driver."

North Carolina Challenge

Mrs. De Febio and her husband, Frank, refused to register their children in North Carolina schools because they wanted to teach them at home. Their challenge of the State's compulsory attendance law won national attention. The State Supreme Court finally upheld the welfare department's right to take the children away from their parents, and they remained in the welfare department's care until 1954.

Mrs. DeFebio said the children were returned to her after she agreed to see that they attended school.

"I admit now that they should go to school, and I want them to stay in school," said Mrs. DeFebio. "I can't work and educate them, too."

She said she was pleased with the education her boys were getting in Fairfax County schools.

Hits 'Emphasis on Parties'

"There are still some things I object to in public schools," she commented. "One trouble is the emphasis on parties and getting along in crowds. I believe children also need training in how to get along with themselves. But these are things I can teach the boys at home."

Nicky liked school and was fond of his teacher. He keeps busy around the house and in the garden the boys have planted, but he would like to return to class.

Mrs. DeFebio said she stopped by a county branch library yesterday and tried to check out books used by Nicky's fourth-grade class.

"The librarian told me the school superintendent didn't let them keep school books because some parents are too anxious to push their children ahead," she declared.

A spokesman for the school board office said they knew of no such regulation, but acknowledged that Mrs. DeFebio had been required to turn in Nicky's school books.

Teddy also likes school. He started poring over his homework as soon as he returned home from school yesterday.

"Too Much Homework"

"We have too much homework, but I do want to stay in school," said Teddy. He particularly enjoys science.

Mrs. De Febio said: "Teddy takes care of the younger boys at night while I work. We all help each other in this family. On Saturdays we shop together at the K Street Market in Washington. We went to the Shrine Circus together last Saturday."

Mrs. De Febio is not sure what to do next to get her sons back in school, or what might be done to her.

She had planned to keep the boys here with her until summer vacation, when she is going to send them back to North Carolina to stay with their father. Mr. DeFebio is still living in an old lighthouse on the coast of North Carolina. Mrs. DeFebio lives here because she can better earn a living driving a taxicab in Washington, she said.

Mrs. DeFebio said her husband served a prison term during World War II because he refused to go into the service. She said she and her husband both were conscientious objectors.

Prejudice First?

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C.

The case of the De Febio children in Fairfax County affords a real test of whether Governor Stanley's administration believes in the public schools. Mrs. Theo De Febio has refused to sign the pupil placements applications required for new students in Virginia under the elaborate Stanley plan for evading the Supreme Court school desegregation decision. (There are ways in which a pupil assignment plan could be carried out constitutionally, as in North Carolina; but the Stanley plan does not afford one of them.) For Mrs. De Febio's qualms of conscience one of her children already has been expelled and another may be expelled shortly. This seems a particularly heartless example of a penalty wreaked on the child for the conviction of the parent.

But there is a deeper consideration as the matter is referred to Richmond. The issue actually is between compliance with the Stanley plan and compliance with Virginia's compulsory attendance law. Mrs. De Febio scarcely can be prosecuted under the compulsory attendance law, as Fairfax Commonwealth's Attorney Robert Fitzgerald has acknowledged, when she wants her children to go to school. What then is to yield? Is the compulsory attendance law to be evaded so as to carry out the Stanley plan—which was cynically advertised as a device to keep the public schools open? If so it will be clear proof that Governor Stanley values prejudice above public education.

Arlington Schools Hit Segregation Threat

Arlington Is Told Integration Will Close Schools

Star P. 1 Thurs. 5-9-57 Washington, D.C.

Stanley Says State Will Invoke Law Against 2 Cities

RICHMOND, May 9 (Special).—Gov. Stanley yesterday cautioned Arlington and Charlottesville to maintain segregated schools, or the State will invoke new legislation automatically closing integrated schools and withdrawing financial support.

His comments at a press conference were the first on the Arlington and Charlottesville situations since the Supreme Court upheld lower court orders directing the two communities to desegregate schools next fall.

A reporter asked what advice he had to offer the two communities.

"The only advice I could give them is to use every power of persuasion they have against integration," replied the Governor. "If this fails we will have to use the other legislation enacted by the General Assembly."

Would Close Schools

The "other legislation" he mentioned includes one law which automatically closes the schools when integration occurs. The Governor steps in and tries to reorganize the school on a segregated basis. The local governing body can ask the Governor to step out and reopen the affected school, but State school funds will be withdrawn from the locality if the school is reopened on an integrated basis.

If nothing can be worked out with these laws, the Governor said "we would have to go to the tuition grant bill," the Associated Press reported.

The State has appropriated $2 million to pay tuition grants for the private education of children wherever public schools are closed, and wherever parents object their children attending integrated schools which may be operated by the localities without State aid.

Almond Urges Determination

Meanwhile, Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., last night called on Virginians for "rigid and unyielding determination in fighting to preserve the Constitution of the United States."

Mr. Almond, who is seeking the Democratic gubernatorial nomination in the July 9 primary, spoke at a meeting of the Old Dominion Young Democratic Club in Richmond.

He told the Young Democrats the members of the United States Supreme Court "don't read the Constitution of the United States."

The Attorney General cited the Federal court's April 29 decision in the Girard College case. The court ruled out racial segregation in the Philadelphia school, which for 109 years has admitted only "poor white male orphans" as specified in the will of the school's founder.

Mr. Almond said the Federal court saw that if it upheld the segregation provision of the will, the court "would weaken cases in Prince Edward" as well as other Virginia cases.

Placing Power In State's Hands, Officials Contend

Post

The Arlington school administration is of the opinion that Gov. Stanley is aiming his segregation-or-else gun in the wrong direction.

The full legal responsibility for handling the classroom racial problem rests squarely on the State, not on local officials, a spokesman said.

The Governor this week warned Arlington and Charlottesville to use every power of persuasion to keep schools segregated.

If persuasion fails, the Governor said, "we will have to use other legislation enacted by the General Assembly." The other legislation includes laws that would close individual schools whenever integration occurs and withhold State funds from localities that choose to reopen schools on an integrated basis.

The Supreme Court has upheld lower court orders that these two communities begin desegregation. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has indicated that it will press for integrated classrooms this fall.

Authority Provided

The measures which Gov. Stanley said would follow if Arlington or Charlottesville fails to maintain racially segregated schools were authorized by the General Assembly at its September special session. A key item in the Stanley-sponsored package of bills gave pupil assignment authority to a three-member State board.

At a press conference on Wednesday, Gov. Stanley advised the two communities to "use every power of persuasion they have against integration."

Asked to comment, an Arlington school administration spokesman, Assistant Supt. Charles J. Walsh, pointed out that the State Pupil Placement Board, not Arlington, now has the job of assigning the students.

Part of State System

Mr. Walsh said:

"The Arlington schools are a part of the State school system. The assigning of children to particular schools is now completely in the hands of the Virginia Pupil Placement Board and we are given no responsibility with regard to that."

School Board Chairman L. Clark Keating had no comment on the Governor's statement. County school officials have repeatedly stated that they are prepared to follow the legal moves set forth by Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr.

If State funds are withheld, Arlington would lose an estimated $1.4 million during the forthcoming fiscal year. The county's total proposed school budget next year is $10.9 million.

Sees Misinterpretation

Delegate James M. Thomson of Alexandria, a staunch supporter of Gov. Stanley's no-integration program, said the Governor's remarks had been misinterpreted and declared no children would lose out on education.

He acknowledged one of the bills adopted by the Virginia General Assembly last fall permits the Governor to close schools, or classrooms, whenever integration occurs, but said the students could be reassigned to other schools immediately.

He said this arrangement could go on indefinitely, with schools or classrooms closing each time integration occurs, and children being transferred to other schools. The closed schools could be reopened later on a segregated basis, he said.

A locality can ask the Governor to step out and leave a school alone, but if the school is operated on an integrated basis the locality will lose its State school funds. Mr. Thomson said the fund-withholding law is automatic, and does not depend on any action by the Governor.

State Called Top Integration Goal

Washington Post and Times Herald

RICHMOND, March 18 (AP)—Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) said today that Virginia has become the leading target of forces seeking integration.

Byrd said the Federal Government and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) mean to "try to bring Virginia to her knees first."

"I think it's time all the Virginia people know—if they don't already kno wit—that they are going to try to break us down first in the South," Byrd said.

Washington D.C.

Byrd said that nowhere else in the South are integration forces resorting to measures as drastic as those they are bringing to bear in Virginia.

"They're making the drive on us first," he said. "They want to break us down first because of our prestige and leadership with the rest of the South."

He urged Virginia to continue a course of "massive resistance" and commended Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and the supporters of the Governor's "no integration" program in the General Assembly.

Virginia Official Is Promoted By Gov. Stanley

Washington D.C.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley promoted Davis Y. Paschall to State Superintendent of Public Instruction yesterday.

Paschall

He said he chose Paschall as the best person qualified to stress the teaching of fundamentals in Virginia's public school system, to administer the growing finances of the system and to carry out provisions of State laws on education.

The Governor said he "thinks" the new superintendent approves of Virginia's anti-integration program enacted by the General Assembly last September.

14d(1)

Paschall said he did not wish to express himself on that subject directly, but issued a statement he called a "guidepost."

He said he was "overwhelmed by a deep sense of humility" and paid high tribute to the man he succeeds, Dowell J. Howard, who died from a heart attack on Feb. 23.

Paschall said he subscribed to Howard's belief in constant stress upon fundamentals in education but added a continuous search for the most effective system of education was necessary.

Praising Virginia's present system and its teachers, he said: "I feel, however, what is being done can always be improved."

He spoke of present "crucial times," adding that the presence of deep and complex problems "are all the more reason to face them with intelligent study and avoid hasty decisions."

Paschall, 46, has been Director of Teacher Education in the State Department of Education. His appointment to the $14,850 post of Superintendent came as no surprise.

The successor to Howard had been narrowed down to Paschall and Ray E. Reid, Assistant Superintendent who was appointed Acting Superintendent upon Howard's death.

Paschall was strongly endorsed by pro-segregationist Southside Virginia legislators, including State Sen. Garland Gray of Waverly. Paschall and Reid were interviewed at length by the Governor last Friday.

Supreme Court Rejects Virginia Integration Plea

8-0 Decision Hits 'Massive Resistance'

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Times 3-26-57

WASHINGTON, March 25 (AP)—The Supreme Court today dealt a blow to Virginia's policy of "massive resistance" to racial integration in its public schools.

With a minimum of words, the court rejected 8-0 Virginia's appeals from orders of lower federal courts enjoining enforcement of racial segregation in Charlottesville and Arlington County.

Treating the appeals as routinely as possible, the court grouped them with 23 others in its list of orders and merely said as to all of them: "The petitions for writs of certiorari in these cases are severally denied."

EMPHASIZES POLICY

Charlottesville, in the central part of the state, is the seat of the University of Virginia. Arlington County, just across the Potomac River from Washington, is populated heavily by government workers and service personnel.

The court emphasized again its policy of giving lower courts wide discretion in bringing about desegregation "with all deliberate speed," as ordered in May 1955.

It did so by refusing to review orders of lower courts denying immediate admission of Negro children in Old Fort, N. C., to a white school.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, now a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Virginia, carried the Charlottesville and Arlington appeals to the Supreme Court.

JUDGES UPHELD

In both cases the U. S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit (Maryland, Virginia, the Carolinas and West Virginia) affirmed orders of district judges directing the ending of segregation.

Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington elementary schools desegregated as of last Jan. 31 and high schools by next September. Judge John Paul ordered Charlottesville schools desegregated as of last September. Both these orders have been held in abeyance pending the exhaustion of appeals procedures.

Virginia now has 25 days in which to petition the Supreme Court to reconsider its today's refusal to review the two cases. Ultimately they will have to go back to the district judges for them to set new deadlines.

Almond questioned, among other things, the power of a federal district court to enjoin a local school board, an agency of Virginia, without the state's consent to be sued. He also contended the Negro pupils had not exhausted state administrative remedies before going to federal courts, and said Judges Bryan and Paul abused their discretion.

In affirming the rulings of the two district judges, the court of appeals said the orders of the district judges "are not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated."

The appellate court commented that "despite repeated demands upon them," the Charlottesville and Arlington boards of education had taken no steps towards removing the requirement of segregation in the schools. This, the court said, was not "deliberate speed" in complying with the law as laid down by the Supreme Court "but was clear manifestation of an attitude of intransigence."

Advertiser

The appellate court noted that a series of Virginia laws designed to stave off any integration had not become effective at the time the two cases were decided. The laws provide machinery for placing students in schools and the cutting off of state aid to any school which integrates.

P2-A

Virginia's political leaders, headed by Democratic Sen. Harry F. Byrd, have laid down a policy which they call "massive resistance."

Times 3-26-57

In the Old Fort, N.C., case, counsel for Negro pupils appealed to the Supreme Court after the Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit said parents of the children had not used all administrative remedies provided by the North Carolina Pupil Enrollment Act.

The appellate court said federal courts should not condone "dilatory tactics or evasion" on the part of state officials," but added it is for the state to prescribe the administrative procedures to be followed "so long as this does not violate constitutional requirements."

Officials in Arlington declined to comment on today's decision. L. Clark Keating, chairman of the Arlington County School Board, said the decision will be discussed with attorneys at a meeting next Thursday night.

In other actions today the Supreme Court:

1. Set aside 6-1 a Chicago narcotics conviction because the identity of a "John Doe" informant was kept secret.

The majority ruled that where the disclosure of an informer's identity is relevant and helpful to the defense of an accused, or is essential to a fair determination of a cause, the privilege (of secrecy) must give way."

2. Denied Joseph D. Nunan Jr., former U. S. commissioner of internal revenue, a review of his conviction for income tax evasion for the years 1946 through 1950.

3. Curtailed 6-2, the power of states to act in labor disputes over which the National Labor Relations Board has refused to take jurisdiction.

4. Ruled 8-0 that the Railway Labor Act permits issuance of injunctions against strikes by railroad workers, despite restrictions in the Norris-La Guardia Act against such bans.

5. Agreed to review a decision holding unlawful the "dual rate" system now used by scores of steamship operator groups.

6. Agreed to review a decision that an employer may insist in collective bargaining on a provision banning strikes without secret ballots of union and nonunion employes.

Byrd Exhorts Virginians to Keep Fighting Integration

Tues. 3-19-57

RICHMOND, Va., March 18 (UP)—Senator Harry F. Byrd called on Virginians today to continue "massive resistance" against integration.

The Virginia Democrat told the Richmond Kiwanis Club that integration forces had picked Virginia as the prime target and that continued resistance was needed.

New York

"They're trying to break us first because of our prestige with the rest of the South," Senator Byrd said. While he urged the state to continue its resistance" to integration efforts he emphasized that he did not want to see a "single act of personal violence to mar Virginia's record."

"If we show the proper fortitude," Mr. Byrd said, the justices of the Supreme Court may "have good cause to reverse themselves again * * * and may recognize they have started something they can't finish."

Stanley and Dalton Swap Barbs Over School Segregation

Governor Dares GOP Chief to Run On Platform Backing Integration

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

An irritated Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and a goading Ted Dalton clashed yesterday over Virginia's stand on school desegregation. Stanley challenged Dalton to run for Governor on a platform of accepting integration.

Dalton snapped back that he would take Stanley's dare "under advisement—but his wishes will not weigh too heavily in my decision."

Stanley started the exchange by replying to Dalton's charges last weekend that the Byrd organization, by threatening to close down public schools rather than permit any integration, was making school children bear the brunt of the problem.

In his statement, Stanley said Dalton's position in keeping public schools open in any event was subject to only one interpretation: "He (Dalton) is willing to accept integration in the public schools."

Backs Byrd Policy

Stanley reiterated his support of the massive resistance policy of Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.): "To continue segregated schools under our constitutional rights as a sovereign state, which means to keep white schools white and Negro schools Negro."

He added: "My interpretation is that you are an integrationist if you are willing to accept any integration, and that you are not if you are unwilling to accept any."

Dalton, who previously has said he expected to be labeled an "integrationist" by the Byrd organization, came right back at Stanley.

"Nobody writes a platform for me, least of all Gov. Stanley who, in his first day in office, violated a solemn campaign pledge that he would not seek an increase in the gasoline tax."

Dalton said that, if he did run, it would be on a plank of fighting integration—"a course which Gov. Stanley and the Democratic leadership have failed to do in their school program. Their policy is one of feeble surrender, not resistance."

Cites North Carolina

Virginia's "Mr. Republican" again stated the state's best way of meeting the problem was enactment of an acceptable pupil assignment plan, and here Dalton threw another barb into Democratic leadership:

"Our neighbors to the south, North Carolina, have stolen the march on Virginia. Their pupil assignment plan on Monday was upheld by the Supreme Court, whereas Virginia lost again in the Arlington and Charlottesville cases . . . I can understand how Gov. (Luther) Hodges and the North Carolina officials are happy over the outcome of their case, and I can see how they must feel sorry for Virginia leadership in Virginia's program which is leading to chaos."

To what extent has the Deep South succeeded in nullifying the Supreme Court's school integration edict? Alfred Friendly, managing editor of The Washington Post, has just completed an on-the-scene analysis of this and related questions. His series begins Sunday in the Outlook Section.

Arlington's School Case Up to State

Post + Times Herald Wed. 3-27-57

Washington, D.C.

RICHMOND, March 26 (AP) Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. said today he has told Arlington County school officials they are powerless to assign pupils and must leave this function to the State Pupil Placement Board.

His advice to Arlington followed yesterday's United States Supreme Court decision which declined to review desegregation orders against both Arlington and Charlottesville.

Almond said he had given this opinion to Frank L. Ball and James H. Simmonds, counsel for the school board, and that they agreed with his views. They told Almond they would so advise the school board and School Supt. T. Edward Rutter.

Almond said he would give the same advice to the Charlottesville school board and superintendent, subject to talks with former Gov. John S. Battle. Battle is counsel for the Charlottesville board.

The Arlington board is scheduled to meet with its attorneys Thursday night to consider the Supreme Court's ruling.

The decision from the high court will be relayed to the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals here and then to Federal Judge John Paul of the Western District of Virginia and Judge Albert V. Bryan of the Eastern District, who made the original decisions.

Neff Sees Issue Of Segregation As School Peril

Star P.3-B Wed. 4-17-57

Washington D.C.

ROANOKE, April 17 (AP).—The greatest danger to the school system in Virginia, William N. Neff of Abingdon said yesterday, is the issue of segregation.

Mr. Neff is president of the Virginia Board of Education. Addressing members of the Virginia Superintendents of Schools at a three-day professional workshop, he said: "The greatest majority of our people, I believe, are strongly opposed to integration of schools.

"We can only hope that Federal judges will give due consideration to this massive and deep-seated opposition to any mixing of the races."

Mr. Neff commented there are different shades of opinion on what amount of integration would justify injuring the schools in the State.

"Many do not agree," he said, "to the definition of integration as the admission of one or a few colored children in a predominantly white school. In areas of small colored population this is not felt to be a problem of sufficient importance to justify closing schools."

Mr. Neff said patience and respect for opinions of others must be educated. He urged each section to exercise toleration and understanding for the feelings and problems of others.

"In future actions, which must be taken, no section or group should seek to impose on others a course of action which it regards as harmful to its own vital interests," he advised.

Court Sets School Bias Deadline

Newport News Has Until Aug. 15

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Feb. 11 (AP).—Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman Monday ordered complete desegration of Newport News' school system by Aug. 15.

Judge Hoffman, hearing a desegregation suit against the school board here, said: "We might as well get merrily on our way. I see no reason for postponement." He said he would submit a written decree next week. The judge called on "all sensible people to uphold the law of the land."

He said it appeared that Newport News school officials were "caught in a vise" between the state and Federal laws. He said he had seen no evidence of a start toward integration in Newport News, and added that had there been, he might have been more lenient.

State and local attorneys made no mention of an appeal, but they had said they would appeal if Judge Hoffman ruled against them.

It was Judge Hoffman who last month knocked down Virginia's pupil placement plan, calling it "unconstitutional on its face." Monday's hearing was of a suit filed by local Negroes.

Virginia Asks Reversal

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11 (AP). — The state of Virginia asked the Supreme Court Monday to reverse lower court orders desegregating schools in the city of Charlottesville and Arlington County.

State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond jr. argued that local school boards cannot be sued without the consent of the state since they are state agencies.

Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan of Alexandria, Va., originally ordered desegregation of elementary schools in Arlington County, adjacent to Washington, on Jan. 31, 1957. Junior and senior high schools were to be desegregated by September. This suit was brought by a group of Negroes and whites.

The Charlottesville desegregation order was handed down by Federal Judge John Paul Aug. 6. It was to have been effective at the beginning of the school term in September.

Mr. Almond said complainants in both cases did not exhaust their administrative remedies before going to court.

Plenty of Obstacles Cited

Nearby Educators Take a Dim View Of Governor's 12-Month School Idea

Post and Times Herald Wed. 3-19-57, Washington, D.C.

Nearby Virginia school officials cited summer heat, conflicting vacations, wear and tear on teachers and cumbersome administration yesterday as obstacles to year-round use of schools.

They were commenting on a proposal by Gov. Thomas B. Stanley to operate schools 12 months on a quarterly basis, allowing beginners to start at any one of four different times a year.

Stanley said yesterday that a suggested study by the State Board of Education of his proposal "seems to be a very wise plan." The plan was advanced to relieve overcrowding in schools without new construction.

T. Edward Rutter, Arlington County School Superintendent, said that in communities where it has been tried, year-round use has created a real problem in families with several children who have staggered vacations.

Rutter said it woud be difficult to get teachers for such a program. The teachers couldn't take 12 months of teaching in an elementary school, he said.

Irvin H. Schmitt, Superintendent of Falls Church Schools, said that it would be difficult to operate the schools in the area because of the summer heat. Without air conditioning, the classrooms would be stifling, he said.

Schmitt also anticipated objections from working parents, who would have major adjustments to make in their households if children were attending schools during different times of the year. He said it would be difficult for teachers to attend summer school for work on advanced degrees.

T. C. Williams, Superintendent of Alexandria Schools, said six or seven areas in the country have tried such a program. The program seems theoretically good, Williams explained, but has been found too cumbersome to manage. It quadruples the difficulties in administration of the school as to enrollment, graduation and the like, he said.

Fairfax School Board member C. T. Hudgins said a careful study would have to be made to determine whether higher school maintenance costs would equal the savings in space. Williams also mentioned that areas that have tried the program have found that it is not always economical.

Schools Chief Sees Job Grow

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. 1, 9-A Mon. 3-11-57

By Muriel Guinn
Staff Reporter

For nearly three decades Fairfax County school children have been guided by a mild-mannered man who believes in progress but sticks strictly to the middle of the road.

Their pilot is silver-haired Wilbur T. Woodson, dean of school superintendents in the Washington area. In 28 years as a superintendent he has seen Fairfax County change from a region of one-room rural schools sprinkled among farms to a sprawling, modernized system which is one of the largest in Virginia.

Woodson last week was appointed by the School Board to serve an eighth consecutive term as superintendent of county schools. He approaches it knowing that headaches brought on by the county's startling growth probably will continue.

Room for More

"After all," he says, "the county has the land for a bigger population."

Woodson is tall, wears a brush haircut and speaks with a slight drawl. He is a Baptist, a 32d-degree Mason, a Rotarian and a member of numerous educational organizations.

In 1925 he became Fairfax Supervisor and Clerk of the School Board. Four years later he became superintendent.

In those days the county had 64 school buildings. But 30 were one-room schools and 15 had only two rooms. Many had outhouses. Most had a solitary pump for drinking water. There were 168 teachers and enrollment was 4742, but only 79 per cent of the pupils attended class. The average teacher's salary was $779 a year, and on this score the county ranked 18th in the state.

The first thing Woodson did was order attendance records. The next thing he developed was a teachers' salary scale with provision for sick leave.

Consolidations

At that time, any building with a Bunsen burner was a high school, and usually the upper grades were tacked onto elementary schools. A major step during the 1930s was consolidation of the 12 scattered high schools into four centers at Herndon, Fairfax, Falls Church and Lee-Jackson, which eventually became Mt. Vernon.

On this consolidation, Woodson was fought bitterly by conservatives. Parents complained that their children would be killed traveling to and from school on buses. They argued that community spirit would be damaged if the students went to high school some miles way.

Woodson carried consolidation into elementary schools. By 1940 all one- and two-room white schools had been consolidated into larger plants and consolidation of Negro schools started.

Growing Pains

Heavy growth began in the county about 1945. In the next five years, enrollment doubled.

The darkest years were 1951 and 1952. At that time roughly half the school population was on double shifts or in temporary quarters.

Asked if instruction hasn't had to lag behind construction, Woodson said no. As new plants are provided, the teaching program is broadened to make use of the facilities, he said.

Woodson stresses the basic fundamentals of reading, writing, arithmetic and spelling. He fosters classroom competition and grade level standards of accomplishment. He says that Fairfax teachers "recognize individual differences in their students and undertake to meet them."

The superintendent is willing to try new things but never to plunge. In recent months, the School Board has sought new ways of housing the annual influx of 5000 children—with specially built trailers and other inovations. Woodson urged a modest experiment first. The Board listened and took his advice.

The superintendent and his wife live in Fairfax. He is the father of two sons and a daughter.

Court Upholds Negro Parents In School Case

Star 1-21-57

RICHMOND, Jan. 21 (AP).—The State Supreme Court ruled today that a group of King William County Negro parents could not be punished for failure to send their children to an inferior segregated school.

The seven-man tribunal overturned a lower, circuit court decision which convicted the parents of violating the compulsory attendance law.

The high court said it has long been an established principle of law that the refusal to provide equal educational opportunities and advantages to members of one race constitutes a violation of the United States constitution.

The case developed in 1952 when the Beverly Allen School for Negroes was closed at West Point and the pupils were transferred to the Hamilton Holmes High School 18 miles away in King William County.

Balked at Arrangement

Parents of some of the pupils balked at the arrangement and refused to send their children to Holmes. They petitioned for admission to the West Point white school, but the move was rejected.

When the parents kept their children out of school, authorities brought suit in the circuit court and the parent were convicted of disregarding the compulsory attendance law.

In overturning the lower court, the Supreme Court said the requirement that the children be sent to a school of "materially poorer facilities and educational advantages on penalty of prosecution" was an unlawful application of the attendance law and a denial of the constitutional guarantee for equal protection of the law.

Law Called Settled

The opinion added:

"It has long been settled law that the refusal of a State agency to afford members of one race solely because of their race educational facilities and advantages substantially equal to those afforded persons of any other race is a denial of the equal protection of the law, being violative of the 14th amendment."

The court reaffirmed the constitutionality of the school attendance law, but added:

"Here, however, the section has been unconstitutionally applied. Application of a criminal statute so that it brings about or results in inequality of treatment to the two races is not justified."

The high court had the case under consideration for more than a year.

On February 5, 1953, the King William Circuit Court convicted James Dobbins of failing to send a child to school, fined him $50 and sentenced him to jail for 30 days.

'Mixing' Orders Final For 2 Virginia Schools

Tues, 3-26-57 Memphis Tenn.

Washington, March 25 (UP)—The Supreme Court today refused to interfere with lower-court orders to desegregate public schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County, Virginia.

The refusal, contained in a brief order, meant that the lower-court integration orders are final. Their effectiveness had been postponed, pending the outcome of the appeal.

The Supreme Court, however, also refused to examine an appeal by Negro parents in Old Fort, N. C., who sought to have their children admitted to a white school.

The ruling left standing a United States Circuit Court of Appeals decision that the Negro parents had not actually presented their children for admission to the white school, as required by North Carolina's Pupil Enrollment Act.

As a result of the suits, Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered integration of Arlington's elementary schools by last January 31 and of junior- and senior-high schools by next September.

Whittaker Sworn In

In Charlottesville, Chief Judge John Paul ordered a start toward integration in all grades last September. The suits ultimately must go back to the district judges for them to set new deadlines.

Before handing down its rulings, the high court brought itself to full strength by swearing in its new member, Justice Charles Evans Whittaker of Kansas City. Whittaker, a Republican, succeeds retired Justice Stanley F. Reed.

Denies Hearing to Nunan

In other actions today, the court:

1. Denied a hearing to former Internal Revenue Commissioner Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., who was convicted of attempting to evade more than $91,000 of his own taxes. Nunan was sentenced to a five-year prison term and fined $15,000.

2. Ruled, 6 to 2, that certain labor cases the National Labor Relations Board has declined to handle are also outside the jurisdiction of State agencies. The court held that Congress must decide by legislation what should be done about these "twilight-zone" cases.

Superintendent W. T. Woodson of Fairfax County schools is shown as he presented a Voice of America speaking contest award to Beverly McKinney, Annandale High, in 1955.

3. Ruled, 8 to 0, that railroad strikes over minor grievances pending before the National Railroad Adjustment Board are illegal. The court held that the Railway Labor Act bans strikes over disputes pending before the board.

4. Ruled, 6 to 1, that the Government cannot keep secret the identity of an undercover informer if that identity becomes "relevant and helpful" to a defendant in a criminal trial. The decision overturned the narcotics-law conviction of a Chicagoan who protested a "John Doe" informant was neither identified nor called to testify at his trial.

Seeds of destruction

(AN EDITORIAL)

The action of the Supreme Court in killing the Virginia Pupil Placement Act virtually declaring it unconstitutional, drives another nail in the coffin of the Old Dominion "massive resistance" program.

The action leaves the politicians of that state more naked than they were before candidates in the coming gubernatorial race put all their eggs in one basket, trying to outdo each other in their promises to enforce a plan, which has now been ruled unlawful.

That the plan was unconstitutional was apparent even to a layman.

It was nothing more than a subterfuge to avoid carrying out either the letter or spirit of the high court's 1954 desegregation ruling.

The segregationists apparently haven't the wit to see, that as fast as they devise techniques to circumvent the law of the land, they will be knocked down, because they are not designed to carry their state in the direction that the rest of the nation is going.

These legal excursions are costly financially and spiritually, and out of line with trends in the world today.

At best, these can be little more than delaying tactics, which simply raise false hopes and keep the children and parents of both races off balance, wasting the lives and energies of a whole generation which could be put to much better use.

Whether Virginia likes it or not, the darker peoples seek a place in the sun and America must learn to respect them on a basis of equality, if our nation hopes to command the moral leadership of the world.

The place to cultivate this tolerance is in the schools, where all children learn to study and play together.

Such ideas will prove a distinct handicap in later life when Americans are forced to match wits with other people of the world.

They will be half beaten before they enter the battle ring because they will be disarmed by their own false notions of superiority.

It would be good for all concerned for white youths to enter competition with colored children at the grade school level so that these mistaken ideas will not become entrenched, and handicap them throughout later life.

This is the tragedy of the resistance movement being carried on by the segregationists. Today it is a costly luxury. Tomorrow, with the future of the nation at stake, it will prove a calamity.

By propagating ignorance, the inept leaders are sowing the seeds of national destruction.

WOMAN LOSES CASE IN VIRGINIA

Sons Will Not Be Able to Attend Schools

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 2 (AP)—A white woman who declined to sign application forms under the Virginia pupil placement act today, lost her bid before the state supreme court of appeals for an order readmitting her two sons to Fairfax county public schools.

In denying Mrs. Theo Defebio a writ of mandamus, the court did not pass upon the constitutionality of the pro-segregation statute on the apparent grounds that no racial issue was involved.

The court said: "It is a fundamental principle of constitutional law, formally supported by both federal and state authorities, that a person who challenges the constitutionality of a state statute has the burden of proving that he has been injured or is threatened with injury by its enforcement."

Mrs. Defebio's sons, Theodore, 14, and Dominick, 9, were expelled because she refused to sign the forms necessary for all new and transfer students, regardless of race, under the placement law. Mrs. Defebio charged the law was unconstitutional in her court petition.

The act has been nullified for purposes of racial segregation in an opinion by the U. S. 4th circuit court of appeals, which the U. S. supreme court declined to review.

The state supreme court said the issue in the Defebio case "is quite narrow. It involves no broad constitutional question of racial discrimination."

Commenting on the decision Virginia Atty. Gen. Kenneth C. Patty said that while the court did not rule on whether the act violates the 14th amendment of the federal constitution it did rule the act is valid under the Virginia constitution.

"This settles the question as to the right of the general assembly to provide for the placement of pupils in the public schools through a state agency," Patty said.

"It appears that until such time as the general assembly takes further action," Patty added, "the pupil placement board as now established by law may continue to operate."

Mrs. DeFebio to Attempt Supreme Court Appeal

Mrs. Theo T. DeFebio hopes to carry her fight against Virginia's Pupil Placement Law to the United States Supreme Court.

The Fairfax County mother, whose suit for readmission of her two sons to public schools was denied yesterday by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, said she intends to present the case to the Federal tribunal, provided her attorneys find grounds for an appeal.

Mrs. DeFebio's two sons, Nicky, 9, and Teddy, 14, were dropped from Fairfax County schools last April because she refused to sign pupil placement applications for them. She went to court challenging the constitutionality of the placement law, charging it was part of a scheme to flout the Supreme Court desegregation decision which she supported.

In refusing to order readmission of the DeFebio boys, the State court did not pass on validity of the placement law under the Federal Constitution. It said, in effect, that she was not in a position to challenge the law's constitutionality, since a denial of her rights was not at issue. Federal courts have held in cases involving Negro students that they cannot be compelled to use the placement law because it is part of a legislative program which discriminates against them.

Mrs. DeFebio said she was not surprised by the State court's decision. She added:

"The State of Virginia has just declared her unwillingness to assume the responsibility that goes with State's rights.

"My lawyers and I hoped she would acknowledge her duty to the United States and to the world without Federal action. Since she will not, I, of course, am appealing the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, if after seeing the Virginia Supreme Court decision my lawyers find it appealable. If it is not appealable, I shall begin the case all over again.

"I expected the decision because I feel what is wrong with the world is wrong with this case. The moral issue has not been backed up by the people with everything they've got."

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 5 (AP)—Democrat J. Lindsay Almond Jr. today won edection as governor of Virginia under the Byrd organization banner of massive resistance to racial integration in the public schools.

The 59-year-old son of a railroad engineer, who became a congressman and Virginia's attorney general, jumped into a quick, one-sided lead over Republican Ted Dalton, picked up steam as the returns mounted and rolled toward a victory of 2-1 proportions.

STRENGTH IN NORTH

Dalton's campaign of moderation on the school issue won him strength in the northern Virginia 10th District and the southwest 9th, as well as in a number of isolated pockets. But in eight of the 10 congressional districts the returns made it all Almond by margins that ran from comfortable to overwhelming.

Returns from 1,073 of the state's 1,911 precincts showed: Almond 158,577; Dalton 80,313.

The anticipated support for Dalton showed in the northern area just south of the District of Columbia. But he had no potential strength in view that would stem and turn the tide that flowed for the Democrats in the central and southern sections where the racial feeling is stronger.

OTHERS ELECTED

Elected with Almond were the other two members of the Democratic ticket—A.E.S. Stephens for lieutenant governor and Albertis S. Harrison for attorney general. The ticket carried the all-out backing of the organization of Sen. Byrd (D-Va), which has proved dominant in Virginia state politics for 30 years.

Such was the high feeling on the school integration issue pumped into the campaign by the organization forces of Sen. Byrd that Republican precinct workers were a rarity at a vast number of the state's voting precincts.

SPEARHEADED FIGHT

Almond, who spearheaded the state's legal fight against any racial mixing in the schools, bid fair to roll to a victory of pre-Eisenhower proportions when general elections in Virginia only formalized what had been done in Democratic nominating primaries. Four years ago the Democrats beat Dalton by a margin of only 55 to 45 per cent.

In addition to the three statewide offices, the voters selected occupants for the 100 seats in the Virginia House of Delegates and elected two members of the 40-member Senate in special elections to fill vacancies. There were Republican aspirants for 34 seats in the House, in which they now hold only six.

The Democratic strategy throughout was pegged to the theme of massive resistance to any racial mixing in the public schools. They coupled this with ridicule of Dalton's moderate approach, which was dubbed a system of opposing integration by accepting it.

Dalton, recalling his unsuccessful effort last year to have the Virginia Assembly adopt a locally administered pupil assignment plan, has fought for such a plan now as the way to keep the public schools open. He has contended the massive resistance program of the Democrats is crumbling before federal courts and will lead to massive integration.

A third candidate for governor also was on the ballot. He was C. Gilmer Brooks, Winchester automobile salesman, an independent.

High Court Bars Virginia Appeal

Strikes New Blow At Efforts to Stall School Integration

By CHARLOTTE MOULTON,
United Press Staff Writer.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21. — The Supreme Court today struck another blow at Southern attempts to block or delay school integration.

The court refused to hear a Virginia appeal against federal court orders to integrate the Norfolk and Newport News schools.

This leaves in effect a ruling by the fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals which knocked down the barrier to integration raised by Virginia's 1956 Pupil Placement Act.

Othern Southern states have adopted similar laws to nullify the Supreme Court's 1954 racial desegregation edict. They were watching today's action for an indication of how their laws would fare.

Neither the Supreme Court nor the appeals court ruled directly on the constitutionality of the Virginia law. But both left standing an opinion by District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk that the law is unconstitutional.

The action left Judge Hoffman free to order the school boards to admit Negro applicants to Norfolk and Newport News schools.

A separate appeal is being carried through the courts against a similar desegregation ruling affecting Arlington, Va., schools.

A lawyer for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People said he interpreted the court's action today, coupled with lower court rulings, as throwing out the Virginia law. On this basis, he said, the NAACP probably will ask Judge Albert W. Bryan of Federal District Court in Alexandria to order immediate integration of Arlington schools.

The Virginia law removes authority over placement of students from local school boards and seeks to make the boards immune from integration suits. It vests pupil assignment in the hands of a state board. If a white school admits Negroes, the governor may close it, deny it state funds, and provide for "private" education of its white students.

Delay Virginia Integration; Await Test Of State Law

By THOMAS B. ROSS

ARLINGTON, Va. — (INS) — Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan granted a delay in execution of his order requiring immediate racial integration in the schools of Arlington county.

The order was to have been effective next Monday, but the jurist granted the Arlington county school board's request for a stay pending outcome of appeals to higher courts.

Judge Bryan said he was taking the action because if his integration ruling is reversed, "and this court has not granted a stay, there would be tremendous injury."

LESS INJURY

He added: "But if the court suspends the injunction and the case is affirmed, the possibility of injury is a great deal less."

County and state authorities are seeking reversal of the integration order issued Sept. 14. The next legal action is slated before the fourth circuit court of appeals in Richmond, Va.

The desegregation ruling struck at the state's "pupil placement" plan, a device adopted to circumvent the Supreme Court's 1954 integration decree.

Attorneys Edwin Brown and Oliver Hill, representing the NAACP and the parents of the seven Negro children ordered admitted, argued that there should be no delay in compliance with the integration order.

'LET 'EM CLOSE'

Hill asserted: "If the schools of Virginia have got to be closed, if a crisis is required, then I say the sooner the matter is tested the better."

Former Virginia state Senator Frank I. Ball, representing the school board, declared that enforcement of the integration ruling next Monday would force closing not only of the four schools to which the Negroes seek admittance, but all other public schools in the county.

Ball said this would occur under the Virginia law governing placement of pupils and that 5,000 white students would be "penalized."

The school board lawyer pointed out that the state law shuts off tax funds to counties which integrate their schools.

Ball declared: "I would rather shoot my own child than do anything that would close the public schools of Arlington."

The attorney said higher court decisions on similar cases involving schools in Newport News, Norfolk, and Charlottesville are expected this fall to settle the constitutionality of the Virginia law.

The judge said he was granting the stay not as a ruling on the merits of the case, but in order to prevent "injury" which could result from a mass closing of the county schools.

Judge Bryan noted that the decree has already been reviewed by the Supreme Court and that Virginia's pupil placement law, under which the Negroes were technically rejected, is "too sluggish and prolix" to provide an adequate remedy.

The placement law is an integral part of the state's "massive resistance" to integration, a complex of legislation to avoid the impact of the Supreme Court's decree.

ASKED TO RULE

The Supreme Court has been asked to rule on the constitutionality of the placement act which was challenged in integration suits in Norfolk and Newport News.

The federal district court in Richmond on Tuesday granted an order temporarily restraining enforcement of the act, thereby preventing the local school board from blocking the admission of children whose parents refused to sign the pupil placement cards.

In the meantime, three northern Virginia branches of the NAACP have been ordered to turn over their records to a state racial investigating committee.

Virginia's Pupil Act Rejected

Supreme Court Sustains U.S. Judge's Ruling For Integration

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21 (AP)—The Supreme Court today dealt a severe blow to Virginia's declared policy of massive resistance to any racial integration in its public schools.

It did so by refusing to review a decision holding unconstitutional the state's 1956 Pupil Placement Act, cornerstone of the massive resistance framework.

The high court thereby let stand the decision of U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk. Hoffman's ruling was affirmed by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

The Pupil Placement Act removed from local school boards and division superintendents all power to assign pupils, and placed it in the hands of a state board.

Next Step Uncertain

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley called the decision "not unexpected." He said statutes not affected by the decision provide an orderly course of action "in the face of these continuing attempts to force integration, and there is no cause for school patrons, faculties or pupils to be apprehensive."

"We shall continue to use every legal and proper means to carry out the mandate of the General Assembly" he said.

The state's attorney general, Kenneth Patty, said he plans to confer within the next few days with Stanley and with attorneys in the case.

State Sen. Ted Dalton, Republican candidate for governor in the Nov. 5 election, called for a special session of the Virginia General Assembly to repeal the state's program of massive resistance. He has advocated a locally administered pupil assignment plan as the means of averting public schools integration.

Stand Unchanged

But J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Democratic opponent to Dalton and a former state attorney general who led Virginia's legal battle against school integration, said his support of massive resistance is not changed. He said: "After Little Rock, I'm not surprised at anything."

Judge Hoffman, in holding the Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional, said it provided no adequate remedy for Negroes seeking admission to white schools because of what he described as "the fixed and definite policy of school authorities with respect to segregation."

Hoffman noted that the same session of the Virginia General Assembly which passed that law also passed laws calling for the closing of schools and the withdrawal of state funds from any school departing from the policy of no integration.

Issued Injunctions

Hoffman signed injunctive decrees forbidding racial discrimination in the public schools in Norfolk and Newport News.

Similar injunctions have been issued by U. S. Dist. Judge Albert V. Bryan for Arlington and Judge John Paul for Charlottesville. Effectiveness of these decrees was stayed pending Supreme Court action in the Norfolk and Newport News cases.

The Virginia attorney general's office joined Norfolk and Newport News school authorities in asking the Supreme Court to review the cases. The Supreme Court denied this request in a brief order without comment.

Key Virginia Race Case Due Before High Court

The Norfolk-Newport News case, considered the key piece of segregation litigation now in Virginia, will come before the U. S. Supreme Court during the 1957-58 term, which opens Monday.

The decision in this case directly will affect the Arlington and Charlottesville desegregation cases, and will have an impact on Virginia's entire plan of "massive resistance" to desegregation.

At issue in the Norfolk-Newport News, Charlottesville and Arlington cases is the pupil placement law, final barrier in the way of Negroes attempting to enroll in white schools.

Once this bar is removed, and Negroes enter white schools, other parts of the "massive resistance" program will come into play. They involve withholding of state school funds and closing of the schools.

Shortly after the new Supreme Court term opens, school boards from Norfolk and Newport News will ask the Supreme Court to review Federal, District and Appeals Court rulings which ordered immediate desegregation.

If the court denies a review, it will uphold, in effect, a decision of Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman last February. Judge Hoffman ordered both localities to desegregate when schools opened last month.

He also declared the pupil placement law unconstitutional on its face. He denied a motion by state attorneys to dismiss the suit on grounds that the Negro plaintiffs had not exhausted the administrative remedy set up in the placement law. The law had not been enacted when these cases were started.

The U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Judge Hoffman's decision but the effective date of integration was stayed, pending the appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court.

In the event the court denies a review, the case will go back to Judge Hoffman, who will set a new integration date. Returning the case to the lower court would take about a month.

Conceivably, Virginia attorneys would ask the Supreme Court to reconsider its decision if it refuses to review the case. The time lapse for this move isp hoblematical.

The Virginia Pupil Placement Act is at isue in six Virginia localities besides Norfolk and Newport News—Arlington County, Fairfax County, Richmond, Suffolk and Nansemond County. The Supreme Court decision on the Newport News—Norfolk case would affect a case in Charlottesville. It presumably would affect the Arlington case since similar points are issues.

Federal District Judge Albert V. Bryan first decreed in July 1956, that Arlington must desegregate its schools. His order was subsequently upheld by the Supreme Court.

Dalton Says Democrats Only Delay Integration

DANVILLE, Va., Oct. 10 (AP).—Ted Dalton said last night Virginia Democrats are frantically seeking to postpone a United States Supreme Court decision on their school segregation program until after the November 5 election.

The Republican candidate for Governor reminded a radio audience here that the State last Monday asked the high court to delay a decision on and to preserve separate the Pupil Placement Act until schools, then come with us." after a ruling has been made by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals.

"Mr. Almond and Mr. Byrd have sent their 'machine' Attorney General, Mr. Patty, calling to Washington, beging the Supreme Court to put off its decision on their program until after election day," said Senator Dalton.

But, he added, "the defense of our segregated schools lies within Virginia and not in pitiful pleas to the court to postpone the execution day.

"What we need is a plan whereby the localities can defend themselves and not run to the very court that ordered integration in the first place."

Senator Dalton charged that the "chief concern" now of Senator Byrd and J. Lindsay Almond, is the Democratic candidate fo rGovernor, is "through their Attorney General . . . to prevent their program from collapsing in court before election day."

The G. O. P. candidate said "the plan that will work in Virginia" in averting integration "is a pupil assignment plan administered by the local school boards."

I point to North Carolina, where peace and order prevail—and that quiet is breaking the hearts of the Democratic machine," Senator Dalton added.

Senator Dalton said the pupil assignment plan he advocates "is the best and only hope on which Virginia can stand in this crisis. Under the leadership of Byrd, Stanley and Almond, the stage is set for Little Rocks' in Virginia . . .

"If the people want racial violence, ill will and closing schools and wholesale mixing of the races and chaos in Virginia, they should follow the Byrd-Stanley-Almond plan. If, on the other hand, they want to have peace and good will

Henderson Says Foes Discourage Business

COVINGTON, Va., Oct. 10 (AP).—Horace E. Henderson said last night "if massive resistance is sustained at the polls in November, Virginia will suffer an economic setback that will affect the pocketbook of every citizen."

Mr. Henderson, Republican candidate for Lieutenant Governor, spoke at a Covington Junior Chamber of Commerce dinner.

He said if massive resistance to the United States Supreme Court's school desegregation decree is upheld in November ". . . and our public schools are closed, industries can be expected to leave and pass up Virginia.

"Present businesses will have difficulty in operating. Tourists will no longer be attracted to a State which defies the laws and courts of this Nation."

Arlington leaders not frightened

WASHINGTON

The attorney who helped to shape history in the Arlington school case said he will not be intimidated by Virginia NAACP probers who launched a hearing Wednesday.

This move was made at the same time Arlington school attorneys were asking Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan to stay his order for the admission of seven children to schools nearest their homes.

The jurist granted the stay on the ruling made last Saturday. The ruling enforced the original order handed down a year ago by Judge Bryan.

Attorneys for the school board filed an appeal on Monday. The stay was granted, thus postponing the entrance of the children to school on Monday as the court had ordered.

THE LAWYER who made history in representing plaintiffs is Edwin C. Brown of Washington, who filed the original suit on the second anniversary of the Supreme Court school decision. That was May 17, 1956.

"They are trying to intimidate me, but I don't think they will get to first base in what they are trying to do," Mr. Brown told the AFRO, referring to the Thomson Committee, an arm of the Virginia anti-NAACP machinery.

"I don't think they will succeed in intimidating whites and stop people from contributing to the NAACP," he added.

"We will not furnish everything asked for in a subpoena, only those records applying to litigation."

THE COMMITTEE set a closed hearing for Thursday with plans to call in Arlington NAACP officials. A spokesman for probers said none of the parents who testified before Judge Bryan will be questioned.

"The hearing doesn't scare me," Mr. Brown said.

Asked how he felt about his successful efforts in the suit, he said modestly, "It was one of those things when a case was brought to me, I filed the suit, notwithstanding the Thomson and Boatwright committees."

MR. BROWN was assisted in the case by Oliver W. Hill, chief counsel for the Virginia NAACP, and Spottswood W. Robinson II, regional NAACP attorney.

The Washington lawyer maintains offices in Alexandria. He and Mrs. Brown are parents of three children, Edwin Jr., 21; Marga, 16, and James Oliver, 12.

Mr. Brown, 49, is a graduate of Howard University Law School, Class of '38.

Arlington to Seek Delay In Admitting Negroes

Request for Stay to Be Presented To Judge Bryan at Appointment Soon

By PAUL HOPE

Arlington school attorneys said they would seek an extension of time today or tomorrow on a Federal court order calling for admittance of seven Negro students to white county schools on September 23. Star, 9-18-57

The attorneys filed an appeal yesterday in Alexandria Federal Court to Judge Albert V. Bryan's order of Saturday to integrate four schools next Monday. Washington Post

James H. Simmonds and Frank L. Ball, Sr., attorneys for the County School Board, said they would present a request for a stay of the effective date directly to Judge Bryan as soon as an appointment can be arranged. Sun 9-17-57

Judge Bryan was at a judicial conference in Washington yesterday and is expected to attend the conference again today, Mr. Simmonds said. He said it likely would be tomorrow before the attorneys can take their plea to him.

The Arlington attorneys and Kenneth Patty, Virginia attorney general, said if Judge Bryan refuses their request, they will ask a stay from one of the judges of the Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals.

An extension of time would allow Arlington to continue segregated schools while the school board seeks to get Bryan's Saturday desegregation ruling thrown out by the appeals court.

Await High Court Ruling

A stay also would maintain the status quo presumably until the United States Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act. The placement act will come before the Supreme Court next month in the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation cases.

In these cases, the court of appeals has held the placement act unconstitutional.

Mr. Patty said the State will contend, in the appeal, that Judge Bryan's order was in error because the seven students involved in the desegregation order did not follow the provisions of the placement act.

In ordering the school board to admit the students, Judge Bryan said pupils do not have to use the placement act because the effect of it is to maintain segregated schools in violation of the Supreme Court edict banning segregation by race.

Mr. Patty said the State's position is that the placement law is in effect until the issue of its Constitutionality finally is adjudicated by the Supreme Court.

The Attorney General admitted that the Arlington School Board is "on the horns of a dilemma." The county school board is required to carry out the State laws designed to maintain segregation while at the same time is under a Federal court order to admit Negro students to white schools.

He would not speculate on what would happen in Arlington on Monday if the county is refused an extension of time on Judge Bryan's order.

"We have other laws that can be utilized," he said. "Whether they will be of advantage to us, we don't know yet because they have never been tested."

Cannot Use State Funds

"One thing is sure, no State funds can be used to operate an integrated school," he said. Under Virginia's "no integration" legislation, funds are automatically cut off when a school is integrated and the funds remain cut off so long as Negroes and whites are in the same school.

Arlington expects to get about $1.4 million in State aid during fiscal 1957-1958. The biggest item is $1,197,000 in pupil-teacher ratio aid, paid on a quarterly basis. So far the county has received only $299,250. The second installment is due before January 1.

The remaining $400,000 of the $1.4 million is divided among various special aid projects such as transportation and text books, and none of it has been received yet by the county.

Governor Can Close School

The Governor can close an integrated school and try to talk the Negroes into leaving. If he fails, the county can ask to have the school returned and can operate it with local funds.

Arlington School Board Chairman James G. Stockard also declined to make a prediction of what will happen Monday if a stay is not granted.

"The board wants due process of law to operate and give us as final a conclusion as possible before Monday morning. We're hoping for an early decision from the court so we'll know how to plan for next week," he said.

"I am confident this is something that all citizens of Arlington are praying and thinking very seriously about."

State Senator Charles R. Fenwick of Arlington said he was "very sorry" that Judge Bryan ordered the admittance of the seven students.

Had Hoped for Time

"I had hoped the matter would be further delayed until the Supreme Court had passed on the Norfolk and Newport News cases," Senator Fenwick said.

State Senator John A. K. Donovan of Falls Church said Judge Bryan's order did not surprise him.

"I have held all along that the laws are unconstitutional. I believe the Legislature will straighten them out so that we'll have laws along the line of North Carolina's," Senator Donovan said.

Senator Donovan favors a pupil placement act which would be controlled on the local level and would result in some integration.

Board Acts as Usual

Despite Judge Bryan's attack on the Placement, it was business as usual yesterday at the Arlington office set up by the State Assignment Board.

B. S. Hilton, who is in charge of the office, said that about 50 applications were handled yesterday. Under the Placement Act all students entering Virginia schools for the first time or transferring from one school to another must sign placement forms.

The Arlington office was set up to make tentative assignments pending action by the State Placement Board which meets at intervals to process applications. Mr. Hilton said yesterday's applicants included about a dozen Negroes. As usual, the white students were assigned to white schools, and the Negroes to colored schools, Mr. Hilton said.

Supreme Court Voids Virginia's Pupil Placement

Segregation Plan Killed By Decision

the state's 1956 Pupil Placement Act, cornerstone of the massive resistance framework.

The high court thereby let stand the decision of U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk. Hoffman's ruling was affirmed by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

ASSIGNMENT SHIFT

The Pupil Placement Act removed from local school boards and division superintendents all power to assign pupils, and placed it in the hands of a state board.

Judge Hoffman, in holding the Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional, said it provided no adequate remedy for Negroes seeking admission to white schools because of what he described as "the fixed and definite policy of school authorities with respect to segregation."

Hoffman noted that the same session of the Virginia General Assembly which passed that law also passed laws calling for the closing of school and the withdrawal of state funds from any school departing from the policy of no integration.

Hoffman signed injunctive decrees forbidding racial discrimination in the public schools in Norfolk and Newport News.

DECREES STAYED

Similar injunctions have been issued by U. S. Dist. Judge Albert V. Bryan for Arlington and Judge John Paul for Charlottesville. Effectiveness of these decrees was stayed pending Supreme Court action in the Norfolk and Newport News cases.

The Virginia attorney general's office joined Norfolk and Newport News school authorities in asking the Supreme Court to review the cases. The Supreme Court denied this request in a brief order without comment.

Constitution

The appeal said the action of the lower federal courts "makes even more difficult of solution the most difficult social problem presented to the people of this country in eight decades."

P. 8

Contending Judge Hoffman acted "with undue impetuosity," the appeal said the cases gave the Supreme Court an opportunity "to lead a large section of our country out of the chaos into which the Brown decision has plunged it." This was a reference to the Supreme Court's decision that compulsory school segregation is unconstitutional.

The appeal also contended that the Court of Appeals should not have acted in the Norfolk and Newport News cases while another case testing constitutionality of the Pupil Placement Act was pending in the Virginia Court of Appeals.

Virginians Favor Closing Schools

News-Leader
Nov. 11-3-57

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 2 (AP)—The Richmond Times-Dispatch said tonight a poll of public opinion "indicates the majority—about two out of three—of white adult Virginians now would prefer to close the public schools as an alternative to compulsory integration."

The poll showed, the newspaper said, that 79 per cent of white Virginians responding to the poll and who plan to vote in Tuesday's election for Governor favored Democrat J. Lindsay Almond Jr. over Republican Ted Dalton.

Other findings in the sampling of opinion on a dozen questions dealing with racial integration and politics, said the newspaper, reflect:

1. A sharp drop in President Eisenhower's popularity. Nearly nine out of 10 disapproved of his use of troops at Little Rock. Four out of five said they would not vote for Eisenhower if he now were running for re-election.

2. A general endorsement by nearly two out of three persons for Gov. Orval Faubus' policy at Little Rock.

3. Support by 57 per cent for the idea of a conservative third party candidate for president in 1960.

4. Firm majority opposition to even limited integration of a few Negro children in the public schools.

5. Even stronger sentiment favoring continued resistance to integration by every legal means.

The poll, directed by Alan S. Donnahoe, vice president and research director of Richmond Newspapers, Inc., took a random sampling of Times-Dispatch readers.

Virginia Group's 'Non-Political' Vote Due Today

News-Leader
Nov. 31-57

RICHMOND, Oct. 31 (AP).—Resolutions opposing Virginia's school-closing and fund cut-off laws were due to be voted on here today by the Department of Elementary School Principals of the Virginia Education Association.

The principals' advisory board indorsed the resolutions yesterday, and passed them on to the full department for consideration.

P. 32A

The two laws which the resolutions oppose are key features of Virginia's "massive resistance" machinery to prevent integration, and figure prominently in the current gubernatorial campaign. The Democratic candidate, J. Lindsay Almond, jr., stands for massive resistance. The Republican nominee, Ted Dalton, has criticized the school-closing and fund cut-off laws and warned that they will result in closed schools or mass integration.

"Not Taking Sides"

The board of the elementary principals said the resolutions do not comprise a stand on the integration issue.

"We're within our right not to take sides with any political issue," said J. Harr Carmine, principal of Ocean View (Va.) School. "But we're also within our rights to oppose the cutting off of any school funds."

Mrs. Corinne P. Jeffries, principal of Abingdon School, said, "We actually have an obligation to state that we want the schools to remain open. Otherwise we'd be going against our profession."

The resolutions state:

1. "That as an elementary administrative group we work to keep all the public elementary schools open in the State of Virginia; and;

2. "That we oppose the cut-off of State funds to elementary schools."

Under Virginia anti-integration laws, a school closes whenever integration occurs. The locality may reopen the school, but will lose State funds for all the elementary or secondary schools it operates if races are mixed in any one of them.

Darden for Non-Compulsion

Former Gov. Colgate W. Dardon, president of the University of Virginia, addressed one of the opening VEA sessions, and repeated his plea for amendment of the State's compulsory attendance law "so that those who have neither the disposition nor the capacity to stand the pace can be dropped."

He said dropped pupils should be aided by an enlarged vocational apprenticeship program if they showed the dispostion and aptitude for such training.

"It is a mistaken idea," he added, "to think that, by retaining in school those lacking ambition and ability, we help them.

"We are simply injuring, and injuring terribly, those who are able and willing to do hard mental work. Moreover, we are placing upon our teachers a well-nigh impossible task."

He called for an elevation of the quality of instruction throughout the public school system of Virginia, and offered this general suggestion of what is needed:

"To keep abreast of the social, industrial and political revolution in which we are caught, we shall require a system of education wider in range than anything we have known in the past.

"Only a system that will prepare us for the shattering changes which are taking place and enable us to master them will serve our purposes."

Ruling Will Be Appealed To Highest U.S. Tribunal

RICHMOND, Va., July 13 — (UP) — The U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals today struck down Virginia's pupil-placement act, the forward wall of the state's legislative defenses against public school integration.

The three-member court did not rule specifically that the placement act was unconstitutional by itself, but held unanimously that together with other state laws the act would be a dead end street for Negroes seeking to enter white schools.

Archibald G. Robertson, an attorney for the state said the ruling would be appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court "just as fast as we can appeal it."

The placement act was passed by the Virginia legislature last fall as part of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's "no - integration" program. It set up a three-man board to assign students to specific schools, and provided for appeals from the board's ruling to be taken through the governor to the state courts.

The placement act did not mention race or color, but other laws enacted at the same time provided for the withholding of state funds from integrated schools and the closing of white schools which admitted Negroes.

The appellate court's ruling decrees made by U. S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman ordering Newport News, Va., and Norfolk, Va., to end segregation in their schools by Aug. 15.

The ruling also declared there was no reason to call a special three-judge federal court to decide the constitutionality of the placement act as requested by defense attorneys.

The court said there was "no injunction asked or granted against of officials charged with enforcement of the act."

The court said the placement act "furnishes no adequate remedy to the plaintiffs because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation . . ." and because of further provisions which provide for closing schools and withdrawing of funds.

The appeliate court upheld Judge Hoffman's ruling that the placement act provides no adequate administrative remedy "when considered in connection with the other statues passed at the same time and for the same manifest purpose."

The ruling was the first handed down by the appeals court directly concerning the placement act.

U. S. Court Edict Bans Virginia Act

School Lawyers Vow an Appeal To Highest Court

RICHMOND, July 13 (Spl.) — Virginia's Pupil Placement Act was ruled unconstitutional today by the United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit.

The Court made the ruling in a brief per curiam opinion upholding orders by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman telling school officials in Norfolk and Newport News to desegregate by next September.

School Board attorneys said promptly they will seek a review by the Supreme Court of the United States.

The effect of such a move may be to delay desegregation at Norfolk and Newport News for at least a semester and possibly for a full school year.

Delay Expected

This is because the Supreme Court already has started its summer recess and may not be in a position to act on the request for appeal until after schools open next fall.

In upholding Judge Hoffman's ruling, the Appeal Court said:

"It should be noted that the decrees do not require the assignment of children to particular schools, nor do they require mixing of races in any school. They merely forbid defendants from refusing to admit plaintiffs to any school solely on account of race or color."

The State Pupil Placement Act was passed at last fall's special session of the General Assembly to take away the power of local boards to assign school children. This power was transferred to a three-man board in Richmond, which was given assignment standards ranging from health and educational attainment factors to intangible psychological criteria, but excluding race.

Waiting Ruled Out

In making its ruling today, the Appeals Court declared it was not obligated to wait for the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals to act "on a case involving the validity of the act."

This latter case is a petition for a writ of mandamus brought by Theo T. DeFebio of Fairfax County, whose two sons were expelled because Mrs. DeFebio refused to sign a pupil placement form.

The Appeals Court also dismissed as unwarranted the arguments made on behalf of Norfolk and Newport News school authorities that a special three-judge court should have been called to pass on the constitutionality of the Placement Act.

"It is argued that," the opinion said, "the cases here should be dismissed or proceedings therein be stayed until administrative remedies have been exhausted under the recent Pupil Placement Act.

"As pointed out by the judge below (Hoffman), however, this statute furnished no adequate remedy to plaintiffs (Negro parents and school children) because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation and because of the provisions of Chapter 68 of the Acts of the Extra Session of the Virginia General Assembly which provides for the closing of school and withdrawal therefrom of state funds upon any departure from this policy in any school."

With respect to the argument for a three-judge court, today's opinion declared: "As no injunction was asked or granted against the enforcement of the act or the officials charged with its enforcement, a case for the constitution of a three-judge court was not presented."

"For like reasons," the opinion continued, "there is no need to stay proceedings pending action by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia on a case involving the validity of the act."

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Virginias Democratic nominee for Governor, had "no reaction" to the ruling.. Almond participated in the appeals for both the Norfolk and Newport News cases.

But Republican Sen. Ted Dalton, Almond's opponent in Virginia's November gubernatorial election, said: "Today's decision is what I have expected all along."

"Misguided by Sen. Harry F. (D.-Va.), Attorney General Almond and Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, Virginia lost again in court with a plan to defend public schools by closing them," Dalton said.

The Radford State Senator reiterated his stand that ". . . a local pupil assignment plan is our best hope." He said a local assignment plan "denounced last week by Mr. Almond, is saving North Carolina's segregated public schools."

"The people of Virginia are fast realizing that a locally administered pupil assignment plan is a safe, sound and conservative approach, in line with Virginia's best traditions, and that the radical path pointed out by Sen. Byrd and Attorney General Almond and Gov. Stanley leads to destruction of our schools," Dalton added.

Va. County to desegregate!

The jurist upheld a motion by NAACP attorneys to order a year-old Arlington desegregation decree into effect immediately.

Assignment Plan Is Hit By Almond

RICHMOND, July 6 (AP)—Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., rejected today a pupil assignment plan, such as North Carolina's, as a means of preserving "separate schools."

Thus he accepted, even as Republicans in Roanoke were preparing to nominate State Sen. Ted Dalton for Governor, Dalton's challenge to do battle on this issue.

"The assignment plan will not and cannot preserve the public school system from the destructive effects of integration," Almond said. It was the most positive position on the assignment plan yet taken by the attorney general, certain to be nominated next Tuesday in the Democratic primary for Governor.

"The statement, which has been repeatedly made that the North Carolina plan has been tried and tested in the courts, is utterly misleading," Almond said.

"The court went no further," he said, "than to say that the applicant for admission to a public school in North Carolina would at first be required to exhaust the administrative remedies provided by the state.

"When any child is refused admission to a public school on the basis of race under an assignment plan, the plan is at an end. To say therefore that one favors an assignment plan in order to preserve separate schools, he must realize assignment will not accomplish that purpose."

This was a direct reply—without mentioning Dalton's name—to Dalton's statement of Thursday that he was willing to run for Governor if the Republican convention today in Roanoke wanted him.

Dalton had said: ". . . I am willing to enter the race for Governor, not from a partisan political standpoint but in an effort to give the people of Virginia an opportunity to save our separate schools by a locally administered pupil assignment plan which is working in North Carolina and which has been tested and approved by the courts."

In his statement Thursday, the Radford state senator said that although his personal desire had been not to run, "my sense of duty compels me to continue the fight for the 800,000 school children of Virginia against the cut-off-the-funds-close-the-schools program of the Democratic leadership."

Negroes Lose Virginia Ruling

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 26 (AP) — Federal Judge John Paul today deferred start of desegregation in Charlottesville's public schools pending a final ruling on Virginia's pupil placement law.

At the same time he restrained Charlottesville school officials from requiring any pupil to apply for placement as a requirement for attending school.

The court's action obviously pleased State Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., his special assistant, Henry Wickham, and former Gov. John S. Battle, counsel for the defendant school officials. Plainly disappointed were Spottswood W. Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, who had argued vainly to have the Negro children admitted to white schools this Fall.

The effect of today's action denying Robinson's motion asking that the Negro pupils be admitted to white schools this Fall is that Charlottesville's schools will remain segregated at least until the January, 1958, semester.

ALEXANDRIA, Va.—U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan last week ordered desegregation begin in the public schools of Arlington county in September. At the same time desegregation was delayed in Charlottesville pending a ruling by the U. S. Supreme Court on the constitutionality of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act.

Federal District Judge John Paul, who earlier this year ordered desegregation in the schools of Charlottesville, said last week that he would withhold enforcement of his order. Since the U. S. Supreme Court is in recess and will not open its next term until October schools in Charlottesville will open on a segregated basis in September.

Sat. 8-3-57

VIRGINIA'S Pupil Placement Act came up also in the Arlington county case. Lawyers for the NAACP requested Judge Bryan to amend his original desegregation order to specify that Arlington pupils need not use the state's new pupil placement law, but the judge rejected the request.

The effect of the ruling with minor changes leaves the injunction in force, which the judge granted on July 31, 1955 restraining the Arlington School Board from denying pupils admission to any school because of race.

EDWIN C. Brown, Alexandria lawyer, represented the NAACP in the Arlington case. He said "15 or 20 or maybe more requests" would be made "for colored children to be admitted to white schools" in the county this fall.

Meanwhile, there was some discussion among school officials as to what Judge Bryan's ruling means. Mr. Brown said "Judge Bryan's decision sounds very good to me. He added: "Of course we are not happy that we will not be permitted to bypass the Pupil Placement Act."

BARNARD JOY, vice chairman of the Arlington School Board, said he felt the entire school board should meet as soon as possible with its attorneys "to have them explain what this (ruling) means."

Earlier Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. had asked Judge Bryan to withhold enforcement of the Arlington injunction until the U. S. Supreme Court had time to rule on the placement law. But the judge ruled that the right to an injunction had already been established in the Arlington case.

Journal & Guide

THE JUDGE asserted that "consideration of administrative remedies such as the placement law will not again be reached unless or until petition is made to enforce the injunction." He added:

"Plainly, therefore, commencement of the restraint made in the decree should not be postponed to a determination of the validity of the administrative remedy."

Sat. 8-3-57

JAMES H. Simmons, Arlington school board attorney said he was "a little puzzled by" the decision after it had been read to him over the telephone. He said there may be further clarification needed" as to what the Arlington schools should do next.

Judge Bryan in 1956 ordered that Arlington's elementary school be integrated last February and that the junior and senior high schols be integrated in September. His ruling was upheld by the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court declined to review the case which in effect upheld the circuit and district courts.

IN HIS ORAL statement made after a conference with the lawyers for NAACP in the Charlottesville school case, Judge Paul said the order would be effective the first school semester after the Supreme Court make its ruling on Virginia's Pupil Placement Act.

Meanwhile, the judge directed that "no pupil, white or colored, be required to make application for attending school in Charlottesville. He restrained the school board and the superintendent from "denying admission to any student because of failure to sign an application."

Attorneys who conferred with Judge Paul were Spottswood W. Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, both of Richmond, for the NAACP, and Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. and his special assistant, Henry Wickham, and John S. Battle, former governor of Virginia and counsel for the Charlottesville School Board.

Court Rules Virginia School Law Illegal

Defender Chicago Ill. P3

Sat. 8-3-57

RICHMOND, Va. — (ANP) — The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals last week knocked out Virginia's 1955 Pupil Placement act, designed to maintain racial segregation in the state's schools.

By its action, the court upheld an earlier decision of District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk who, in ruling on Norfolk and Newport News school segregation cases, declared the state law unconstitutional and ordered that the schools of the two cities be desegregated by this September.

The Placement law created a state board of three members appointed by the governor and gave it powers to assign pupils, a function which had been performed by local school boards.

Under the law all pupils are automatically reassigned to the segregated schools they previously attended. This provision of the law is regarded as an attempt to shunt the U. S. Supreme Court decision of 1954 banning segregation in the public schools.

Appellate court acted on appeals from the Norfolk and Newport News school boards, defendants, who argued that the cases against them should be dismissed or actions stayed until administrative remedies had been exhausted under the Pupil Placement Act.

The Appellate court said:

"This statute furnishes no adequate remedy to plaintiffs (Negro parents and school children) because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation and because of the provisions of (1956 Virginia law) which provide for the closing of schools and withdrawal therefrom of state funds upon any departure from this policy in any school."

The language of the ruling referred to the Virginia Appropriation Act of 1956, which provides that state funds be cut off from schools admitting Negro children.

COURT THROWS OUT VIRGINIA'S SCHOOLS LAW

Tribune P. 18

Sun. 7-14-57

Chicago Ill.

Richmond, Va., July 13 (AP)—A federal appellate court today threw out as unconstitutional Virginia's pupil placement act designed to maintain racially segregated schools.

The act, adopted last year, creates a three-man state board appointed by the governor and gives to it all pupil assignment powers formerly held by local school boards. It automatically reassigns all pupils to their present segregated schools and provides that any new assignments—occasioned by promotion or transfer—would be by the state board for reasons other than race.

Uphold Judge Hoffman

The United States 4th Circuit Court of Appeals handed down its decision here today in upholding District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk in his decision in Norfolk and Newport News school segregation cases. Hoffman held the act unconstitutional and ruled that schools must be desegregated in the two cities by this September.

"This statute furnishes no adequate remedy to plaintiffs [Negro parents and school children because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation and because of the provisions of [1956 Virginia law] which provide for the closing of schools and withdrawal therefrom of state funds upon any departure from this policy in any school," the Circuit court said.

State Funds Barred

This was in reference to Virginia's appropriation act which provides that all state funds shall be cut off from all elementary or high schools of a local school division if one school in that division admits a Negro child.

The pupil placement act provided for a system of appeals from the assignment board to the governor and from the governor to the state courts up thru the state Supreme court.

The state and the Norfolk and Newport News school boards, joint defendants, had argued that the cases should be dismissed or proceedings stayed until administrative remedies had been exhausted.

14d(1) Va.

By Paul Sampson
Staff Reporter

An attempt will be made this fall to place Negro children in white Arlington County schools, Edwin C. Brown, an attorney for the National Asosciation for the Advancement of Colored People, said yesterday.

Brown, legal adviser for the NAACP in Northern Virginia, said "there seems to be no impediment whatsoever" to placing Negro children in schools nearest their homes.

Brown said the Virginia legal staff of the NAACP will meet within 10 days to discuss strategy for Arlington and Charlottesville. The meeting follows the decision Saturday of the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, which declared Virginia's Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional.

Sees Way Cleared

Brown believes the decision cleared the way for school integration in Arlington and Charlottesville. In March the Supreme Court upheld desegregation orders for Arlington and Charlottesville. The Pupil Placement Act, however, was not at stake in those cases.

While the Appeals Court knocked out the Pupil Placement Act, there are two possible obstacles to desegregation in Arlington and Charlottesville.

Attorneys for the State of Virginia have said they will take the Appeals Court decision to the Supreme Court. They asked the Appeals Court to stay its mandate, pending the appeal to the Supreme Court.

Act To Be in Effect

If this request is granted, the Pupil Placement Act will be in effect when schools open in September because the Supreme Court is in recess until October.

Thus, even though Arlington and Charlottesville schools are under a desegregation order, they are expected to tell the Federal courts they no longer have control over pupil assignments, which rests with the state under the Pupil Placement Act.

Possibility Conceded

Brown conceded this was a possibility that could slow integration. He also noted that a special session of the Virginia General Assembly may be called before fall in an effort to enact new legislation designed to preserve segregated schools.

The Appeals Court decision Saturday upheld a Norfolk Federal Court decision of last February calling for desegregation in September in Norfolk and Newport News.

The earliest the desegregation problem could come to a head if the Supreme Court hears the Norfolk-Newport News appeal would be when the February School term opens in 1958.

Arlington Loses Integration Plea

Denied Delay On Schools Beyond Fall

Sun. 7-28-57

Washington, D.C.

Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan of Alexandria yesterday refused to postpone desegregation of Arlington County schools beyond the opening of classes this fall.

14d(1)

At the same time, he rejected a request by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that the desegregation order be amended to specify that Arlington students need not use the State's new pupil placement law. The law is part of the legislation Virginia adopted to avoid integration.

The effect of Judge Bryan's ruling is to leave intact, with minor changes, the injunction he granted on July 31, 1956, restraining the Arlington School Board from denying students admission to schools because of race.

Contrary to Ruling

His ruling late yesterday was contrary to the position taken by Judge John Paul in the Charlottesville desegregation case. Judge Paul on Friday agreed to withhold enforcement of the Charlottesville desegregation mandate until the Supreme Court passes on the placement law.

The placement law was adopted after the Arlington and Charlottesville cases originally were decided.

In Judge Bryan's original decree, he specified that the Arlington desegregation order would not necessarily abrogate any proper administrative remedy—such as a placement law—which the State might adopt to meet the Supreme Court school desegregation edict.

Enforcement of the Arlington and Charlottesville decrees were delayed until the Supreme Court upheld them last March.

Star P.1-2

Meanwhile, the placement law was held "unconstitutional on its face" by Judge Walter Hoffman in the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation cases.

His ruling was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals two weeks ago, and that ruling is being appealed to the Supreme Court.

As a result of the placement ruling in the Norfolk and Newport News cases, Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., yesterday asked Judge Bryan to withhold enforcement of the Arlington decree until the Supreme Court passes on the placement law.

Injunction Right Established

Judge Bryan said, however, the right to an injunction has already been established in the Arlington case.

"Consideration of administrative remedies (such as the placement law) will not again be reached unless and until petition is made to enforce the injunction," the judge held.

"Plainly, therefore, commencement of the restraint made in the decree should not be postponed to a determination of the validity of an administrative remedy."

The question before Judge Bryan was whether his desegregation order should be left in force, or held in abeyance until the Supreme Court decides whether Virginia's pupil placement legislation is legal.

The placement law is part of the legislative program Virginia adopted to meet the Supreme Court's desgregation decree in 1954. The placement law became effective after desegregation suits were initiated in Arlington and Charlottesville, and therefore was not an issue when those cases went up to the Supreme Court.

Judge Bryan heard opposing arguments yesterday about the necessity of holding up his desegregation order against Arlington County while the placement law is tested.

This delay, requested by Virginia Attorney General Almond, would push desegregation in schools beyond the September term, since the Supreme Court has recessed until October.

Attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People urged Judge Bryan to let his desegregation order stand and suggested that he allow Arlington students to ignore the placement law when they enter schools this fall.

On Friday, Federal Judge Paul agreed to delay desegregation in Charlottesville pending a Supreme Court ruling on the placement law.

Judge Paul, after a hearing at Harrisonburg, went on to rule that no student of either race would be required to comply with the Placement Act.

Judge Bryan's original order on July 31, 1956, called for an end to segregation in Arlington's elementary schools by last January 31. The deadline for desegregation of the secondary schools as set for this September. The order, however, was held in abeyance while the case was being appealed up to the Supreme Court.

Yesterday's hearing was on a request by lawyers for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. They asked Judge Bryan to amend his 1956 order on the matter of the placement law. The NAACP also asked that Judge Bryan bring his original order up to date as to the desegregation deadlines.

Integration Never, Says Charlottesville Official

Washington, D.C.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., Aug. 13 (AP)—A member of the Albemarle County School Board predicted today that Charlottesville's schools "will never be integrated."

E. J. Oglesby, vice chairman of the school board, said he could not foresee integration of schools here "any time"—not in 50 years, not ever."

Oglesby, president of the Albemarle chapter of the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties, said the public does not adequately understand the Stanley plan for maintaining segregation in the schools.

"It is not a plan to close schools," he declared. Instead, he said, the Stanley plan provides the means of preserving racially separate schools through continued legal maneuvering.

Oglesby, a professor of engineering and mathematics at the University of Virginia, today reiterated his opposition to all Federal aid, expressed last night before a meeting of some 20 persons at Orange.

"I would like to see the Con-

Placement Procedure's Adequacy Still to Be Challenged in Court

By Paul Sampson
Staff Reporter

Negro children will apply for admission to white Arlington public schools in September, but an attorney for several of them said yesterday he doubted they would be admitted.

Edwin C. Brown, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he thought the ruling Saturday of Federal District Court Judge Albert V. Bryan would delay the admission of Negroes.

Bryan ordered Arlington to desegrate its schools in September, but he said pupils could not bypass the Virginia Pupil Placement Act.

"I'm of the opinion that Negroes will be longer entering the schools under this decision than under the Charlottesville decision," Brown said.

Judges' Rulings Differ

Last Friday, Federal Judge John Paul delayed integration in Charlottesville schools until the Supreme Court rules on the Pupil Placement Act. Paul, however, said the Pupil Placement Act could be bypassed.

Brown said he had been pleased when he first heard of Bryan's ruling, but that the more he studied it, the more it seemed to delay admissions of Negroes.

Bryan reaffimed his order of a year ago granting an injunction restraining the Arlington County School Board from denying students admission to a school because of race. In the original order, Byran said students should comply with any adequate administrative remedy the state might adopt so long as it was not based on race.

The Pupil Placement Act is considered an administrative remedy. In his Saturday order, Bryan said the Act was not an issue in the injunction.

Complaints to be Weighed

If there are complaints that the injunction has been violated, the court could determine if the complainant has submitted his grievance for administrative correction, or has adequate means to do so.

Brown read Bryan's decision as meaning a Negro student applying for admission to a white school must make use of the Pupil Placement Act machinery.

The Act takes assignment of children to schools out of the hands of local school boards and places it in the jurisdiction of a state placement board.

Brown doubted the placement board would move fast on the Negro applications. If the placement board denies Negroes entrance to white schools, the attorneys will have to go to Bryan to contend the Act provides no adequate administrative remedy.

Showdown Moved Back

Brown said he thought this procedure could carry a decision over into the second semester of school.

"The only way we can carry this thing through is have children apply for admission," Brown said.

Another attorney interpreted Judge Bryan's decision to mean that Negro applicants would not have to go through all of the machinery of the Pupil Placement Act.

James H. Simmonds, one of the attorneys for the Arlington School Board, said that if Negro students were told to apply for admission under the Pupil Placement Act, they could go directly to Bryan and ask a decision on whether the Pupil Placement Act provided adequate administrative remedy.

Simmonds and Barnard Joy, School Board vice chairman, said the Board and attorneys would meet very soon to discuss the ruling.

Brown Less Optimistic

Edwin C. Brown, an attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was less optimistic about the possibility of desegregation this September than he was immediately after the Saturday ruling.

He said a careful study of the opinion during the week end convinced him that integration in Arlington will be delayed beyond integration in the parallel Charlottesville case.

Last Friday, Federal Judge John Paul granted a desegregation delay past the September school term for Charlottesville pending a Supreme Court decision on the placement statute. At the same time, he agreed to allow students to bypass the procedures laid down in the placement act.

Mr. Brown reiterated that at least 15 or 20 Negro children will apply for admission to white schools in Arlington this fall.

Placement Law Test Is Forecast In Bryan Ruling

Mon 9-29-57

Arlington school officials will hold a strategy conference early this week on the county's September deadline for classroom racial desegregation.

On Saturday, Alexandria Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan ruled against a postponement beyond the opening of schools this fall. At the same time, Judge Bryan refused to grant a request by Negro attorneys that he specify that students would be free to ignore the State's Pupil Placement Act when they entered school.

However, the jurist did not state that pupils must abide by the placement statute—Virginia's first defense against integration.

Awaits Conplaint

In his memorandum opinion, Judge Bryan said he would decide whether or not the school board was following his injunction if a student brought a complaint to the court.

Barnard Joy, acting chairman of the Arlington School Board, said today board members would confer on the racial question with their attorney, James H. Simmonds. A date had not yet been set for the meeting.

The board is faced with the desegregation order on the one hand and the State's no-integration laws on the other. The placement act is backed by fund-cutoff and school-closing statutes when a Virginia school integrates.

All of the applications will be forwarded to the State Pupil Placement Board in Richmond for action. The Arlington School Board yesterday announced it would not admit any students to classes this fall until the State Placement Board has passed on their placement applications.

Although the placement forms have space set aside for the local school board to make recommendations, the Arlington board has decided to pass the applications on to Richmond without any recommendations.

The Arlington School Board is under Federal Court injunction not to deny any students admission this fall because of race. But the State's new anti-integration legislation, including the placement law, has put the power of school assignments in the hands of the placement board.

3 New Students Ask Transfer; County Leaves Action to State

The number of Negro students seeking transfer to white Arlington County schools has reached five, with the filing of three new applications yesterday.

The latest applicants to fill out pupil placement forms requesting admission to white schools are Bowles F. Phillips, jr., 12, who wants to enter the seventh grade at Stratford junior High School this fall; the applications on to Richmond without any recommendations.

his sister, Elizabeth Virginia Phillips, 14, who seeks to enter the ninth grade at Stratford, and Gary J. Boswell, 14, who wants to attend the ninth grade at Thomas Jefferson Junior High.

Bowles and Elizabeth are brother and sister, respectively, of Sadie Phillips, who last week became the first Negro student to apply for transfer to a white county school. Sadie has applied for transfer to Washington-Lee High School. Parents of the Phillips children are Mr. and Mrs. Bowles F. Phillips of 1900 North Culpeper street.

The fifth Negro student seeking transfer to a white school is George T. Nelson, 14, of 2005 North Cameron street, who earlier this week applied for transfer to Stratford.

JUDGE GRANTS STAY IN ORDER

Advertiser Thur. 9-19-57

Virginia Wins Delay In Integration

Montgomery, Ala.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Sept. 18 (AP) —An order for integration next Monday of four Arlington County, Va., white schools was suspended today by a federal judge pending an appeal.

P.1

Judge Albert V. Bryan of U. S. District Court granted a stay in his order of last Saturday which directed the admission of seven Negroes to the four schools.

School board attorneys requested the suspension, pending appeal to the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, on the grounds that integration Monday would create a chaotic situation.

They said that under Virginia laws the integrated schools would be closed, affecting more than 5,000 pupils, and that state school funds would be cut off for the county.

Attorneys representing the seven Negro pupils argued that the board was merely seeking a further delay. They pointed out that the court already had issued an injunction barring pupil assignment on the basis of race and color alone.

These attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had requested an immediate enforcement of Bryan's July 27 order directing integration of Arlington schools this fall.

In granting the stay, Bryan told attorneys it is a rare case indeed in which a trial court does not suspend execution of its order pending an appeal. The circumstances in this case, he added, did not in his opinion put the suit in such a rare class.

Advertiser P.2a

Bryan concluded that if he did not grant the stay and his integration order was reversed on appeal, a tremendous injury would be involved.

On the other hand, he said if he granted the stay and his order was upheld, the possiblity of injury would be a great deal less.

Judge Asks Pupil Law Compromise

Washington Post Wed. 9-18-57

RICHMOND, Sept. 17 (AP) Federal Judge Sterling Hutcheson today asked attorneys to seek a compromise to keep in schools here 103 Negro children whose parents have not signed pupil placement applications.

Richmond Times Herald

Attorneys for the children and parents asked Judge Hutcheson for an order temporarily restraining enforcement of the Pupil Placement Act.

PA 11 Va.

Three suits involving constitutionality of the act are pending in Federal and state courts and the case merely would add to the number, Judge Hutcheson said.

He suggested that the Negro plaintiffs sign the forms under protest or that the State Pupil Placement Board and the Richmond School Board grant an additional period of grace in which the children may attend school without the signed forms. A 15-day grace period expired today.

Pupils Ordered Into Va. Schools Sept. 23

Ruling hits assignment law of state

Washington Post

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — The Arlington County School Board must admit seven colored students to previously all-white schools on Sept. 23.

P.1

Admittance of the students, who were turned away from schools on Sept. 5, was ordered, Saturday, by Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan.

Sat. 9-21-57

REFERRING to the Act, the judge stated: "Submission to that act amounts almost to assent to racially segregated schools."

The court's order marks the first time any school district in Virginia has been directed to admit individual students.

Sunday the board held an emergency session with its attorneys.

The hearing was highlighted by the testimony of parents whose children were turned away last week at two junior high schools and a senior high, Washington-Lee, and also an elementary school.

They testified in the direct test of the Virginia pupil placement law after Judge Bryan denied three motions made by defense attorneys.

Baltimore

The jurist turned down motions to delay the hearing to dismiss the injunction against the Arlington school board and to dismiss the order permitting four additional children to join the case with three original plaintiffs.

Judge Bryan repeated his order of a year ago in July, telling the school board to begin desegregation this month. He said, however, that pupils seeking admission to schools nearest their homes would have to apply through pupil placement procedure.

THE TESTIMONY of a friend to three of the children turned away sent a shudder through the courtroom filled to capacity.

Mrs. Geraldine Davis, a white witness told of driving the children to Stratford Junior High School after she read threats in a paper that "there would be bloodshed" if colored pupils presented themselves last Thursday for admission.

"I thought if there was any bloodshed that it should be white blood and mine if necessary," Mrs. Davis said in an even tone.

UNDER CROSS - EXAMINATION by J. Lindsey Almond, Virginia attorney general and gubernatorial candidate, Mrs. Davis said she made up her own mind to befriend the following

Afro-American

Sat. 9-21-57

Young Hamm was a plaintiff in the original suit in which some 30 colored and white pupils figured when Judge Bryan made his ruling.

The judge was told that the boy is not in school, because his parents refused to fill out a pupil placement form, part of the state machinery to block desegregation.

MRS. DAVIS was cut off abruptly by Mr. Almond when she went further to explain her reason for driving the children to the school.

It occurred to her that "this is a case if white people will show that they are Christians.."

But the gubernatorial candidate broke in over the objection of Oliver W. Hill, Virginia NAACP counsel, who was flanked by Spottswood W. Robinson III and Edwin C. Brown, both NAACP lawyers.

MR. ROBINSON argued against motions presented by the state. Mr. Brown presented the case and conducted direct examination of witnesses.

Dr. Harold M. Johnson, prominent Arlington physician, told the court how his two daughters, Harolyn, 17, and Rita, 15, were turned away at Washington-Lee.

"He (the principal) told me I couldn't register my children at Washington - Lee," Dr. Johnson stated. "He said I would have to fill out pupil placement forms."

The physician said he accepted the forms, but refused to sign them because "I think the law is unconstitutional."

He said Principal Jerry Gerich didn't ask him for either the school credentials or the birth certificates he had to show for the girls.

The detective related how his son Robert III, was refused admission to Patrick Henry Elementary School and Fillmore, both near the family home at 216 First St., S. Arlington.

He said he didn't sign the placement form after "I made up my own mind about it."

MRS. GEORGE M. NELSON, wife of a Washington policeman, testified that she and their son, George Tyrone, filled out a form and personally delivered it to Principal Claude Richmond last month at the Stratford School.

"Stratford is about a half mile from our home," Mrs. Nelson said. "Hoffman - Boston is five or six miles away."

Young Nelson was seeking transfer from Hoffman - Boston School.

OTHER PLAINTIFFS in the case are Melvin and Lewis Turner Jr., brothers, who were turned away at Swanson Junior High School. They are original plaintiffs in the 1954 suit.

They live with their stepfather and mother, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Costley, 5131 N. 22nd St., Arlington.

Attorneys for 11 children here will plead in Federal Court Tuesday for an injunction prohibiting the Virginia state pupil placement board from keeping children out of public schools because their parents have not signed placement blanks.

In an earlier case before Federal Court Judge Albert V. Bryan of Alexandria, concerning litigation against an Arlington pupil placement act, a ruling was delayed a few days until the end of a hearing in the case.

Judge Bryan will decide whether seven Arlington children were turned away from school because of race in violation of an injunction growing out of a three-year-old suit.

The board, set up in the special session of the legislature last fall, created the "anti-NAACP" laws, also under attack this week.

It decreed that parents must sign forms authorizing the board to place children in whatever schools the board saw fit.

THE BOARD was compelled by the law which created it, to assign children on the basis of race.

Parents who rebelled against signing the placement blank formed the Richmond Pupil Placement Board to oppose the action of the board.

The blanks were first distributed last spring. The board ruled that children of parents who had not signed within the arbitrary 15-day grace period would be put out of school.

THE BOARD also threatened that the parents would then be prosecuted under the state's compulsory attendance law.

The suit against this action was prepared by Oliver W. Hill, Spottswood Robinson III, Martin A. Martin, Roland D. Ealey and S. W. Tucker, attorneys for the parents.

In effect, the suit asks that the court enter an "interlocutory and/or permanent injunction restraining the defendants from denying the plaintiffs or any other children similarly situated the right and opportunity to attend a public school in the city of Richmond, Va., by reason of the failure of their parents or guardians to sign a placement application."

THE SUIT also asked that the parents not be required to sign the application.

Principally, the petition asks that the court enter a judgement or decree declaring the sections of Virginia law setting up the placement board to be unconstitutional and void.

The lawyers asked that pending a hearing on the constitutional question, the children be allowed to return to school without interference of the board.

On Monday, the first of the child care centers set up by the pupil protective association went into operation. The child care centers were devised to care for children who have been put out of school because of the placement issue.

Several churches in the city have volunteered accommodations to house the centers.

The children of parents who first received the placement forms last year were to be put out of school immediately, according to the board's ruling.

THE PLACEMENT blanks were to be signed for all new children in any particular school in the state, whether by reason of transfer or new enrollment.

Despite orders of the board, individual principals interpreted the orders themselves. Some principals put children out of school on the first and second day of the term.

Other principals have not yet put any children out, although some forms were overdue since last May.

Chester M. Hampton, president of the pupil placement group, said it was very possible that a Federal Court order might restore children to school before they had been out long enough to suffer serious educational damage.

Are Virginia pupils going in circles?

Afro American p. 20

By LOUIS LAUTIER

ALEXANDRIA, Va. (NNPA) —Are pupils who seek admission, through the Federal courts, to public schools in Virginia on a nonsegregated basis on a merry-go-round?

Such appeared to be the case Wednesday when Judge Albert V. Bryan in the Federal District Court in Alexandria, Va., stayed his order of Sept. 14 directing the Arlington County School Board to admit seven colored children to four lily-white schools.

Although one of the original cases in which the Supreme Court outlawed racial segregation in public education arose in Prince Edwards County, Va. (it was filed in the Federal District Court at Richmond on May 23, 1951), not a single colored child has been admitted to a white school in Virginia.

The pattern appears to be one of delay through legislation and litigation. The Arlington case is one in point.

AFTER LISTENING to argument of counsel, Judge Bryan Wednesday morning granted the motion of the Arlington School Board to stay his order of Sept. 14 pending an appeal of his ruling to the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals at Richmond.

Judge Bryan told opposing counsel, in announcing the stay, that they had argued largely the merits of the case. He said he had already expressed his views on the merits of the case and incorporated them in the findings of fact and the conclusion of law he filed Sept. 14.

The only question before him on the motion for a stay, he said, was whether the Arlington County School Board has a right to have a higher court pass upon his decision, and "do so without a change in the status of the local situation."

His research convinced him, Judge Bryan said, that the judgment and decree he entered in the case are appealable by an act of Congress which provides for appeals from all final decisions of Federal courts, and his decision is embraced in that statute.

"AS IS perfectly obvious, the right of appeal without a right of stay is a rather empty right. Unless the rights of the litigant may be protected pending appeal, the right to review is of not much substance," Bryan declared.

The appeal in the Arlington case, he said, is from the order enforcing an injunction, among other things, and passing upon other issues in addition.

The Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, he asserted, prescribe the procedures where there is an appeal from an injunction already issued. In such cases, the rule states the court may suspend the injunction.

Post 9-22-57

James Simmonds, Arlington attorney representing the school board, opened the argument in support of the motion. He told the court that the authority of the Virginia Pupil Placement Board to assign pupils should be passed upon by the Court of Appeals.

He pointed out that the Circuit Court of Appeals in the Newport News and Norfolk cases has granted stays until the U.S. Supreme Court passes upon the petition for a review of these two cases.

In both of these cases the Court of Appeals upheld the decision of Judge Walter E. Hoffman of the Federal District Court at Norfolk that the Virginia Pupil Placement Act is unconstitutional.

OLIVER W. HILL, Richmond attorney, representing the colored children and their parents, argued that there was no basis for granting a stay.

Mr. Hill noted the conspicuous absence of J. Lindsay Almond, who resigned recently as Attorney General of Virginia, but participated in the Arlington case on Sept. 11, opposing the petition of the colored children for enforcement of the injunction ordering their admission to hitherto white schools.

At the beginning of school segregation litigation, from the Prince Edwards County case to the Arlington County case, Mr. Hill asserted, Mr. Almonds, who is now a candidate for governor, has taken an active part in the litigation.

Although Arlington County is the particular unit involved in this case, Mr. Hill said, Virginia has undertaken to make the issue of school desegregation a completely commonwealth matter.

THE RICHMOND attorney pointed out that the Arlington School Board two years ago was willing to inaugurate a program of gradual desegregation, "but the Commonwealth took it over and said no city, no town, no county can handle this matter, it has got to be handled as a commonwealth matter."

That question has been determined, he said. The only new thing the court has done, he said, is determine that the Pupil Placement Act did not constitutionally afford a reasonable remedy.

The Court of Appeals has passed upon that issue, he said, and the sole purpose of these appeals of issues already determined is merely to "carry out the announced policy of

DeFebios Out of School Until Court Gives Ruling

Post 10-26-57

The DeFebio brothers are out of school again and the Virginia Pupil Placement Board has sent word that they are ineligible to re-enter public schools until the State Supreme Court passes on their case.

Mrs. Theo T. DeFabio of Fairfax County said she had to take her two sons out of St. Michael's Parochial School principally because of transportation difficulties and that she had hoped to get them back in public school as a result of the United States Supreme Court decision last week affecting the placement law.

Mrs. DeFebio's sons were put out of public schools in Fairfax County last April because she refused to sign pupil placement forms. The forms are required under the placement law Virginia adopted to preserve segregated schools.

Last week, the Supreme Court upheld lower court decisions which had rendered the placement law useless as a defense against integration. The high court's action, however, apparently left unanswered a legal question whether the entire placement law was unconstitutional, or whether it just can't be enforced on Negro students to keep them out of white schools.

Mrs. DeFebio's attorney wired the placement board after the Supreme Court acted, asking that Nicky and Teddy DeFebio be readmitted to public schools.

The placement board's reply, received yesterday, said the DeFebio case was unaffected by the Supreme Court action, and would have to await the outcome of the lawsuit brought by Mrs. DeFebio in the State Supreme Court.

Admits Possibility First Time

Some 'Enforced Integration' Seen By Candidate Almond in Virginia

By Paul Sampson
Staff Reporter

J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Virginia's Democratic candidate for Governor, said yesterday that "no doubt" there will be some "enforced integration under the mandates of Federal Courts" in Virginia.

It was the first time Almond had admitted the possibility of integration in Virginia's public schools.

In the past, the former states attorney general frequently has said he will use every legal means to prevent integration. He also has maintained he couldn't foresee the mixing of the races.

Questioned by Joseph F. McCaffrey on the WMAL-TV program Celebrity Parade, Almond said:

"I do not foresee the time when the mixing of the races in the public schools of Virginia will be accepted—will be on an acceptable basis. And by that I mean that I do not foresee the time, I cannot foresee the time, when the mixing of the races will not greatly and seriously militate against our system of public education.

"No doubt there will be some in some areas—enforced integration under the mandate of Federal Courts. It will be our purpose to mitigate it as much as possible."

Almond's Republican opponent, Ted Dalton, has, in effect admitted there will be some integration in Virginia public schools by calling for a pupil assignment plan.

Reached at his home after the program, Almond was asked if his statement meant that he would not obstruct the orders of a Federal Court if the Court ordered integration of a Virginia school. He replied that under the law, he, as Governor, would have no choice but to return an integrated school to local school board control if the local school board petitioned him to have it returned.

Both on and after the program, Almond said in response to questions that under Virginia law state funds are stopped to any integrated school and the school is shut down. He emphasized that the Governor would have to return such schools to local authorities if they request it, and they can then be operated without state funds.

Asked if that meant Virginia would permit integration if a Federal Court ordered it, Almond declined to elaborate. Asked if his statement about local control of schools meant a pledge of no Little Rocks in Virginia, Almond said Little Rock had nothing to do with it.

After the program Almond also was asked if the resources of the State of Virginia would be used to help a local school board defy the orders of a Federal court. He replied that he would use state resources to maintain "peace and order." He repeated the statement about maintaining peace and order when questioned about using state power to prevent any group of persons from obstructing an integration order.

On the program, Almond specifically discussed the possibility of Arlington schools being integrated and losing state funds.

He pointed out that in Arlington, the local contribution is very high and far better than the average in the state. He estimated that Arlington got about 30 per cent of its school funds from the state.

"But I do say it is to Arlington's everlasting credit that they have done a grand job through local efforts for their schools," Almond added.

McCaffrey questioned Almond about the North Carolina pupil assignment plan, which allows limited integration.

Almond called it "just wishful thinking, for there is no such thing in fact as limited integration or token integration. You either comply or you don't comply."

"When you say limited integration," Almond explained, "you limit that which the Supreme Court has defined as the constitutional rights of individuals, all individuals."

Almond warned "we know beyond any shadow of doubt that the mixing of the races in great areas of Virginia will force the public school system as we know it to close—to the serious detriment of colored children and for white children—a thing which we deeply deplore."

Litigation, School Opening Responsible

Virginia's Pupil Placement Board Opens Branch Office in Arlintgon

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

The Virginia State Pupil Placement Board is opening an Arlington County branch office to handle litigation detail and a heavy workload expected to accompany the opening of schools there.

This development was disclosed on the same day that Arlington school officials announced that:

An estimated 1400-1500 pupils will not be able to enter county schools on opening day, Sept. 5, because their parents failed to meet last Friday's deadline for filing Pupil Placement Board forms.

Another Negro pupil—the sixth—has filed for admission to a white school. She is Joyce Marie Bailey, 1929 N. Dinwiddie st., who went to Hoffman-Boston High School last semester but has applied at Stratford Junior High School for admission.

A spokesman for the Pupil Placement Board in Richmond declined to comment on the opening of the Arlington branch, other than to say the Board planned to make a public announcement on Thursday.

The branch office is located in Room 301 of the Arlington Trust Co. building, Wilson blvd. and Courthouse rd. Director will be Birchell S. Hilton, former Superintendent of Shenandoah County schools. He and his wife were fixing up the office yesterday and talked freely with other tenants.

The branch will not open for business until next Tuesday. It is understood that members of the Pupil Placement Board feel an Arlington branch can facilitate the Board's work, especially in view of Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan's recent decision in the Arlington desegregation case.

Bryan, in effect, said that Negro pupils wishing to go to a now-white school would first have to apply to the Pupil Placement Board.

The Board was set up by the General Assembly a year ago to administer Virginia's Pupil Placement Act which has been declared unconstitutional in a ruling now appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

Dalton Doubts Rival Has Any School Plan

Appeal to Racial Emotions to Win Votes Charged

By MARY LOU WERNER
Star Staff Reporter

LURAY, Va., Sept. 28.—State Senator Ted Dalton, Republican candidate for Governor, last night accused his Democratic opponent, J. Lindsey Almond, jr., of attempting to "stir up racial emotions" to win votes in the November election.

Senator Dalton, who is campaigning in behalf of a local pupil assignment plan to cope with school segregation, added that he doubted if Mr. Almond had any plan at all.

"I am beginning to believe that he is perpetrating a hoax on the people and that he has no plan," the Republican nominee told a cheering audience of 400 at a Page County G. O. P. rally.

Mr. Almond in his campaign has pledged to fight to preserve school segregation, and has warned that the pupil assignment advocated by Senator Dalton "will lead to forced integration and racial amalgamation."

New Ideas Not Disclosed

In a speech two weeks ago, Mr. Almond said he had some new ideas about handling the school situation, but did not want to disclose them lest the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People trample on his "basket of eggs."

Senator Dalton said, "Mr. Almond and the machine have but one motive and but one compelling desire in mind—that is to keep his basket of eggs covered and to stir up racial emotions until after the votes are counted November 5."

The Republican candidate demanded:

"I ask, is it not tragic that Mr. Almond, if he has a plan to help save Virginia's separate schools, will not disclose it until after election day.

"I ask, is it fair to Virginia's people to ask them to approve a plan in the secret recesses of Mr. Almond's mind."

Cites North Carolina

Senator Dalton again pointed out to North Carolina, where seven Negro students have been admitted to white schools under a pupil assignment plan like the one he advocates for Virginia.

He said he considered it significant that Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina has been named chairman of the Southern Governors group, which is to meet with President Eisenhower to discuss the school segregations problem.

"This is but the beginning on the part of the South to look to the North Carolina pupil assignment plan, administered by local school boards, as the only means to preserve our separate public schools," said Senator Dalton. "Gov. Hodges and North Carolina are pointing the way voluntarily and peaceably and orderly. It is undoubtedly breaking the hearts of Mr. Almond and his cohorts that the pupil assignment plan is working in North Carolina, where there is a greater Negro population than in Virginia."

He said the Negro admissions were "token admissions" calculated to preserve that State's pupil assignment plan

Only one race suit is now pending in North Carolina, he said, whereas in Virginia suits are pending all over the State.

Open Floodgates Seen

Senator Dalton declared that when an order, suspended by Judge Albert V. Bryan goes in effect in Arlington five Negro children "will walk into the white schools there immediately—with the probability of many many more when they apply, and the floodgates will open all over Virginia."

Mr. Almond, addressing Democratic Women's Clubs of Norfolk, Virginia Beach, Princess Anne County and Norfolk County at Norfolk, urged Virginia's voters not to be "fooled" by the pupil assignment plan advocated by Mr. Dalton.

He said Mr. Dalton's plan has already been "thrown out the window" by the Federal courts and said if he is elected Governor Virginia will have "an efficient and functioning" school system, higher salaries for teachers and "no tax increase in the next four years."

Mr. Almond also criticized what he termed the Federal Government's "ruthless, high-handed, indefensible action . . . in declaring war on the State of Arkansas in violation of the Constitution of the United States."

Placement Act Enjoined In Norfolk

Judge Fears Parents Might Be Prosecuted Under Truancy Laws

NORFOLK, Sept. 28 (AP) Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman issued an injunction today temporarily restraining enforcement of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act in Norfolk, Suffolk and Nansemond County.

Hoffman made the ruling after expressing concern that unless a temporary injunction were granted, parents who refused to sign the act, and whose children were refused admittance to school, might be prosecuted under the State's truancy laws.

The judge also asked lawyers if he would not be reversing his previous opinion that the Pupil Placement Act is unconstitutional on its face, if he did not grant the injunction.

Parents Plea

The Judge was asked by counsel for plaintiff parents to issue the restraining order. He heard arguments from these attorneys and from counsel for defendants—the school boards and school superintendents in the three communities and two members of the Pupil Placement Board.

The plaintiffs all are parents of Negro children barred from school for refusal to sign pupil placement forms. Their attorneys seek a ruling that the children cannot be barred because of that refusal.

Hoffman asked counsel for defendants how, if the restraining order were not issued, and the children were kept out of school, the Court might be assured that the parents would be prosecuted under the truancy law.

Informed that no such assurance could be given under law, Hoffman predicted the possibility of "an anomalous case of prosecution of parents under the truancy law for violation of a statute held unconstitutional by one court and affirmed by another."

[Children in Richmond and Charlottesville have been admitted to schools under Federal Court orders without signing the pupil placement forms. In Alexandria, Federal Court Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington schools to admit one of the litigants in the Arlington school case without signing a form.

In Fairfax County two sons of Theo de Febio were expelled when she refused to sign the forms. They are now attending St. Michael's Parochial School in Annandale. Mrs. de Febio's suit attacking the validity of the pupil placement Act will be heard by the State Supreme Court.

(In Falls Church, Joel C. Klein is still out of school because his parents refused to sign. School Board Chairman Richard Saintsing said the Board has no intention of admitting the child unless directed by "proper State authorities," nor does it intend to invoke State's truancy laws.)

Hoffman ruled in January that the Virginia Pupil Placement Act is unconstitutional on its face. His decision was affirmed by the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals, and is now under appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

Hoffman said the Supreme Court of Virginia will probably take up the Pupil Placement Act matter soon after it opens session in November.

Private Luxury

Luxury can be cheap, like the heaven-sent luxury of a private patio deck right outside your bedroom. How many times we have wished we could step into the fresh outdoors when the early morning sun peeps over the horizon! Modern designers plan bedrooms with an outside door, and a deck of inexpensive grades of Douglas fir 2x6 planks is good for a private lounging corner away from family bustle.

U.S. Prods Virginians On Schools

Wants Deadline On Segregation

BALTIMORE, (Nov. 11 (AP)— The 4th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled today that a federal district judge was wrong in refusing to set a time limit for the end of school segregation in Prince Edward County, Virginia.

The case is one of the original five cases on which the Supreme Court ruled in its desegregation decisions of 1954 and 1955. It has been before the District Court ever since.

State and county attorneys declined comment in Richmond on the opinion. Presumably they can appeal the Circuit Court decision to the Supreme Court.

NEGROES PREDOMINATE

The school population of 3,030 in Prince Edward County is 54 per cent Negro and 46 per cent white. It is virtually a certainty Prince Edward officials will close all the county schools before they will accept any integration, and they have set up machinery and funds for educating white children privately.

A lawyer for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People told the Circuit Court during arguments on this appeal, however, it would not stand by and see the schools closed without taking court action against it.

ORDER DEMANDED

The ruling, issued by the Appeals Court sitting in Baltimore, was handed down in a case brought by Hal E. Allen on behalf of his three children against the county school board.

Reversing a decision by District Judge Sterling Hutcheson, the court directed that the case be returned to the lower court for issuance of an order "directing the defendants to make a prompt and reasonable start" toward ending compulsory segregation.

"This does not mean," the court said in a four-page opinion, "that the defendants should require mixing of white and Negro children in the schools, but merely that they should abolish the requirement of discrimination."

If children "should voluntarily attend different schools, this would not be violative of the constitution" or court order, the opinion added.

"Furthermore," the court said, "it would not be necessary for the requirement as to segregation to be removed at once with respect to all grades in the schools if a reasonable start were made to that end with 'deliberate speed' considering the problems of proper administration."

HIGH COURT KILLS PUPIL PLACING LAW

Next Move Up to District Judge

BY WILLARD EDWARDS
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Washington, Oct. 21 — The Supreme court today in effect killed an intricate legal system set up by the state of Virginia to avoid racial integration of its schools.

In a brief, unsigned order which gave no explanation, Chief Justice Warren and his eight associates refused a hearing to Virginia authorities who appealed from a lower court decision that a so-called pupil placement law was unconstitutional.

The ruling thus leaves standing a fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals decision affirming a lower court order forbidding racial discrimination in schools in Norfolk and Newport News, Va. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman in Norfolk, who held the state law unconstitutional, will now presumably set a date when integration must take place.

Elect Governor Soon

In a state torn by anger and bitterness over the segregation issue, none would predict the consequences but a repetition of the Little Rock, Ark., episode was considered a possibility. Virginia is in the midst of a gubernatorial election, scheduled for two weeks from tomorrow, in which both Republican and Democratic candidates favor segregation but differ on methods of resistance.

The Supreme court rejected the pleas of school officials and the Virginia attorney general that the lower court decision "makes even more difficult of solution the most difficult social problem presented to the people of this country in eight decades."

"The time has come for the Supreme court to recognize and expound the practicalities of life in these areas and to establish a framework within which public education can continue," the appellants stated.

Law Bars Integration

The Virginia pupil placement act takes all pupil assignments out of the hands of local school officials and places responsibility in a special three-member board appointed by the governor. Other provisions require the immediate closing of any integrated school and denial of state funds if the school should reopen on an integrated basis under local administration. Tuition grants would be provided for private schooling of children of either race whose parents object to integrated classrooms.

Last March, the Supreme court rejected an appeal involving Virginia schools in Charlottesville and Arlington. These cases, however, did not involve the pupil placement act. Seven Arlington county Negroes unsuccessfully sought admission to white schools last month on the strength of this ruling but the pupil placement act was cited by authorities in refusing to admit them.

Upholds Loyalty Oath

A lawyer for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People said he interpreted today's action as throwing out the Virginia law. The N. A. A. C. P. probably will ask Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan to order immediate integration in Arlington schools, he said.

In other actions today the court:

1. Agreed to hear arguments on a California law that organizations must file a loyalty oath to qualify for tax exemptions.

2. Granted a hearing to William F. Knop of Orange county, Cal., who is under death sentence for the fatal shooting of a 15 year old girl while attempting rape.

Okays Tape Disclosure

3. Granted a hearing to Bart Caritativo, Filipino houseboy of Stinson Beach, Cal., who was condemned to death three years ago for the hammer and knife murders of two beach resort owners.

4. Let stand a decision permitting public disclosure of a tape recorded conversation in Westchester county, N. Y., between a convicted extortionist, Joseph Lanza, and a lawyer

Almond Cites Carolina Action

Post + Times Herald P. 3-B

Washington D.C.

RICHMOND, July 24 (AP)—Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., pointed today to the admission of 12 Negroes to previously all-white North Carolina schools as proof that "the assignment plan advocated by Mr. Dalton embraces and accepts the principle of race mixing in the public schools."

"It invites and promotes integration. For anyone to take the position that he seeks to preserve our public school system as it is and in the same breath advocates the North Carolina assignment plan, engulfs himself in a mass of contradictions and inconsistencies," Almond said.

Republican Ted Dalton, Almond's opponent in the race for Governor, has long advocated a locally-administered assignment plan such as North Carolina's. The North Carolina plan is modeled on the proposal of Virginia's original Gray Commission, which called for local assignment according to many criteria—excluding race.

Virginia rejected the Gray Commission recommendations, setting up a State operated Pupil Placement Board and providing for steps leading to the cutoff of State funds from any school permitting integration.

Dalton claims that only by the Gray Commission plan can Virginia's public schools be maintained. He says the cut-off-the-funds approach of the present state administration is a "massive myth" that will leave the state with closed schools and eventual wholesale integration.

Almond said today "that which is transpiring in North Carolina emphasizes the efficacy of my statement made July 5." In that statement he said a pupil assignment plan such as North Carolina's would not preserve Virginia schools from the "destructive effects" of integration.

"The very purpose of an assignment plan is to assign negroes to white schools," Almond said today. "The public schools system in Virginia cannot be preserved through this method. To advocate assignment is to advocate integration.

"Once the principle of integration is accepted, the floodgates open, and we will have it in every locality in Virginia where race is the determining factor."

Charlotte, Winston Salem and Greensboro school boards, acting under North Carolina's pupil assignment act, and meeting separately, yesterday approved the application of 12 negro pupils for admission to white schools.

Virginia County Assails High Court

Post + Times Herald

Washington D.C.

KING WILLIAM, Va., July 18 (AP)—A group of King William County citizens is planning to hang a declaration in the county courtroom denouncing the Supreme Court.

The group named the "Citizens Committee" says the Supreme Court "no longer considers itself bound by the Constitution." The committee drew up its declaration at a June 6 meeting.

P. 21-B

Thomas Hill, deputy clerk of the county, said no date has been set for hanging the framed declaration in the courthouse. Duplicate copies are being distributed to interested persons.

The declaration says it is the committee's conviction ". . . the Constitution of the United States was written to establish and preserve freedom and liberty to the state and to the people . . .

"We are convinced . . . the Supreme Court . . . no longer considers itself bound by the constitution or by long-established precedents of law. It is clear to us . . . the nine men of the Supreme Court now presume to be the law unto themselves. This we resist."

The declaration is signed by Malcom Harris and R. Tyler Bland, both of West Point, and Edgar R. Lafferty Jr. of Elfing Green.

The committee has printed a medallion, on one side of which are the words: "The Constitution or the Supreme Court—liberty or tyranny."

G. C. Garrett Jr., clerk of the court, said 800 to 1000 orders had been received for the medallion and declaration.

Desegregation Stay Granted To Two Cities

Star P. 21-A

Fri. 7-19-57

Washington D.C.

RICHMOND, July 19 (AP).—The U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday directed that the desegregation order of the Norfolk and Newport News school cases be held up until the Supreme Court takes final action on Virginia's projected appeal.

The court granted the stay of execution in the wake of its decision last Saturday upholding Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman's desegration decision which held the new pupil placement act to be unconstitutional.

Senior Judge John J. Parker and Judges Simmon E. Sobeloff and Clement Haynsworth also signed the stay.

Judge Hoffman had ordered a start on desegregation in the Norfolk and Newport News public schools by the start of the September term. However, the stay apparently means there will be no mixing of the races at the start of the term, since the State was given 30 days from last Tuesday in which to note an appeal. The Supreme Court is now in summer recess and is not due to sit again until October.

The Appeals Court action may have a bearing on District Court desegregation orders in Arlington and Charlottesville as well.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People yesterday filed in Alexandria Federal District Court a motion asking for a start on desegregation in Arlington this fall without regard to the placement act.

Attorneys for the NAACP asked the pending desegregation decree against Arlington be changed to say it does not necessitate compliance with the placement act.

Presumably, the NAACP will take similar action in the Charlottesville case. Attorneys on both sides are due to confer with Judge John Paul at his Harrisonburg officse July 26 about the matter.

Defense Speeds Virginia Racial School Battle

Advertiser Thu. 7-18-57

RICHMOND, Va., July 15 (AP)—Defense lawyers decided today to move quickly in asking the Supreme Court to review the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals ruling that Norfolk and Newport News schools must desegregate by September.

P. 8-E

Meanwhile, there was speculation on what effect the Circuit Court's ruling—in knocking down Virginia's 1956 pupil placement act—would have on Charlottesville and Arlington segregation cases.

Charlottesville and Arlington school boards are expected to ask for more time on the grounds that under the pupil placement act—until and unless it is thrown out by the Supreme Court—they are powerless to assign pupils.

The Pupil Placement Act vested in a state board all powers of assignment formerly held by local school boards.

But this law was held unconstitutional by U.S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. Saturday's opinion by the Circuit Court upheld Hoffman.

If the Circuit Court grants this request, it will mean that schools in Norfolk and Newport News will open on a segregated basis because the Supreme Court is in summer recess and will not convene until October.

Desegregation To Be Argued in Alexandria Court

Washington D.C.

Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan will hear arguments in Alexandria July 29 on a motion for an order directing full desegregation of Arlington County schools in September.

The motion was filed yesterday by counsel for Negro children seeking an end to Arlington's segregated school system.

The judge was asked not to delay desegregation pending final determination of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act by the Supreme Court. The Act has been declared unconstitutional by the U. S. Court of Appeals.

Meanwhile, in Richmond, the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit issued an order staying the effectiveness of its decree that the Placement Act is invalid in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. The stay was granted with the proviso that an appeal petition be filed with the Supreme Court not later than Aug. 14.

The Court of Appeals also directed Judge Walter E. Hoffman to stay the effective date of his order for desegregation of Norfolk and Newport News schools while the appeal is pending.

Observers anticipate that Counsel for Negro children in Charlottesville shortly will file a motion with Judge John Paul, of Harrisonburg, asking for substantially the same order sought from Judge Bryan: full integration with the start of the September term.

Defense attorneys in all four cases are banking on the Supreme Court's summer recess to permit the opening of segregated schools for the regular fall term beginning soon after Labor Day. The High Court is not scheduled to reconvene until October, and presumably would not act on the appeal petitions until then.

Counsel for the Negro children consistently has taken the position that they will not seek a change from a segregated to an integrated system in the middle of a school term.

In the motion before Judge Bryan yesterday, counsel for the Negro children contended that his original injunction should be updated "to dispell the misapprehensions of school authorities as to their obligations under the law and to bring about their prompt compliance with constitutional requirements as interpreted by the Supreme Court."

Attorneys for the plaintiffs asked that they be awarded their costs in bringing the Arlington suits and in defending the trial decision on appeal.

Virginia School Action Delayed

RICHMOND, Va., July 18 (AP)—The U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals today ordered a desegregation order for Norfolk and Newport News schools held up until the Supreme Court takes final action in the two cases.

This means schools in the two cities will open on a segregated basis in September. The state has 30 days to appeal last Saturday's decision by the Circuit Court, and the Supreme Court will not sit until October.

In its decision last Saturday the circuit court upheld Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman's desegregation decision in the two cases. In so doing it threw out Virginia's new pupil placement act which had been used as a basis for appeal.

Governor 'Hopeful' Virginia Schools To Open On Segregated Basis In September As In Past

Advertiser

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 1 (AP)—Gov. Thomas B. Stanley said today "as I see the picture now, I am very hopeful that schools will open on a segregated basis in September as they have in the past."

Montgomery Ala.

As for the long view and the future of the state Pupil Placement Act, the governor told a press conference "we will just have to wait and see what the court's decision will be."

8-2-57

The act has been thrown out by federal district and appeals courts but will be appealed by the state to the U.S. Supreme Court which is now in recess. The high court reconvenes in October.

The governor was asked if he would attempt to enforce the act in Charlottesville where federal judge John Paul last week said Negro parents and pupils would not have to fill out assignment forms provided under the act which set up the 3-member central state agency.

P. 3-B

NO ACTION

"I understand the (pupil placement) board will continue its work as in the past, and until there is some conflict I plan no action by this office," the governor replied.

Stanley recalled that Judge Paul had said he would not require desegregation during the first semester of the coming year since the validity of the act cannot be passed on by the Supreme Court until after the opening of schools.

NO SPECULATION

The governor declined to speculate on which is the most critical of five districts in which there are segregation cases pending. Desegregation orders are being held in abeyance in Norfolk, Newport News, Charlottesville and Arlington County pending the outcome of the Supreme Court's decision.

NO TIME LIMIT

In Prince Edward County, school officials are under order to desegregate but no time limit has been set.

Stanley was asked for comment mon a statement by W. Lester Banks, executive secretary of the Virginia State Conference of NAACP Branches, yesterday that he knew of no general discrimination against Negroes' voting rights in Virginia.

"I haven't felt there has been," the governor said. "There may have been a few isolated cases.'

NO COMPLAINT

He said not a single complaint had come to him from a Negro in this regard during his term of office.

In Fairness To Judge Hoffman

Journal & Guide P. 9

From the Virginian-Pilot

The possibility exists, to judge by publications in some Virginia newspapers, that the recent remarks of Senator Byrd in Norfolk, at the Hampton Roads Maritime Association's annual dinner on May 9, in criticism of Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman, will be so confused in repetition that a legend will grow up in Virginia unsustained by fact. In fairness to Judge Hoffman we think the record should be examined.

Sat. 6-1-57

The need for such examination is illustrated by editorial comment on Tuesday, May 14, in the Roanoke World-News, a newspaper for which we have great respect and from which we have quoted in admiration many times, and expect to do so in the future. In an editorial entitled "Senator Byrd Replies to Political Judge," that newspaper based a large part of its comment on the following premise:

Norfolk Va.

The "bombastic and political" statements attributed to Judge Hoffman were made on Nov. 17, 1956, from the bench when he sat supposedly to give impartial consideration to integration cases against Norfolk and Newport News.

He came to court with a prepared statement rejecting all contentions of the defendants prior to hearing a word of argument and before studying briefs. Before attorneys took the floor he stated that he was inclined to "throw the whole case out of the window."

This statement by the Roanoke World-News made such a strong impression that the Winchester Evening Star, another newspaper for which we have great respect, commented favorably on May 18 on the World-News' editorial in words which included these:

The judicial arrogance to which the the World-News refers were the bombastic and political statements made by Judge Hoffman when presiding over integration cases against Norfolk and Newport News. The World-News says Judge Hoffman "came to court with a prepared statement rejecting all contentions of the defendants (the school boards of Norfolk and Newport News) prior to hearing a word of argument and before studying briefs. Before attorneys took the floor he stated he was "inclined to throw the whole case out of the window."

Conduct thus described would be serious indeed. But the records of the cases in question, including the stenographic transcript, show quite a different series of events.

The hearing in United States District Court in Norfolk on Nov. 17, 1956, was on motion to dismiss integration suits brought against Newport News and Norfolk school authorities. The dismissals were sought on several contentions, including the contention that administrative remedies were open to the Negro plaintiffs. In this connection the recently enacted statute for setting up a state pupil placement board was cited.

The integration cases were not being heard at this time on their merits. That came later, on February 11 for the Newport News case, and on February 12 for the Norfolk case.

About the hearing on Nov. 17 on the motion to dismiss, the following facts were reported at the time, and subsequently, and are sustained by the record:

That Judge Hoffman handed down no decision that day.

That the argument lasted for several hours in what appeared to listeners to be a normal way.

That the argument included much pro and con about the constitutionality of the recently enacted statute for a state pupil placement board.

That if Judge Hoffman came into court with a prepared statement of any kind, he did not show it, read from it, or refer to it.

That late in the day, after the arguments had been completed, the record shows that the following interchange took place:

Judge Hoffman. I have grave doubts about the constitutionality of what the General Assembly of Virginia did. And if I had to rule on it today, I can tell you definitely I would throw it out of the window.

Attorney General Almond. We aren't insisting on an immediate decision, your honor.

Judge Hoffman. I want to read the authorities and anything you have on it. It has been ably argued on both sides. . .

The decision on this motion to dismiss did not come until Jan. 11, 1957, or nearly two months later. The hearing of the Newport News and Norfolk integration cases on their merits did not come until a month after that (Feb. 11 and 12).

It may be possible to disagree with Judge Hoffman's January decision as to the plea for the use of administrative remedies. It may be possible also to disagree with his February decision as to the merits of the two cases. It may be that he should not have said anything at all on Nov. 17 about his grave doubt then of the constitutionality of the state's pupil placement act, even though he had just heard several hours of argument about it.

But the record does not seem to us to subject Judge Hoffman to the criticism that he came into court with a prepared statement rejecting all contentions of the defendants prior to hearing a word of argument, or that before attorneys took the floor he stated that he was inclined to throw the whole case out of the window.

We say this after having said that Judge Hoffman has sometimes spoken too freely from the bench. His friends, and probably he himself, know he has come under criticism for doing so. But there is an important distinction between extraneous, or irrelevant, comments from the bench, and the attribution to Judge Hoffman of comments on a case before him, or a mode of conduct toward such a case, so grave in import as perhaps to constitute judicial error. In fairness to Judge Hoffman we think the errors of attribution should be corrected.

Virginia County Ordered To Desegregate Schools

News & Observer Sun. 7-28-57
Raleigh, N.C.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 27 (UP)—Federal Dist. Judge Albert Bryan today ordered Arlington County, Va., to desegregate its schools at the opening of the fall semester in September.

He upheld a motion by Negro attorneys to order a year-old Arlington desegregation decree into effect immediately.

The ruling was the exact reversal of a ruling Friday by federal Judge John Paul of Harrisonburg, Va., in a Charlottesville, Va., desegregation case.

Identical Case.

Judge Paul, ruling on the identical motion in a nearly identical school case, ordered a year-old desegregation decree against Charlottesville delayed until the U. S. Supreme Court passes on Virginia's Pupil-Placement Act.

The delay in the Charlottesville case was expected to last at least six months.

Judge Bryan dismissed the pupil-placement law as not pertinent to the Arlington case.

"The sufficiency of the pupil-placement act," he said, "has not been previously an issue in this suit and is now advanced prematurely."

He added, "The court must deny the plaintiff's request that the decree be enlarged to include a declaration paralleling the ruling of the court of appeals, in effect allowing the students to by-pass the Pupil Placement Act."

Victory for Negroes.

The decision was a complete victory for Negro attorneys Oliver Hill and Spottswood Robinson of Richmond, Va., who argued the Arlington schools should be desegregated this fall and that the Pupil Placement Act should be disregarded.

Judge Bryan heard oral argument on the case this morning.

Virginia Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., representing the county, centered this defense on Judge Paul's ruling on Friday. Almond also cited what he callled "the insurmountable difficulties faced by the school board in making such an adjustment at this late date."

Almond also asked that Judge Bryan withhold the desegregation decree until the Pupil - Placement Act had been tested in the Supreme Court.

Integration Is Delayed In Virginia

News & Observer Raleigh, N.C. Sat. 7-27-57

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 26 (AP) — Federal Judge John Paul today delayed start of desegregation in Charlottesville's pubiic schools pending a final ruling on Virginia's pupil placement law.

At the same time he restrained Charlottesville school officials from requiring any pupil to apply for placement as a requirement for attending school.

Pleases Officials.

The court's action obviously pleased State Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., his special assistant, Henry Wickham, and former Gov. John S. Battle, counsel for the defendant school officials. Plainly disappointed were Spottswood W. Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, who had argued vainly to have the Negro children admitted to white schools this fall.

At Richmond, Gov. Stanley told newsmen he was "very pleased the court is staying his order until the validity of the pupil placement act is decided."

The effect of today's action denying Robinson's motion asking that the Negro pupils be admitted to white schools this fall is that Charlottesville's schools will remain segregated at least until the January, 1958, semester.

Another effect of the decision comes on the political scene, where the two major party nominees for governor in the November election have clashed over the state's school program.

Almond, the Democratic aspirant, contends the "massive resistance" program now followed is the best course to preserve the public schools. On the other hand State Sen. Ted Dalton of Radford, the Republican nominee, argues Virginia should turn to an assignment plan such as North Carolina's as a means of preserving the most segregation in the most places.

Judge Studies Order To Mix Virginia Schools

Journal + Constitution Sun. 7-28-57

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 27 (UP)—Federal Judge Albert Bryan took under advisement Saturday a motion that he order Arlington County, Va., schools to desegregate in September.

Bryan said he hopes to have a decision by Monday.

Another Virginia city has been granted a six-month delay in the desegregation schedule.

Judge Bryan heard arguments on the motions made by Negro attorneys Oliver Hill and Spottswood Robinson in Alexandria Federal District Court. The Negro attorneys asked that Arlington County be ordered to desegregate in September and that Judge Bryan declare Virginia's pupil placement act as not applicable to the Arlington school case.

VIRGINIA Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., representing the state and county, said that "in a nutshell, all we ask is a stay of execution of the integration order."

Almond referred to a ruling by U.S. District Judge John Paul of Harrisonburg, Va., who granted the Charlottesville, Va., school board at least another six months in which to desegregate schools.

Almond also cited what he called "the insurmountable difficulties faced by the school board in making such an adjustment at this late date."

Bryan asked several questions about the Arlington case and then said he would have his decision "as soon as my study permits."

THE ARLINGTON school board was ordered last year to desegregate by September, 1956. The order was stayed last year as the decision was appealed unsuccessfully to the U.S. Supreme Court.

Judge Paul Friday gave Charlottesville, which is in the identical situation as Arlington County, more time in which to desegregate.

His ruling, however, was not a complete victory for the state. He also ruled that Charlottesville could not deny school admission to children because their parents refuse to sign application forms for their assignment to schools under Virginia's pupil placement law.

Arlington Ordered to Integrate

Ruling Effective In County Schools This September

Washington, D. C.

By Paul Sampson
Staff Reporter

Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington County yesterday to desegregate its public schools in September.

In an unexpected decision, Bryan also declined to allow Virginia's Pupil Placement Act to be bypassed.

On Friday Federal Judge John Paul agreed to delay desegregation of Charlottesville schools until the Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of the Virginia Pupil Placement Act. Paul also ruled that parents did not have to use the Pupil Placement machinery.

Campaign Issue

Bryan's decision places the school integration issue squarely in the middle of the coming Virginia gubernatorial campaign.

Virginia authorities had hoped the question could have been deferred until the February semester.

Bryan's ruling came in a two-page memorandum late yesterday afternoon. In the morning, the Judge had heard nearly two hours of arguments for and against starting desegregation in September.

Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. asked Bryan to delay the integration order until the Supreme Court of the United States rules on the validity of the Pupil Placement Act. Almond cited Judge Paul's ruling.

Right Established

In his memorandum, Judge Bryan said that, in the Arlington County case, the right to an injunction forcing desegregation already has been established.

The ruling paves the way for Arlington Negro school children to apply for admittance to white schools. They must, however, use the machinery of the Pupil Placement Act.

If under the Act, they are denied admittance to white schools, they may complain that Judge Bryan's decree has been violated. The Court then will inquire if the complainant has had adequate means of submitting his grievance for correction administratively.

"At that time," Bryan wrote, "it (the Court) will weigh the complaint and any administrative action taken theron to ascertain whether the decree has or has not been followed, and if not, the reason for the failure."

The Pupil Placement Act would be considered an administrative remedy. Byram sounded a clear warning, however, that the Act would receive close scrutiny by his court if a complainant said it was not an adequate remedy.

Arlington Plan Set Today on Segregation

Will Request Stay

In School Order Till High Court Rules

Arlington attorneys go before Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan today to seek a school desegregation delay similar to the one granted yesterday in the Charlottesville case.

Negro attorneys, however, will argue in Alexandria Federal District Court for a start on desegregation in the Arlington public schools this September—the date previously set by Judge Bryan.

Attorneys for the county's school board will request a delay until the United States Supreme Court rules on the constitutionality of the State's first line of defense against integration—the Pupil Placement Act. The Supreme Court has recessed until October.

Hearing Asked by NAACP

Today's hearing comes at the request of counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP filed a written plea with Judge Bryan that he amend his original desegregation order to specify that county pupils do not need to comply with the State placement statute.

Arlington, along with Charlottesville, is under Supreme Court orders to end segregation by race in the public classrooms this fall. However, after these two cases originated, Virginia adopted its package of new anti-integration laws—including the pupil placement statute.

This law was held unconstitutional by Federal Judge Walter Hoffman in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. His ruling was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals two weeks ago but the court has agreed to withhold its mandate pending Supreme Court action.

Bid for More Time

Attorneys for Arlington are now attempting to take advantage of this delay, as in Charlottesville, to win time in their own case.

Yesterday, according to the Associated Press, Federal District Judge John Paul agreed to withhold enforcement of his desegregation decree in the Charlottesville suit until the Supreme Court acts on the placement law.

Judge Paul said, after a closed conference in Harrisonburg with counsel for the NAACP, the State and the local school board, that the order would be effective the first semester after the Supreme Court makes its ruling.

At the same time, Judge Paul ruled that no pupil, of either race, be required to sign the State pupil placement forms.

Fairfax Pupils Ousted

In Fairfax County, two brothers have been put out of school because their mother, Mrs. Theo T. Debebio, refused to fill out the placement forms. An appeal is pending in the case before the State Supreme Court.

The placement law vests the authority to assign students in a three-member State board, rather than with local school boards.

Judge Paul's action obviously pleased State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr.; his special assistant, Henry Wickham, and former Gov. John S. Battle, counsel for the defendant school officials. Plainly disappointed were Spottswood W. Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, who had argued vainly to have the Negro children admitted to white schools this fall.

At Richmond, Gov. Stanley told newsmen he was "very pleased the court is staying his order until the valirity of the pupil placement act is decided."

The effect of yesterday's action is that Charlottesville's schools will remain segregated at least until the January, 1958, semester, since the Supreme Court will not pass on the placement law until after the September session begins.

In verbally announcing his decision to reporters after a lengthy hearing with counsel in chambers, Judge Paul said he had concluded "that as a mater of courtesy and propriety, the State was entitled to have" the validity of the placement act determined.

INTEGRATION ORDERED FOR CAPITAL SUBURB

Judge Rules Arlington, Va. Action This Fall

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 27.—(UP) — Federal District Judge Albert Bryan Saturday ordered Arlington County, Va., to desegregate its schools at the opening of the fall semester in September.

He upheld a motion by Negro attorneys to order an year-old Arlington desegregation decree into effect immediately.

The ruling was the exact reversal of a ruling Friday by Federal Judge John Paul of Harrisonburg, Va., in a Charlottesville, Va., desegregation case.

Judge Paul, ruling on an identical motion in a nearly identical school case, ordered a year-old desegration decress against Charlottesville delayed until the United States Supreme Court passes on Virginia's Pupil-Placement Act.

The delay in the Charlottesville case was expected to last at least six months.

Judge Bryan dismissed the pupil-placement law as not pertinent to the Arlington case.

Arlington is a populous suburb of Washington, a city which has integrated schools.

Text of Court Decision On Pupil Placement

RICHMOND, Va., July 13 (AP).—The following is the text of the United States 4th Circuit Court of Appeals decision in which it found unconstitutional Virginia's Pupil Placement Act:

These are appeals from injunctive decrees forbidding racial discrimination in the public schools of Norfolk and Newport News, Va., and are controlled in all material respects by our decision in the City of Charlottesville and Arlington County cases. It is argued that on the authority of Carson vs. Warlick, the cases here should be dismissed or proceedings therein be stayed until administrative remedies have been exhausted under the recent Pupil Placement Act. As pointed out by the judge below, however, this statute furnishes no adequate remedy to plaintiffs because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities with respect to segregation and because of the provision of Chapter 68 of the Acts of the Extra Session, which provide for the closing of schools and withdrawal therefrom of State funds upon any departure from this policy in any school.

Issue of Jurisdiction

It is argued that the court was without jurisdiction of the cases and that only a three-judge court would have had jurisdiction because the constitutional validity of the Pupil Placement Act was involved. This question was not raised, however, in the applications for injunction, which were filed before the passage of that act and which merely sought the protection of constitutional rights in a suit for the hearing of which a court of three judges was not required. After the passage of the act, motion was made to dismiss the cases on the ground that the act provided an administrative remedy which had not been exhausted. The trial judge held as to this that the act did not provide an adequate administrative remedy and that it was unconstitutional when considered in connection with other statutes passed at the same time and its manifest purpose. As no injunction was asked or granted against the enforcement of the act or the officials charged with its enforcement, a case for the constitution of a three-judge court was not presented, even though the constitutionality of an act relied on in the motion to dismiss was involved. For like reason, there is no occasion to stay proceedings pending action by the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia on a case invoking the validity of the act.

It should be noted that the decrees appealed from do not require the assignment of children to particular schools nor do they require mixing of races in any school. They merely forbid defendants from refusing to admit plaintiffs from any school solely on account of race or color. The operative language of the decrees is as follows:

"1. That the defendants, and each of them, their successors in office, agent, representatives, servants, and employes, be, and they hereby are, restrained and enjoined from refusing, solely on account of race or color, to admit to, or enroll or educate in, any school under their operation control, direction or supervision, directly or indirectly, any child otherwise qualified for admission to, and enrollment and education in, such school."

Arlington Ruling Cited

In construing very similar language used in his decree in the Arlington case, Judge Bryan used the following language which was quoted by us in our opinion on appeal:

"It must be remembered that the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Brown vs. Board of Education, 1954, and 1955, does not compel the mixing of different races in the public schools. No general reshuffling of the pupils in any school system has been commanded. The order of the court is simply that no child shall be denied admission to a school on the basis of race or color. Indeed, just so a child is not through any form of compulsion or pressure required to stay in a certain school, or denied transfer to another school, because of his race or his color, the school heads may allow the pupil, whether white or Negro, to go to the same school as he would have attended in the absence in the ruling of the Supreme Court.

"Consequently, compliance with that ruling may well not necessitate such extensive changes in the school system as some anticipate."

That language is applicable to the cases before us, as is the closing language of our opinion in that case wherein we said:

"The decrees here are not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated. The Arlington decree expressly states that local rules as to assignment to classes, so long as such rules are not based on race or color, are to be observed, and that administrative remedies for admission to schools must be exhausted before application is made to the court for relief on the ground that its injunction is being violated. While the Charlottesville decree does not contain this express provision, the provision is so eminently reasonable that we may safely assume that enforcement of that decree will not proceed upon different principles."

Integration Tag 2-Sided To Stanley

By a Staff Reporter

RICHMOND, Aug. 6.—Gov. Thomas B. Stanley drew an apparently partisan line today between Republicans and Democrats who advocate the pupil assignment program for dealing with the school desegregation problem.

Stanley emphatically refused to pin the "integrationist" label on former Gov. Colgate W. Darden Jr., president of the University of Virginia, and Gov. Luther Hodges of North Carolina because they support a pupil assignment program. But Stanley said he stood by his statement of last spring that State Sen. Ted Dalton was an integrationist because he supports a pupil assignment program.

Darden and Hodges, like Stanley, are Democrats. Dalton, who gave Stanley a real battle for the governorship in 1953, is Republican candidate again this year.

In his spring statement, Stanley said in effect that any person who supports a plan allowing any amount of race mixing in the public schools is an integrationist.

Last weekend, Horace E. Henderson, GOP nominee for Lieutenant Governor, said such a definition would also include Hodges and Darden, if it applied to Dalton.

Stanley said, "No sir!" today when asked if he considered Hodges and Darden integrationists, but he insisted his original statement was aimed at and applied only to Dalton.

The Governor's position differs from that of Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., Democratic gubernatorial nominee. In reply to Henderson, Almond said yesterday that he had not called Dalton or anyone else an integrationist and would not resort to such "name-calling."

Stanley Sees Schools Still Segregated

RICHMOND, Aug. 1 (AP) Gov. Thomas B. Stanley took an optimistic view today about the opening of all public schools in Virginia next month.

"As I see the picture now, I am very hopeful that schools will open on a segregated basis in September as they have in the past," he told his press conference.

As for the long view and the future of the state pupil placement act, the Governor said "we will just have to wait and see what the court's decision will be."

The act has been thrown out by Federal District and Appeals Courts but will be appealed by the state to the U. S. Supreme Court which is now in recess.

The Governor was asked if he would attempt to enforce the act in Charlottesville where Federal Judge John Paul last week said Negro parents and pupils would not have to fill out assignment forms provided under the act.

"I understand the (pupil placement) board will continue its work as in the past, and until there is some conflict I plan no action by this office," the Governor replied.

Stanley was asked for comment on a statement by W. Lester Banks, executive secretary of the Virginia State Conference of NAACP branches, yesterday that he knew of no general discrimination against Negroes' voting rights in Virginia.

"I haven't felt there has been," the Governor said. He said not a single complaint had come to him from a Negro in this regard during his term of office.

Arlington Seeks Appeal Of Integration Order

Lawyers Will Go First to Judge Bryan; Board to Ask Lifting of Deadline

Washington D.C.

Arlington will go into Alexandria Federal Court this week to attempt an appeal of the ruling that seven Negroes be admitted to its white public schools.

The School Board also will ask Judge Albert V. Bryan to lift his September 23 deadline for the integration until the appeal is decided. Mon. 9-16-57

The decision to exhaust the legal maneuvers was reached by the School Board yesterday after a conference with its attorneys.

Va

The emergency session was called in the wake of Judge

Judge Bryan, the Man Behind the Arlington Decision B-1

Bryan's latest desegregation edict on Saturday. The judge directed that seven Negro children who were turned away from white schools on opening day be admitted to white schools by next Monday.

In his order, Judge Bryan said in effect that Virginia's first line of defense against integration—the pupil placement statute—was unconstitutional because it was aimed at maintaining racial segregation.

Six Tried Without Forms

Six of the children tried to enroll in white schools without filling out the pupil placement forms. The seventh had asked to enter white classrooms through a form, but the three-member State placement board refused the request and assigned the child to a colored school.

In the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation suits, a Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has upheld the lower court ruling that the placement act is unconstitutional. An appeal is pending before the United States Supreme Court.

At the close of yesterday's 90-minute conference, the School Board's two attorneys—James H. Simmonds and Frank L. Ball, sr.—issued the following statement:

"The School Board has authorized us to appeal the decision and request a stay of the order of the United States District Court entered September 14, 1957."

14d(1)

Amplification Denied

Board members, who were joined at the strategy session by Sept. T. Edward Rutter and two members of his staff, declined to amplify on the brief announcement.

No mention was made of State counsel. J. Lindsay Almond, jr., whose resignation as attorney general becomes effective today, has taken a major role in Virginia's uphill fight to stave off integration in Arlington an dother communities.

At the forthcoming hearing, Judge Bryan wil lbe faced first with the question of whether his Saturday order is appealable.

Kenneth Patty, who becomes Virginia's Attorney General today, replacing Mr. Almond, who is running for governor, said in Richmond today that the State will continue to assist Arlington in its legal battle.

"We're going to see this thing through," he said.

Mr. Patty said he believes Judge Bryan's order is "definitely appealable." He said he will confer today with Mr. Almond and legal counsel in Richmond and will telephone the Arlington School Board attorneys about the next move.

May Go to 4th Circuit

Both Mr. Patty and the board's counsel agreed that if Judge Bryan refuses to grant a stay of his order, a stay will be requested from the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, probably from Chief Judge John Parker.

Star

Parents of the seven children involved in the new integration order were not all certain, meanwhile, that they will enter their youngsters in white schools next Monday in line with the order. Mon. 9-16-57

Mrs. E. Leslie Hamm, of 1900 E. Cameron street, said she will send Leslie, jr., 11, of Stratford Junior High School "when the time comes."

Robert A. Eldridge, jr., a Metropolitan Police detective, of 2716 South First street, said he personally will take his 9-year-old son Robert III, to Patrick Henry School.

Dr. Harold M. Johnson, of 2901 North Lexington street, however, was undecided what course to take. He said he has already paid tuition to the District for his daughter, Harolyn, 16, to attend Dunbar High School and to Immaculata High School for his daughter, Rita, 15.

Monday Deadline in Question

Judge Bryan's 1956 desegreation for Arlington, which has since been upheld by the United States Eupreme Court, was followed last July by the jurist's decree that the county and racial segregation at the opening of this fall term. At that time, Judge Bryan declined to grant a request by colored attorneys that the court specify that students were free to ignore the placement form.

If Arlington is granted an appeal, the next question before the court will be the School Board's plea for the stay on the Monday deadline for admitting the seven children.

Should Judge Bryan turn down the request for this delay,

G. O. P. Leader's Contention Draws Heated Denials by Veteran Officials

Washington D.C.

By the Associated Press

A Republican leader's claim that there has been race-mixing in Page County schools promised today to provide a new point of contention in Virginia's already torrid gubernatorial campaign.

Republicans obviously hoped the claim by 9th district G. O. P. Chairman Randolph Dovel would undercut Democratic arguments that even a small degree of race-mixing would "open the floodgates" to integration on a mass scale.

But the big wheels among the Democrats had yet to be heard from, and already Mr. Dovel's statement was being hotly disputed.

14d(1)

Mr. Dovel dropped his political bomb Saturday at a meeting of the State Central Republican Committee in Lynchburg. With State Senator Ted Dalton the G. O. P. candidate for Governor, among his listeners, Mr. Dovel told the committee there has been some race-mixing in Page schools over a 20-year period.

He said Gov. Stanley "can cut off Page County funds if he wants to" under the Stanley-sponsored law which would deny state money to localities permitting race-mixing in their public schools. The fund cut-off is supposed to be automatic.

Yesterday, Mr. Dovel added that "it isn't such a bad situation."

Charges Denied

"There is no integration that I know of in the county," said the school board veteran. "There are no Negroes attending white schools. There may be some people of Indian descent, or something—but no Negroes."

Dr. Davis Y. Paschall, State superintendent of public instruction, said if there has been race-mixing in Page schools "I am not aware of any such condition. It certainly has not come to the attention of the State Department of Education."

Gov. Stanley said he had "no comment" on Mr. Dovel's statement. Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., the Democratic candidate for Governor, could not be reached for comment last night.

Mr. Dovel told the G. O. P. State Committee he couldn't say there had been race-mixing in Page County last session but that it was a fact there had been race-mixing over a period of 20 years.

Claims Wide Backing

He told newsmen yesterday that "hundreds of people will back up what I say . . . I suppose the situation has existed for several generations."

Mr. Dovel said "all you have to do is go down to the treasurer's office and see these people marked 'colored' on the tax land books."

In his race for the governorship, Senator Dalton has been plugging for a pupil assignment plan as the best means of averting all-out integration in Virginia's schools. The Radford Republican has admitted that the assignment plan might allow a degree of integration but claims it would stave off race mixing on a mass scale.

Mr. Almond, on the other hand, has contended that even a little race mixing would "open the floodgates" for massive integration throughout the length and breadth of the State.

Takes Slap at Dalton

The attorney general reiterated this opinion in an address Saturday to a 9th district Democratic rally at Bristol, where he flayed the Dalton plan and called for a flexible "defense in depth" against integration.

"We will not adopt any plan that will mean mixing the races in the public schools of Virginia to the detriment of Virginia's children, white or Negro," Mr. Almond declared. He said he would, if elected, "resist every step" toward race-mixing in the schools.

Mr. Almond said he wouldn't call Mr. Dalton "an integrationist—that's an offensive term," but he added: "The Republican candidate is trying hard but failing to perform the eq[illegible] an feat of riding two [illegible]—on white and one black [illegible] with both going in different directions at the same time. He is going to preserve segregated schools by assigning Negro children to white schools. He claims we can have token integration without integration."

Arlington To Appeal Court Order

School Board To Seek Stay of Integration Edict

Washington D.C.

By Harrison Hagemeyer
Staff Reporter

The Arlington County School Board announced yesterday it would appeal Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan's order that seven Negro children be admitted to previously all-white schools in the County next Monday.

Va

The Board said it would seek a stay of Bryan's order pending the outcome of the appeal.

14d(1)

The terse, one-sentence announcement followed a special

90-minute meeting between the Board and its legal staff. It was read by Frank L. Ball, attorney for the Board.

"The School Board has authorized us to appeal the decision and request a stay of the order of the U. S. District Court entered Sept. 14, 1957," Ball said.

He declined to say when the delaying order would be requested, but said: "We've got to file it quickly, before the 23d," the day the integration order takes effect.

To Bryan First

School Board legal advisers indicated they would first seek the stay from Bryan. If he refuses to issue it, it will be requested from one of the three judges of the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals, probably Chief Judge John Parker.

The granting of such stays is usually automatic in cases where a court order is appealed. However, the wording in Bryan's order Saturday indicates he may feel there is no further reason for delay.

In the order, Bryan pointed out it was to enforce a decree that has already been reviewed by the United States Supreme Court. The original decree, issued by Bryan July 31, 1956, enjoined the Arlington County School Board from denying pupils admission because of race.

If the stay is granted and the appeal goes to the Supreme Court, it would probably delay any actual integration under the order until February, 1958.

Kenneth Patty, who replaces Democratic gubernatorial candidate J. Lindsay Almond Jr. as Virginia Attorney General today, said yesterday the State would continue to give Arlington "all the help we can" in the legal battle. He said he would call a conference this afternoon with State and local attorneys connected with the case to discuss the appeal.

"I definitely think the decision is appealable," he said.

Because the original order had already been affirmed by appelate courts, some doubts had been raised as to whether the new order could legitimately be appealed.

One attorney connected with the case, however, said that a decision that the case was not appealable could not come from the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals until after the appeal was filed and arguments heard on the question.

Meanwhile, parents of two of the seven children involved in Bryan's order revealed they have decided to give up their attempts to enroll their children at Washington-Lee High School. Parents of the other five said, however, that they would present their children at the all-white schools again on Sept. 23 to seek admission under the order.

All seven children had originally applied for admission to the white schools Sept. 5, but were turned away by school officials.

The two who will not make another attempt for admission are Harolyn Johnson, 16, and her sister, Rita, 15, daughters of Dr. and Mrs. Harold M. Johnson, 2901 N. Lexington st.

"My father has already paid tuition for Rita at Immaculata High School in the District, and I am in my senior year at Dunbar High there," Rita said yesterday. "We thought it would be simpler to remain where we are."

But George N. Nelson, 2005 N. Cameron st., whose 14-year-old son, George Tyrone Nelson, was turned down at Stratford Junior High, said he and his wife would appear with the boy "as soon as the school opens" Sept. 23.

Arthur M. Costley Sr., said he would try to enroll his stepsons, Louis G. Turner, 14, and Melvin H. Turner, 13, at Swanson Junior High even if Bryan's order is stayed, "unless the delayed transfer would mean a serious interruption in their studies."

Parents of the two other Negro pupils in the suit indicated earlier that they would seek to enter their children under the Court order.

Robert A. Eldridge Jr., a Metropolitan Police robbery squad detective of 2716 S. 1st st., said he would "definitely" take 9-year-old Robert III to Patrick Henry School and Mrs. E. Leslie Hamm, 1900 N. Cameron st., said she sees "no reason why I should not send my son, Leslie Jr., to Stratford."

If the children do enter school next Monday, it could result in heavy political repercussions in the State.

State Sen. Ted Dalton, Republican gubernatorial candidate, has been blasting the Democratic Administration's "massive resistance" program of no integration. Dalton has warned that the program will result in "massive integration" because the laws will not hold up in court.

The Radford Republican favored a pupil assignment plan, which he said may allow some integration.

2 Arlington Students Will Enroll

Mon. 9-16-57
Montgomery, Ala.

ARLINGTON, Va., Sept. 15 (AP)—Parents of two Negro childaen said last night they will enter the youngsters in white schools here Sept. 23 in line with a federal judge's integration order.

U. S. Dist. Judge Albert V. Bryan yesterday ordered the Arlington County School Board to enroll seven Negroes in white schools from which they were barred on the first day of classes Sept. 5.

Mrs. E. Leslie Hamm said her 11-year-old daughter, Leslie, would be sent back to Stratford Junior High School "when the time comes."

Robert A. Eldridge Jr., a police detective in nearby Washington, D.C., said his son, Robert III, 9, would be at Patrick Henry Elementary School on Sept. 23.

Judge Bryan made his integration order effective on that date. It had been sought by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Parents of the five other Negro children involved in the court order had not decided what course to take, or were not reached for comment.

Chairman James G. Stockard said the Arlington School Board would hold an emergency conference with its attorneys as soon as possible.

Mrs. Kathryn Stone, one of Arlington's three delegates to the Virginia General Assembly, said, "The state seems to have reached the end of its legal rope."

She referred to Judge Bryan's denunciation of the Virginia pupil placement law as constitutionally invalid. This recent legislation was aimed at preserving Virginia's segregated school system by allowing a state board to assign pupils to classrooms on a variety of grounds. Race is not a stated criterion under this law but one item listed is "intangible social scientific factors."

Mrs. Stone said it would seem "fantastic to me" if the state tried to invoke other new legislative provisions in the Arlington situation. These include the closing of public schools where integration occurs and the withholding of state funds if a school reopens on an integrated basis.

RACE MIXING VIRGINIA ISSUE

Little Rock Events Blow to GOP Chances

By JOHN F. DAFFRON

Times Dispatch

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 26 (AP)—Virginia selects a new governor for the next four years on Nov. 5 at the windup of a campaign in which neither Chief Justice Earl Warren nor Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell are candidates. It just sounds that way.

The school segregation issue has been about the only issue. The high court's desegregation decision and Brownell's position in favor of it have been echoed and re-echoed by the dominant state Democratic organization in its effort to contain the Republican challenge.

Democrats under the leadership of Sen. Harry F. Byrd have rallied under the banner of "massive resistance" against any break through in the state's tradition, policy and laws against mixing the races in the public schools.

And carrying this banner as candidate is J. Lindsay Almond Jr., 59-year-old former judge, congressman and, until a few weeks ago when he resigned, Virginia attorney general who spearheaded the legal delay to integration before the federal courts.

The Republican candidate again this time is state Sen. Theodore Roosevelt Dalton, 56, GOP national committeeman and lawyer from Radford, Va. It was Dalton who gave the Democrats their biggest scare in modern times for governor four years ago by garnering 45 per cent of the vote in a race against Gov. Thomas B. Stanley. This came a year after President Eisenhower's 80,000-vote victory margin in Virginia in the 1952 campaign. The race this year follows an even greater Eisenhower sweep of the state. He carried Virginia in 1956 by 120,000 votes in a record turnout of 698,000.

There are no professional politicians in either party, however, willing to measure Dalton's chances this time by the increase in the Eisenhower majority last year. The reasons advanced are the succession of setbacks handed Virginia's no-integration program in federal courts; what is called the President's failure to carry through on promises to support states rights, and federal court orders—already entered—telling four Virginia localities to desegregate.

Dalton favors separate schools, too. But he argues that the Democrats are putting out a "massive myth" when they insist any state scheme can prevent a degree of integration unless public schools are closed.

The GOP candidate espouses a school plan he describes as realistically facing the legal facts of life and one that will preserve separate schools essentially as they are. This is the locally administered pupil assignment plan similar to that in force in North Carolina which contemplates only token integration — enough to satisfy court requirements.

Democrat Almond scoffs at this contention and has been telling his rallies Dalton would preserve segregation by abandoning it and once the gate is opened a flood tide of racial mixing would flow into the schools.

"If we yield one inch we are lost forever," he said in a speech in Danville in the southside black belt.

Dalton, reluctant to go against the Democrats again at the outset—he said he was well aware of the power of the Byrd organization—nevertheless has been hard on the campaign trail since his party convention nominated him in July. He has sounded a "save the schools" note, arguing that the state's recently enacted laws will result in closure of the schools or loss of state school money to localities when federal desegregation orders become effective.

The Republican—with little formal party organization behind him—said he thought he was getting his point across to the voters. Then came the Little Rock crisis and the President's order that sent in troops.

Democratic headquarters strategists regarded the Little Rock development as a deciding point after a political touchdown. They granted Dalton a large degree of personal appeal but were saying the troops that opened the doors of Little Rock's Central High school to Negroes decisively closed the door to the Virginia governor's mansion on Dalton.

Dalton conceded Little Rock gave his chances a sharp setback. And he protested the move in a telegram to the President.

But this week he said he'd picked up most of his lost ground and still felt he was gaining. He wouldn't forecast a Republican victory but he insisted he was closing the gap and the Democrats would know they were in a fight. He said the supreme court's refusal this week to review a lower court opinion invalidating the state's pupil placement plan gave his chances a lift.

Election officials look for a vote approaching 600,000 during the 12-hour voting period—from 6 to 6—on Nov. 5.

Arlington Negro Girl Starts Placement Test

Evening Star 8-29-57 p 20-A Washington, D.C.

By MARY LOU WERNER

The application filed by a 15-year-old Negro girl to attend Arlington's white Washington-Lee High School is Step 1 along a spartan route charted by the State to preserve segregated schools.

Sadie Harris Phillips is the first Negro student to seek admission in a white school in the State, and her application is likely to decide whether Virginia's new anti-integration laws are a bona fide answer to the Supreme Court desegregation decision, or a bold effort to defy the court decree.

The Pupil Placement Act, under which Sadie has filed her application for transfer to Washington-Lee from Hoffman-Boston, is part of the legislative program Virginia adopted last fall to maintain racially-separated schools.

There is no mention of race in the Placement Act itself, and for this reason the State has argued in court that it does not bar Negroes from going to white schools.

There are other considerations set forth in the placement law, however, which must be taken into account when the three-member State placement board passes on Sadie's application on August 29.

Standards in Law

Here are the standards the law says the placement board must consider in enrolling every pupil:

"1. The effect of the enrollment on the welfare and best interests of such child and all other children in said school as well as the effect on the efficiency of the operation of said school.

"2. The health of the child as compared to other children in the school.

"3. The effect of any disparity between the physical and mental ages of any child to be enrolled, especially when contrasted with the average physical and mental ages of the group with which the child might be placed.

"4. Availability of facilities.

"5. The aptitude of the child.

"6. Availability of transportation.

"7. The sociological, psychological, and like intangible social scientific factors as will prevent, as nearly as possible, a condition of socio-economic class consciousness among the pupils.

"8. Such other relevant matters as may be pertinent to the efficient operation of the schools or indicate a clear and present danger to the public peace and tranquility affecting the safety or welfare of the citizens of such school district."

Protest Provided For

If the placement board on August 29 decides to keep Sadie in Hoffman-Boston, her parents may file a written protest within 15 days. Upon receipt of a protest, the placement board must hold a public hearing within 30 days.

The law provides that parents or guardians of all students in the affected school may intervene in the hearing. About 5,000 white parents of children attending Washington-Lee would be eligible to appear.

Within 30 days after the hearing, the placement board must file a written opinion. Any party aggrieved by the decision may, within another 15 days, apply to the Governor for a review of the case. This means if the placement board does assign Sadie to Washington-Lee, after review, any one of about 5,000 parents with children in the school may ask the Governor to review the assignment.

The Governor is then required to hold another hearing and, within 15 days, enroll the student in whatever school he deems proper.

May Appeal to Court

The law further provides that anyone dissatisfied with the Governor's decision may appeal to the local circuit court.

If Sadie goes through the entire procedure set forth in the placement law, it will be well after the opening of school on September 4 before her final enrollment is decided.

And if she does win admission to Washington-Lee, the rest of the State's anti-integration laws come into play. One provides for the automatic withholding of State funds from all elementary or secondary schools in any locality where integration occurs. Another allows the Governor to step in and close any school or classroom where races are mixed, and attempt to reorganize it on a segregated basis.

Arlington school officials yesterday said they were uncertain how much the fund cutoff law would cost the county if Sadie entered Washington-Lee. The total county school budget for the current year is $10,452,072, of which $1,114,198 is anticipated from State sources. But the county does not have a breakdown available between secondary and elementary State funds.

With use of the Governor's school-closing law, about 2,500 students would be out of school while the Governor tried to reorganize it on a segregated basis.

But Sadie's application may wind up in court before it goes the full charted route.

Under Injunction

The Arlington County School Board already is under a Federal court injunction barring racial discrimination in county schools this fall.

This injunction, as in other desegregation cases in the State, arose from what the legal profession calls a class suit brought by a group of students asking that the school board be enjoined from denying anyone admission to a particular school because of race.

Sadie's application is the first specific request of a Negro student to attend a particular white school, according to Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr. In other words, she is the first to try to make use of any of the existing desegregation injunctions.

The original injunction was issued against Arlington County a year ago by Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan in Alexandria. It was not enforced while an appeal went to the Supreme Court, which ultimately upheld the decision. Last month Judge Bryan refused to postpone enforcement of his injunction.

But in refusing to grant a postponement, Judge Bryan also declined to specify that students did not have to use the placement law in Arlington County. He said no Negro student actually had tried to get into white schools, and therefore there was nothing new before the court.

Another Round in Prospect

Sadie's application, however, is expected to give the court something new to consider. And Judge Bryan already has warned that any administrative remedy exacted of students—such as the placement law—must be adequate.

Thus, the pieces are falling into place for another go-around on validity of Virginia's new school legislation.

The placement law already is on its way to the Supreme Court in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. Its theory, and not a practical test, is involved in those cases. Judge Walter Hoffman ruled in the Norfolk and Newport News suits that the placement law is unconstitutional. His ruling was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, which said the placement law was not an adequate administrative remedy.

There the matter stands: Two Federal courts have said the placement law in theory isn't valid, and now Sadie with her application apparently is going to give the Federal courts an opportunity to pass on the matter in a specific case.

2d Arlington Negro Tests School Law

Post + Times Herald Washington D.C. 8-13-57

The 14-year-old son of a Washington policeman yesterday became the second Negro pupil to apply for admission to a white school in Arlington.

George Tyrone Nelson, who will enter the ninth grade this fall, filed his application under Virginia's Pupil Placement Act to enter Stratford Junior High School, a half mile away from his home at 2005 N. Camerson st.

Tyrone, whose father is Police Pvt. George M. Nelson Jr. of the 7th Precinct, has been attending Hoffman-Boston Junior-Senior High School six miles away in South Arlnigton. Getting to and from school, he said, entails a 45-minute bus ride each way.

The boy said he felt it was his duty "to help solve the integration problem by breaking the ice and making it easier for the children who follow."

Could 'Talk It Out'

He described himself as a neighbor and good friend of 15-year-old Sadie H. Phillips, another Hoffman-Boston pupil who applied last week to enter the Washington-Lee High School.

Like Sadie, Tyrone denied receiving any advice or assistance from the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People or from any other organization. He said he decided for himself.

Tyrone said he feels that he could "talk out" any racial problem that might arise if he is permitted to enter Stratford. He has been friendly with white youngsters in his neighborhood, he said, and was once a member of an informal "bicycle club" made up mainly of whites.

He said he likes shop classes where he can "work with my hands," and praised the classes and teachers at Hoffman-Boston. "But I feel I can learn just as much at Stratford," he added.

Action Due Aug. 29

The Pupil Placement Board at Richmond is scheduled to act on Arlington applications Aug. 29. Under policy voiced last week by Acting School Superintendent E. J. Braun, local school officials will make no recommendations on such transfer requests, but merely pass them on to Richmond.

The Pupil Placement Act requires the Board to maintain an "efficient" school system, defined by the General Assembly as a segregated school system. State law also bars financial aid to integrated systems.

The Act itself has been held unconstitutional by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman in cases involving Norfolk and Newport News school systems. He ordered them to integrate, and the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld his order.

Appealed to Highest Court

Yesterday the United States Supreme Court was asked by attorneys for the two school systems to review and reverse these orders. This could permit at least one more year of segregation schooling there, since the appellate court has agreed to stay its order.

The attorneys held that Hoffman's order was premature, that it would create more problems than it would solve, and that the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals has not yet acted on a pending case dealing with the Pupil Placement Act.

The state court case was filed by Theo T. DeFebio of Fairfax County, who seeks to have her two sons readmitted to their all-white schools without compliance with the Pupil Placement Act.

FEDERAL JUDGE DELAYS MIXING

Sat. 7-27-57 Times-Picayune New Orleans, La.

Says Virginia Placement Law Deserves Ruling

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 26 (AP)—Federal Judge John Paul Friday delayed start of desegregation in Charlottesville's public schools pending a final ruling on Virginia's pupil placement law.

At the same time he restrained Charlottesville school officials from requiring any pupil to apply for placement as a requirement for attending school.

The court's action obviously pleased state Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., his special assistant, Henry Wickham, and former Gov. John S. Battle, counsel for the defendant school officials. Plainly disappointed were Spottswood W. Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, who had argued vainly to have the Negro children admitted to white schools this fall.

Delayed Till January

At Richmond, Gov. Stanley told newsmen he was "very pleased the court is staying his order until the validity of the pupil placement act is decided."

The effect of Friday's action denying Robinson's motion, coming that the Negro pupils be admitted to white schools this fall is that Charlottesville's schools will remain segregated at least until the January, 1958, semester.

Another effect of the decision comes on the political scene, where the two major party nominees for governor in the November election have clashed over the state's school program.

GOP, Demo Plans

Almond, the Democratic aspirant, contends the "massive resistance" program now followed is the best course to preserve the public schools. On the other hand, state Sen. Ted Dalton of Radford, the Republican nominee, argues Virginia should turn to an assignment plan such as North Carolina's as a means of perserving the most segregation in the most places.

In verbally announcing his decision to reporters after a lengthy closed-door hearing with counsel in chambers, Judge Paul said he had concluded "that as a matter of courtesy and propriety, the state was entitled to have" the validity of the placement act determined.

In a brief formal order entered later, Judge Paul ordered his decree of Aug. 6, 1956, ordering desegregation of the Charlottesville schools should "be made effective at the commencement of the school semester" following the US supreme court's action on the state's placement law.

and gave it all pupil placement powers formerly held by local school boards. The state board could assign students in public schools for a variety of reasons other than race.

In its opinion upholding Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman in Norfolk and Newport News school cases, the 4th Circuit Court said that the act was unconstitutional when considered in the light of other legislation and the attitude of Virginia school authorities toward segregation.

Stanley said his "advice to the placement board would be to continue their work as in the past until the act is declared invalid by the last court."

Asked what would happen if state money had already been forwarded to a locality and then the schools were integrated, the Governor said the local treasurers and other officials would be required to hold up the expenditure of any state funds for school purposes.

School Board Will Drop Its Color Adviser

Post + Times Herald
Washington, D.C.

The Montgomery County School Board has canceled its $50-a-day contract with color consultant Mildred M. Landis. The Board learned she had the third highest salary in the school system.

Mrs. Landis was retained as principal of Wood Acres Elementary School. Her combined duties as principal and consultant earned her $11,400 a year.

Board member Wylie Barrow instigated the action to cancel the contract with Mrs. Landis who, for two years, has been deciding what colors the interiors of school rooms should be painted. Helen Scharf cast the only dissenting vote.

School Superintendent Forbes H. Norris announced at the meeting of the Board that ended early yesterday that 307 more Negro students will be moved from segregated schools into integrated ones in September if the Board approves.

Under the plan proposed by Norris, Negro students will be enrolled in Sherwood and West Rockville Elementary Schools.

The transfers would bring to 963 the number of Negro students moved out of segregated schools. They constitute 32 per cent of the Negro enrollment.

Norris said 57 per cent of the white students are now in desegregated classrooms. The moves will cause 51 out of 100 schools in the county to be desegregated.

'Carry On,' Placement Group Told by Stanley

RICHMOND, Va., July 23 (AP) — Gov. Thomas B. Stanley said today he would advise the state Pupil Placement Board to continue with its work as in the past until the act creating it is thrown out by the U. S. Supreme Court.

If that occurs, he told his press conference, "we will take up from there" in meeting the school segregation problem in Virginia.

The Governor had been asked if he had any comment on last week's action by the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in knocking down the 1956 pupil placement act. The state has said it will appeal to the Supreme Court.

The pupil placement act set up a three-man state board appointed by the Governor

Foiled Again

Post + Times Herald
Wed. 7-15-57
Washington, D.C.

To everyone except those hypnotized by the pied pipers of massive resistance, the decision of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals invalidating Virginia's pupil placement act must seem very mild indeed. The court found simply that a Federal District judge in Norfolk was correct in holding the act unconstitutional in light of Virginia's proclaimed policy of rigid segregation and of closing and denying state funds to any school upon departure from this policy. But the Court of Appeals also noted pointedly that the decrees which it upheld "do not require the mixing of races in any school."

It is significant that the court chose to quote at length from lower court opinions. Officials are enjoined from refusing to enroll a child "solely on account of race or color." But, as Judge Bryan noted previously in the Arlington case, the Supreme Court decision "does not compel the mixing of different races in the public schools. No general reshuffling of the pupils in any school system has been commanded." So long as no compulsion is applied for against transfer on account of race, "the school heads may allow the pupil, whether white or Negro, to go to the same school as he would have attended in the absence of the ruling of the Supreme Court."

This is nothing if not a broad hint that a locally administered pupil assignment plan based upon criteria other than race, such as now operative in North Carolina, would be constitutional. Such a moderate and sympathetic view gives the lie to the draconian picture Messrs. Byrd, Stanley and Almond have been trying to paint of the role of the Federal courts. But the Stanley plan is falling apart like the one hoss shay because Virginia's political overseers cannot bring themselves to the point of admitting a single Negro to a previously all-white school. How long will Virginians be content with "leadership" whose gears are firmly stuck in reverse?

VIRGINIA PUPIL PLACEMENT FACED WITH NEW PROBLEMS

Defender Thurs. 8-15-57
P. 3
Louisville, Ky.

RICHMOND, VA. (ANP) — Two major questions dealing with integration of schools in Charlottesville and Arlington, and 45,000 new applications for processing greeted the state's pupil placement board which met here last week to begin its work of assigning new or transfer students to public schools within the state.

Outside of the 45,000 new applications, which puts the total number received beyond the 100,000 mark, a tremendous task to accomplish between now and the opening of schools in September, the board must make a decision in the Charlottesville and Arlington situations.

In Charlottesville, the school board is under an injunction by federal district Judge John Paul, which prevents it from refusing to admit children whose parents have failed to apply to the board for assigment. Under the placement law enacted by the general assembly, local school boards and division superintendents have been stripped of their assignment powers.

The question facing the Pupil Placement board is "who will assign students in Charlottesville?

Over in Arlington, the question is whether the board will allow some Negroes to transfer to white schools or have a federal judge order them admitted. Either way, the county school board will be stripped of state funds.

DESEGREGATION ORDER STAYED

Times-Picayune
New Orleans, La.

Virginia Cases to Wait on High Court Ruling

RICHMOND, Va., July 18 (AP) — The United States fourth circuit court of appeals Thursday ordered a desegregation order for Norfolk and Newport News schools held up until the supreme court takes final action in the two cases.

This means schools in the two cities will open on a segregated basis in September. The state has 30 days to appeal last Saturday's decision by the circuit court, and the supreme court will not sit until October.

In its decision last Saturday the circuit court upheld federal district Judge Walter E. Hoffman's desegregation decision in the two cases. In so doing it threw out Virginia's new pupil placement act which had been used as a basis for appeal.

Defendants—the state and school boards of the two cities—made it known immediately they would appeal and asked the circuit court forthwith for a stay of its order and a stay also of the district court's order requiring desegregation. These the court granted.

Virginia's pupil placement act, passed in 1956, vests all pupil assignment powers formerly held by local school boards in a three-man state board appointed by the governor. The court said the law was unconstitutional in view of the fixed policy toward segregation adopted by state school authorities.

U. S. Judge Sees Deadline Now As 'Unwise'

Post 1-24-57 p. 21-A

RICHMOND, Jan. 24 (AP)—Prince Edward County, Va., where one of the initial suits resulting in the Supreme Court school desegregation decision originated, has won an indefinite time extension to comply with the edict.

Federal Judge Sterling Hutcheson declined yesterday to set a desegregation deadline for the southside county in the heart of Virginia's "black belt" and declared:

"In the present state of unrest and racial tension in the county it would be unwise to attempt to force a change of the system until the entire situation can be considered and adjustments gradually brought about."

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People had asked that next September be set as the deadline for desegregation of Prince Edward schools.

Retains Jurisdiction

Judge Hutcheson did not dismiss the six-year-old case, however, and retained jurisdiction so the Negro attorneys at a later date may renew their motion for desegregation "after the defendants have been afforded a reasonable time to effect a solution."

Judge Hutcheson did not pass on the constitutionality of Virginia's new pupil placement law, which the State had used as a defense in asking dismissal of the suit. In the Newport News and Norfolk desegregation cases, however, Judge Walter E. Hoffman held that the pupil placement law was unconstitutional. Those cases also are going to be appealed as soon as final decrees are entered.

While not setting a time limit for desegregation, Judge Hutcheson made it clear the Supreme Court's decision against segregated schools should be enforced.

"I believe the problems to be capable of solution but they will require patience, time and a sympathetic understanding. They cannot be solved by zealous advocates, by an emotional approach, nor by those with selfish interests to advance."

Handicap to Child Seen

Judge Hutcheson took note that officials of Prince Edward had promised to close the schools before submitting to integration.

"An interrupted education of one year or even six months at that age places a serious handicap upon the child which the average one may not overcome," he said in the 31-page opinion. "It is my belief that at this time a continuation of present methods could not be so harmful as an interrupted education."

Judge Hutcheson said the apparent inaction of Prince Edward's school board on school desegregation since the Supreme Court ordered it on May 31, 1955, "does not necessarily show non-compliance."

The Federal judge said that it took the high court itself more than three years to act finally after the appeal in the Prince Edward case was granted in May of 1952.

"I find that the defendants (the school board) by submitting the usual budget requesting appropriations have done all that reasonably could be expected of the min this period of transition.

Judge Hutcheson's decision to allow additional time for a solution of the Prince Edward school problem was in sharp contrast to decisions of Judge John Paul in the Charlottesville case and Judge Albert V. Bryan in the Arlington case. Both judges ordered a start on desegregation by set dates—last September in Charlottesville and February 1 in Arlingon. These decisions were upheld December 31 by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals but a stay of that court's mandate has been granted for an appeal to the Supreme Court.

Boatwright Witness Claims Talks Recorded Secretly by Group's Agents

Sat & Times Herald Washington, D.C.
Post 5-17-57

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., May 16 (AP)—A witness who testified yesterday before the Boatwright Committee in secret session here said today a secret record was made by the Committee's investigating Committee's investigating agents in their conversations with him prior to the hearing.

Reginald R. Moss one of five witnesses who apepared before the hearing yesterday, said the recording was played back to him at that time. The Committee agents were not identified.

Moss told a reporter that he was unaware the recording was being made when the agents interviewed him. He said the recording device and microphone must have been hidden on the body of one of the agents. The only thing he saw them carrying, he said today, was a brief case.

In other developments in the wake of yesterday's hearing by the committee, five of the 11 witnesses subpenaed but not called to testify at the hearing took issue with statement by three witnesses who did testify.

The three witnesses who testified said they did not know they were signing an authorization to bring a lawsuit against the Charlottesville School Board for school desegregation.

However, five of the witnesses not called who were reached for comment today said without exception they were all positive they thoroughly understood in the beginning that they were authorizing Oliver W. Hill, a Richmond attorney, to proceed with a petition before the Charlottesville School Board—and, if unsuccessful, to file suit in court.

The Boatwright Committee, unofficially named after its chairman, Del. John B. Boatwright of Buckingham, is one one of two investigating groups set up last year by the General Assembly. It is investigating whether racial litigation may have been stirred up and financed by persons not directly involved.

The second committee set up to probe racial groups in the state is headed by Del. James M. Thomson, of Alexandria. eYsterday and today the Thomson Committee quizzed about 40 Negro witnesses during hearings in Farmville.

Some of those heard by the Thomson group were plaintiffs in the original Prince Edward County desegregation suit. This was one of five cases that led to the Supreme Court decision in 1954 outlawing public school segregation.

the end of next month and in high schools at the start of the term next September, immediately made plans for an emergency meeting to consider the import of the decision. A board spokesman said the meeting would probably be held Wednesday.

In Charlottesville where an order to begin desegregation at the start of the term last September was stayed to permit the appeal, School Board Chairman R. Stanley Goodman Jr., said he would call a meeting of the board at the earliest convenient time.

No Immediate Word

There was no immediate word from Gov. Thomas B. Stanley or Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. on whether the state would consider another appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court. Both officials obtained copies of the decision written by Chief Judge John J. Parker and indicated they would have something to say after studying it.

John S. Battle Jr., Charlottesville school board attorney, said

Not Required

But the circuit court, noted in another connection that "equity does not require the doing of a vain thing as a condition of relief."

The appeals court rejected the three major contentions of the state and the two localities. These were (1) whether the action should have been dismissed as suits against the state; (2) whether the plaintiffs had failed to exhaust administrative remedies, and (3), whether there was an abuse of discretion by the lower courts in entering the injunctive orders.

"We see nothing in these decrees of which defendants can complain," said the opinion by Parker in which Judges Morris A. Soper and Simon E. Sobeloff concurred. "The degrees do not attempt to direct the school officials as to how they shall perform their duties or exercise the discretion vested in them by law, but simply forbid them to discriminate against the plaintiffs or other Negro children similarly situated on the ground of race or color in violation of their rights. . ."

Federal Desegregation Orders May Test Virginia Legislation

News and Leader
Post 1-1-57

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 31 (AP) — A federal appeals court today upheld desegregation decrees affecting two Virginia school districts in a decision that may bring an early test of the operation of new state legislation designed to block any classroom mixing of the races.

The three judge 4th US Circuit Court held in a unanimous opinion that desegregation orders of federal district judges in Arlington and Charlottesville should stand.

These decrees, the circuit court held, "are not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated."

The school board of Arlington, where desegregation was ordered to begin in elementary schools at he believed the order would only require the board to handle applications for the admission or transfer of school pupils on a racially nondiscriminatory basis.

The appeals court did not rule on the constitutionality of the package of anti-integration legislation passed by a special General Assembly session since the Assembly did not act until the orders were entered by Judge John Paul in the Charlottesville case and Judge Albert V. Bryan in the Arlington case.

However, the court's opinion quoted from Judge Bryan's order which said that his injunction "shall not be construed as nullifying any state or local rules, now in force or hereafter promulgated for the assignment of children to classes, courses of study or schools, so long as such rule or assignments are not based upon race or color."

Mixed Crowd Attends School Board Meeting

Star Sun. 1-13-57
Washington, D.C.

The Arlington School Board met yesterday before an integrated audience.

The mixed audience at the meeting, the first of this year, reflected the second policy reversal on racial seating within three months.

Scattered throughout the audience of more than 75 yesterday at Brandon Junior High School were about 15 representatives of three Negro Parent-Teacher groups.

Last October, Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., ruled that under a State law audiences at County Board campaign debates must be segregated.

(A test case of this law, brought by Miss Faith Bissell, was argued last week before Arlington Circuit Court Judge Emery N. Hosmer. A decision is expected tomorrow.)

Change in Policy

The school board had been holding its meetings on a non-segregated basis. Following Mr. Almond's ruling the board decided to segregate the audiences at its Saturday sessions.

It was felt that, because the public was invited to these sessions, they might be classified as public meetings under the State segregation statute. No effort was made to segregate the board's alternate week-night meetings because no invitations went out to the public.

Yesterday, Chairman L. Clark Keeting said that the board had again changed its policy on the Saturday meetings after eliminating invitations to the public.

The public, he said, is no longer being "specifically invited" but instead invitations are being sent out on a personal basis.

According to the chairman, the board had first consulted with its attorney, James Simmonds, who had conferred with Commonwealth's Attorney William J. Hassan.

School Date Requested

In another matter, the board's newly appointed member, Mrs. Helen S. Lane, requested the research department for information which might save tax money on "services not necessary."

Mrs. Lane was appointed by the County Board to replace Mrs. Barbara Riches who died last November. Mrs. Lane is a representative of the county's conservative element, which generally takes a businessman's approach the school needs. The remaining four school board members are in the more liberal camp.

Mrs. Lane requested detailed figures on administrative personnel, the teaching staff, text books, educational materials, transportation, night school and cafeteria expenses.

Virginia School Suits Head to Supreme Court

Star Tues. 6-9-57 B-1-a

Washington, D.C.

MARY LOU WERNER

Virginia's first line of defense against public school integration moves one step nearer the Supreme Court this week.

Arguments open Tuesday before the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals in the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation suits.

Whatever the outcome, either side is expected to carry the cases to the Supreme Court of the United States.

At issue is Virginia's new pupil placement law. This is the first part of a legislative program the State's General Assembly adopted last fall to preserve segregated schools.

Other new laws provide for the closing of schools where integration occurs, and the automatic withholding of State funds from integrated school systems.

Decision Facing Court

The appellate court will be asked to decide whether the placement law is a bona fide administrative program that complies with the Supreme Court school desegregation edict, or part of an illegal scheme to thwart the law of the land.

Federal Judge Walter Hoffman took the latter view when he denied State motions to dismiss the two suits, ruled the placement law unconstitutional and directed Norfolk and Newport News to operate their schools on a non-discriminatory basis beginning next September.

It is Judge Hoffman's ruling that the State has carried to the Fourth Circuit.

Attorneys for the State and for the two school boards contend in briefs filed with the appellate court that Judg Hoffman abused his discretion by ordering integration with "intemperate speed."

The State also claims that Judge Hoffman "arbitrarily set aside a Virginia statute (the placement law) just two weeks after its effective date, before any substantial action was taken pursuant to it and in the absence of any knowledge of the method of its operation in practice."

Called Delaying Tactic

Briefs filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, who represent the Negro plaintiffs, charge that the placement law is just another delaying tactic against compliance with the Supreme Court edict, "and if, and as long as any court will listen to this siren song, the chant will continue until doomsday."

No decision since the original Supreme Court desegregation decree has stirred more controversy in Virginia than Judge Hoffman's. Arlington and Charlottesville earlier were directed to desegregate, but those two cases originated before the State's new legislative program was adopted. The placement law therefore was not an issue in the Arlington or Charlottesville cases. Both communities are now under court orders to begin desegregation next fall.

But the Norfolk and Newport News decisions pulled the rug out from under the plan of Virginia's Democratic leadership to avoid integration. And as Judge Hoffman pulled the rug away, he made some pointed remarks about the course the State was fallowing.

Changes Prejudice

Before his appointment to the Federal bench, Judge Hoffman was the Republican candidate for Virginia Attorney General against Democrat J. Lindsay Almond, jr., who won the election and is still in office. Mr. Almond this year is running for Governor. During a recent speech in Alexandria, Mr. Almond recalled that he appeared in the same platform with Judge Hoffman in the campaign four years ago. He said it was the only election where both candidates got what they wanted—"I became attorney general and he was appointed to the Federal bench."

Senator Byrd, Democrat of Virginia, and head of the State's controlling political organization, charged that Judge Hoffman showed "arrogance and prejudice" in his comments during the Norfolk and Newport News cases.

In ruling the placement law unconstitutional, Judge Hofman took into account other legislation adopted at the same session of the Virginia General Assembly. He said it was a well-settled principle of law that "in determining the constitutionality of legislation a court should examine the legislative history of same to ascertain the legislative purpose and intent."

Points to Definitions

He noted that in adopting new school legislation, the General Assembly defined an "efficient" school system as a segergated school system. Also, the same Assembly adopted a resolution of interposition which in effect says the Supreme Court decree cannot be enforced. Other legislation enacted at the same time provides for the closing of any school or classroom where integration occurs until it can be reorganized on an "efficient" basis, and for the automatic withdrawal of State funds from any school syste mwhere races are mixed.

Placement Board Still In Business

Washington, D.C.

Tues. 8-6-57

RICHMOND, Aug. 5 (Spl.)—Virginia's Pupil Placement Board said today it's still in business despite recent adverse decisions in Federal Courts.

After a closed-door session, the Board issued a statement which said in part: "The Pupil Placement Act has not been invalidated by any court of last resort, and this Board will continue to exercise its duties undre the Pupil Placement Act until forcibly restrained by some higher power or authority."

The Placement Act was declared "unconstitutional on its face" by Federal Judge Walter Hoffman in an opinion upheld by the Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit. Additionally, Federal Judge John Paul has restrained Charlottesville school officials from refusing admission of any child whose parents do not comply with provisions of the act.

The Board, which met today with 45,00 new applications to process, said it had been asked by "certain division superintendents" to explain what effect the court decisions would have on the Board's operations.

Thoufh no locality was mentioned specifically there was obvious reference to the Charlottesville case in the Board's statement, which read:

"This Board is not an enforcement agency, nor is it cloaked with any police powers. Insofar as any court decree may react upon the operation of the Pupil Placement Act through its inclusion of local school officials within the orbit of such decree, this Board can only advise that such school officials be guided in their operation by their own competent counsel."

The Board said it has been receiving applications for admission from Charlottesville parents since Judge Paul's order. The Judge's order did not forbid compliance, it merely said no one had to comply.

As of today, the statement declared, more than 100,000 applications from all sections of the State have been received and acted upon by the Board.

Stanley Plans Sales Talk On Virginia School Bonds

Wed. 1-23-57 Washington, D.C.

P. 1-B

RICHMOND, Jan. 22—Gov. Thomas B. Stanley will speak Feb. 1 before the Muncipal Forum of New York, an organization of investment bankers and brokers interested in city and county bond issues.

The purpose of the talk is to try to convince the bond brokers that school bonds put up for sale by Virginia localities are as good a buy now as they were before the no-integration legislation was passed by the General Assembly last September.

Some experts have argued the legislation—and particularly the law to cut off state funds to localities which begin integration—had a bad psychological effect on prospective bond buyers.

Stanley, however, has said repeatedly the bonds are as strong, legally and financially, as if the legislative changes had not been made.

The New York trip grew out of a meeting here between Stanley and Virginia investment bankers last month. The governor had called the meeting after several Virginia localities were faced with high interest proposals on prospective bond issues.

Arrangements for the New York meeting, announced yesterday, were made through the Bond Club of Virginia. After his talk, Stanley and other state officials will answer any questions put to them by the bond brokers. Some Virginia investment bankers are expected to attend the meeting too.

Stanley will also make another speech in New York Feb. 1. He will talk about the 1957 Jamestown Festival at a dinner session of the New York Southern Society in honor of Virginia.

U.S. Court Orders County in Virginia Speed Integration

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, Nov. 11—The Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals said in effect today that Prince Edward County, Va., and by extension the rest of the state—must get started toward integration of its public schools.

The court handed down a decision reversing Judge Sherman Hutcheson in the United States District Court for the Eastern District of Virginia, at Richmond. Judge Hutcheson ordered an order for integration in Prince Edward County but refused to fix a time limit for it because of public opposition, racial tension and threats to close the schools by statute.

Decision Is Unanimous

The Appeals Court ruling today, in which all three judges on the appellate bench concurred, concluded:

"The order appealed from will accordingly be reversed and the case will be remanded to the court below with directions to enter an order directing the defendants [the school authorities of Prince Edward County] to make a prompt and reasonable start in compliance with the lower court's order enjoining discrimination on the ground of race or color."

Elsewhere, the Appeals Court opinion said in part:

"The fact that the schools might be closed if the order were enforced is no reason for not enforcing it. A person may not be denied his rights under the Constitution because of action taken or threatened in defiance of such rights."

The appeal from Judge Hutcheson's order, taken by the plaintiffs, was argued before the Appeals Court on Oct. 14.

The Appeals judges were Chief Judge John J. Parker, Clement E. Haynesworth Jr. and Harry E. Watkins.

The case began several years ago as an action by Hal Edward Allen, a minor, of Prince Edward County, for his children, Eva, Allen, Ida and Ulysses Allen. He sought to enjoin segregation on the ground that provisions of the Virginia State Constitution and the statutory code, requiring segregation, are violative of the Fourteenth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States and are therefore void.

Appeal Is Upheld

Thec ase was first heard by a three-judge court at Richmond, which denied the relief sought. It was appealed to the Supreme Court, the judgment was reversed and the case was remanded for further proceedings.

In the further proceedings the orignial decree was set aside and a new one was entered declaring the Virginia constitutional and code requirements for segregation invalid and restraining the defendants, the county school authorities, from enforcing segregation "after such time as the necessary arrangements could be made for administration changes on a nondiscriminatory basis with all deliberate speed."

The court's opinion today said "the lower court found it would not be practicable to require that these changes be made effective before the start of the school year in September, 1955. But the finality and force of the order was not affected."

"In July, 1956," the opinion continued, "the three-man court was dissolved and proceedings were entered by the plaintiffs before a single judge (Judge Hutcheson), asking that a time limit be set.

Find Judge in Error

"The defendant countered that the plaintiff had not complied with the Pupil Placement Act. The District Judge denied an order fixing a time limit because of opposition to the order, racial tensions in the community and the possible closing of the Virginia schools under statute if the order were enforced.

"The plaintiffs held that the Pupil Placement Act provided no adequate relief for them.

"We think the district judge was in error. The plaintiffs were entitled to have the county school board act promptly, without being influenced by public or private opposition. The plaintiffs were entitled to have the board act with deliberate speed.

'A whole school year had passed and no step had been take nto comply with the order. Now the time has unquestionably come to say plainly to the defendants that they must act without further delay.

"This does not mean that the defendants need require an immediate mixing of the races but merely that they should abolish the requirements for discrimination.

"If the children of the different races should voluntarily attend different schools this would not be in violation of the Constitution or the court order, so long as there was no requirement to that effect.

"Furthermore, it would not be necessary for the requirement to be removed at once from all school grades, if a reasonable start were made, with due speed, toward consideration of the problems of adjustment."

The court's opinion, a seven-page ruling, then ordered the case back to the lower court and directed that the defendants be told to make a "prompt and reasonable start" toward compliance.

N. A. A. C. P. Is Accused

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 11—A special Virginia Legislative committee declared the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and two related organizations "are now and have been engaged in the unauthorization of law."

That statement was the chief finding of a report to the Legislature and to Gov. Thomas B. Stanley from the Committee on Law Reform and Raciel Activities.

The committee, headed by Delegate James B. Thomson of Alexandria, was set up last year by a special anti-integration session of the Legislature that also enacted a series of laws aimed at curbing N. A. A. C. P. activities in Virginia. The state is resisting integration in the public schools.

Court Writ Again Denied Klein Boy

A Falls Church boy whose parents refused to sign a Virginia Placement form has been denied a second request to enter school temporarily, without signing the form, pending a hearing of his challenge of the Pupil Placement Act.

Joel C. Klein, 12, 473 Hampton court, was denied admission to George Mason Senior High School when his parents refused to sign a placement form. The Kleins are challenging the constitutionality of the placement law in Alexandria Federal Court.

Judge Albert V. Bryan has not scheduled a date for hearing the merits of the Klein case but refused Oct. 11 to allow the boy to enter school without signing the form under protest.

Yesterday Bryan denied a second motion based on the Supreme Court's recent refusal to review the Norfolk and Newport News cases in which Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman declared the placement law unconstitutional.

Bryan denied Bloxton's motion without mentioning the Norfolk and Newport News cases or giving any opinion on the constitutionality of the placement law.

There has been some question whether the Supreme Court's refusal to review the Norfolk and Newport News cases amounted to declaring the law unconstitutional. The question was raised because the Fourth Circuit opinion held the law an inadequate administrative remedy without commenting on its constitutionality.

Primary Results Please Stanley

Post + Times Herald

RICHMOND, July 10 (AP)—Gov. Thomas B. Stanley said today the results of yesterday's Democratic primary "indicate strong endorsement of my public school legislation."

"When a program meets with the approval of the electorate, it gives further assurance that you are on safe ground," the governor said.

In addition, Democratic Party Chairman Thomas H. Blanton said the election results in Alexandria's hot race for the House of Delegates prove "massive resistance is getting stronger."

Blanton saw the defeat of former vice-mayor Albert A. Smoot by Del. James M. Thomson as a "clear-cut victory" for Stanley's cut-off-the-funds school segregation plan.

Thomson fought the campaign for the nomination as an avowed supporter of Stanley's massive resistance plan. Smoot opposed the plan.

Stanley said he was ". . . deeply gratified with the results of the Democratic primary yesterday . . . I congratulate all winners in the primary.

Primary Turnout Elsewhere May Set Low Mark

BULLETIN

Insurgent Richmond attorney Howard Carwile showed surprising strength against Byrd machine stalwart Lindsay Almond in early fragmentary returns from Northern Virginia in the Democratic gubernatorial race. With 36 of 132 Tenth District precincts reporting, the unofficial vote was: Almond 1382, Carwile 1010.

Segregationist James M. Thomson took an early lead over moderate Albert A. Smoot in the bitter Alexandria Democratic race for the House of Delegates. With 1 of 16 precincts reporting, the unofficial vote was: Thomson 70, Smoot 52.

Incumbent candidates for the three Arlington Democratic nominations to the House of Delegates took an early lead in the balloting. With 5 of 37 Arlington precincts reporting, the unofficial vote was:

Del. Harrison Mann	534
Del. Kathryn Stone	543
Del. William Winston	392
Thomas J. Broyhill	376
Betty Thompson	310

Virginia Democrats by the thousands failed to vote yesterday in what may result in the lightest party primary turnout in more than a decade.

Only in Alexandria, scene of the State's hottest primary race, did the voters flock to the polls.

That clash for the party's choice for the city's House of Delegates seat was expected to draw 10,000 voters. A 6000-vote primary in Alexandria is considered good.

Alexandria's big turnout, political observers predicted, favored Albert A. Smoot, who challenged Del. James M. Thomson in the primary. But supporters for both men predicted victory as the polls closed at 7:30 p. m.

The race was a clear cut test of the State Administration's program to cut off State funds to desegregating schools, supported by Thomson and opposed by Smoot.

Sizable votes turned up only at the few places in the State in which heated contests developed for the House of Delegates. In Charlottesville, where Negroes boycotted the local race but voted for Governor, a total vote of 4000 was expected, based on an early heavy turnout.

But in most localities, it was a dull election day. Only one State nomination was up for grabs, the Governorship, and Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. was expected to win handily.

He had virtually ignored his opponent, Howard H. Carwile, in pre-primary campaigning. Instead, Almond, the candidate with the Byrd machine blessing, had trained his guns more on the Republicans who came up again Saturday with Ted Dalton as their nominee for the post.

The Democratic winner will face Dalton in the Nov. 6 election.

Lt. Gov. A. E. S. Stephens was unopposed for renomination in the primary, and already has been certified as the party nominee. The Attorney General candidate is listed on the primary ballot as Howard C. Gilmer Jr., unopposed. But he withdrew under fire, and the party had no official candidate in the primary.

In Arlington, a five-way race for the county's three House seats succeeded in drumming up only mild interest with a 6500-vote total expected. That race, with Dels. Kathryn Stone, Harrison Mann and William L. Winston seeking renomination, perked up in the final hours when challenger Thomas J. Broyhill emerged as an all-out supporter for the State's anti-integration laws. The other candidate, Betty Thompson, had made that stand clear some time ago.

Election judges spent the empty hours embroidering, reading, working crossword puzzles and chatting.

A reporter, who was checking the turnout at one Fairfax poll, was met with this remark from a judge: "Good heavens, as you walked in, I almost forgot what we were here for." Another judge said the reporter's visit was a delightful "diversion."

In the State, there were battles for 27 House seats. But some of the many Democrats who faced no opposition for renomination will face opposition in the Election from Republicans.

The nomination of Dalton and a full State ticket at the Republican Convention caused a late spurt in GOP candidates for the House.

In Alexandria, that city's Republican Committee scheduled a meeting last night to watch the Democratic primary results with keen interest. They will decide whether to put up a candidate before the midnight deadline.

Court Stalls School Plan In Virginia

Advertiser Sun. 7-14-57

Montgomery Ala.

Verdict Throws Out Placement Program; State Readies Appeal

RICHMOND, Va., July 13 (AP)—Virginia lost another major court battle today in its "massive resistance" approach to the Supreme Court's ruling against segregated public schools

The state's 1956 Pupil Placement Act—designed to maintain racially separate schools—was thrown out by the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in an opinion handed down here.

The law set up a three-man state board appointed by the governor and gave it all powers of pupil assignment formerly held by local school boards. It reassigned all pupils to schools they were then attending and gave the state board power to make future assignments—occasioned by promotion or transfer—for a variety of reasons other than race.

NO ADEQUATE REMEDY

But the appellate court, in upholding Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman in Norfolk and Newport News cases, said:

"This statute furnishes no adequate remedy to plaintiffs (Negro parents and school children) because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities" to maintain segregation.

The court pointed to the existing Virginia Appropriation Act which provides that all state funds shall be cut off from elementary or high schools of a local school division if one elementary or high school in that division admits a Negro child.

REMEDIES EXHAUSTED

Because the Placement Act provided for a system of appeals from the state board to the governor and the state courts, lawyers for the state and the defendant school boards had argued the cases should be dismissed or proceedings stayed until such administrative remedies had been exhausted.

Appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court definitely will be made, attorneys for the defense said today. Meanwhile, they already have asked the circuit court to stay its mandate to the lower court until an appeal is perfected.

Whether Judge Hoffman will stay his order for Norfolk and Newport News schools to be integrated by this September pending a decision by the Supreme Court was a question that couldn't be answered immediately.

advertiser p. 2-a

Alabama Atty. Gen. John Patterson said he could give no "off the cuff" opinion on how the ruling might relate to a school placement law passed by the State Legislature in 1955. Pointing out that the ruling came from a different circuit court, he added however that "We will have a copy of the ruling within a week or two, and will certainly study it closely to determine how any part might affect any section of our own law."

STAND UP IN COURT

But both Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham and Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Shorter, co-sponsors of the Alabama School Placement Act in the Senate in 1955, expressed the belief it will stand up in court.

Said Boutwell, who is chairman of a joint coordinating committee working on segregation problems, declared:

"I prefer not to comment on the decision of the U.S. Fourth Court of Appeals wherein they ruled the Virginia School Placement Act invalid, until I have studied the full text of the opinion.

SUBSTANTIALLY DIFFERENT

"Amendments to the Alabama act are now in the hands of 14 members of the joint legislative coordinating committee of the legislature.

"The Alabama Placement Act as now written is entirely consistent with the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court rendered in May of 1954. The amendment now being considered, I believe, will make the bill more workable. I do not see how any court would be justified in declaring the Alabama School Placement Act invalid."

Engelhardt pointed out that a major difference is the provision for a special placement board in the Virginia act, while the Alabama measure gives full placement authority and the right to hear appeals to school boards involved.

He added that he considers the Alabama act, which North Carolina copied and passed into law, "much stronger" than the Virginia measure.

Segregation Vote Test Set in Virginia

Times-Union P. 6

By Jay G. Hayden

WASHINGTON—A Democratic primary in Virginia has completed the format of the most significant Southern voting test on the issue of racial segregation in public schools since the Supreme Court ordered an end to that practice.

For governor, the Democratic nominee is J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., who as Attorney General has conducted the "massive resistance" decreed by Sen. Harry F. Byrd, long Democratic boss of his state. Mr. Almond stands squarely on a law which threatens withdrawal of state financial support from any school which permits mixing of the races even to the extent of one Negro pupil. The Byrd policy is to close the schools rather than racially intermix them.

The Republican nominee, Ted Dalton, is wholly a Virginian and far from a fullfledged de-segregationist. But he has a clear alternative to Almond's "massive resistance," made by the Byrd machine itself when it engineered an election to approve the so-called Gray "pupil assignment" plan. This device would let each local school board decide for itself, but with stipulation that if parents object to sending their child to a mixed school he or she shall be transferred at public expense.

Dalton is for a local pupil assignment program "similar to the one approved by the people of Virginia as part of the Gray commission recommendation and similar to the ones which have stood the test in the courts to date in North Carolina."

In North Carolina a federal court refused to interrupt a pupil assignment plan, but only to the extend of holding that protesters had first to exhaust their remedies under state law. Even so, discriminatory pupil assignment may be the way to ease the pains of racial integration. Many Northern states long have practiced that device, although not directly admitting it.

The test in Virginia very well may rest on what happens between now and November election day.

Five Virginia school districts are under federal court order to desegregate, four of them by beginning of the next term in September. Areas involved include Arlington, right next to Washington and the fastest growing county in the state, and such normally all-South communities as Charlottesville, Norfolk and Newport News.

Beginning in September certainly there are going to be new court tests, in which Almond as Attorney General will be compelled to reaffirm his undying devotion to racial segregation regardless of either human, governmental or economic consequences.

The first guess of almost all qualified political prophets is that the hotter this argument the better for Almond and the Byrd machine. But there are other angles.

First, the Negro vote. Close to a quarter of Virginia population is of that race, but Negro voting has fallen far short of that potentiality. Partly this is due to poll tax and other laws frankly designed to reduce Negro voting. Actually, even Negro spokesmen say that members of their race, under the best of conditions, don't seem to want to vote.

But there are symptoms of change. The rise of President Eisenhower's Virginia plurality from 46,531, in 1952 to 61,537 in 1956 may have been accounted for by switch in Negro votes.

A typical Negro precinct in Richmond gave Eisenhower 17 per cent in 1952 and 80 per cent in 1956.

With the racial issue quiescent, Dalton polled 45 per cent of the Virginia vote as Republican nominee against present Gov. Stanley in 1953. Dalton's main contention then was that the Byrd machine's only interest was low taxes, with result that the state is hopelessly outclassed in schools, highways and a multitude of other needs.

It was said at that time that Dalton would have been elected except for his advocacy of a $100,000,000 bond issue. But still there may be a lot of Virginians who don't like to be listed as resident of one among the most backward of all states.

Judge Orders Segregation In Virginia Area Ended

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 7-28-57

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 27 (AP) —U.S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan today ordered that segregation of public schools in Arlington County, Va., be abolished, beginning in September.

He also rejected a request by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People that his original desegregation order be amended to specify that Arlington students need not use the state's new pupil placement law.

Effect of the ruling is to leave intact, with minor changes, the injunction he granted July 31, 1956, restraining the Arlington School Board from denying students admission because of race.

Virginia Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almand Jr. earlier had asked Bryan to withhold enforcement of the Arlington decree until there is a Supreme Court ruling on the placement law.

Bryan ruled, however, the right to an injunction has already been established in the Arlington case.

"Consideration of administrative remedies (such as the placement law) will not again be reached unless and until petition is made to enforce the injunction," he said.

"Plainly, therefore, commencement of the restraint made in the decree should not be postponed to a determination of the validity of the administrative remedy."

If and when there are complaints of violations of his original injunction against the school board, Judge Bryan said "the court will then inquire if the complainant has first submitted, or has adequate means of submitting, his grievance for correction administratively."

At that time, he said, the court "will make such further order as is appropriate. In this way, specificity and precision will be given to each complaint, it will be individualized, and it will be appraised in its own peculiar environment, of course in the light, too, of the regulations and precedents then at hand."

In rejecting the NAACP request to say that students need not use the placement law, Judge Bryan said "the sufficiency of the act has not been previously an issue in this suit and is now advanced prematurely."

One minor change made by Judge Bryan in his original decree updated specified times for desegregation of Arlington County schools. Where he originally ordered an end to segregation in elementary schools by last February and secondary schools by this September, the revision now makes his edict effective in both levels this coming September.

Attorneys argued the case today after NAACP lawyers filed a written motion asking that Negro children be admitted to Arlington County white schools in the September term of school.

In 1956 Bryan ordered that Arlington's elementary schools be integrated as of last February and that the junior and senior high schools be integrated in September.

His ruling was upheld by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court declined to review the case, which had the effect of upholding the circuit and district courts.

Pullen Assails Bias in Virginia

Post & Times Herald P. 11-B

Thurs. 6-27-57

Washington, D. C.

By Lawrence Stern
Staff Reporter

Maryland's superintendent of schools yesterday blamed Virginia's current school desegregation crisis on its method of choosing a State school superintendent.

Virginia's school problem, said Thomas G. Pullen Jr., stems largely from the fact that its superintendent is a direct appointee of the Governor.

Pullen told students at the University of Maryland school of education that if he were running Virginia's schools, with the same authority he holds in Maryland, integration would be succeeding there.

Davis Y. Paschall, Virginia's superintendent of public instruction, promptly replied from his Richmond office.

"I haver never had any political pressure brought to bear on me because I was appointed by the Governor. If it were I would move out."

Pullen, addressing a course on "Problems and Trends in Contemporary American Education," pointed out that in Maryland the superintendent is named by a seven-man Board of Education, which is in turn appointed by the governor. It takes a majority of four votes to oust him.

Pullen said his own formula for compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decree is "to let the problem be worked out at local levels and to permit the manner and degree of integration to vary with local conditions."

A majority of Maryland's 23 counties and Baltimore City have already taken steps toward desegregation of their public schools.

Pullen said his system would leave no vestiges of bitterness after 50 years." Such an approach in Virginia, he said, might have avoided much of that state's trouble.

The Maryland official said Maryland this year will open four new junior colleges—two in Baltimore County, one in Frederick and one in Harford.

U.S. Judge Orders Schools in Arlington Area to Act at Start of Fall Term

Sun. 7-28-57

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 27 (UP) — Federal District Court Judge Albert Bryan today ordered Arlington County, Va., to desegregate its schools at the opening of the fall semester in September.

He upheld a motion by Negro attorneys to order a year-old desegregation decree into effect immediately.

The ruling was directly opposite to one issued Friday by Federal Judge John Paul of Harrisonburg, Va., in a desegregation case involving Charlottesville, Va.

Judge Paul, ruling on an identical motion in a nearly identical school case, ordered a year-old desegregation decree against Charlottesville delayed until the United States Supreme Court passed on Virginia's Pupil-Placement Act.

The delay in the Charlottesville case was expected to last at least six months.

Judge Bryan held that the Pupil-Placement Act was not pertinent to the Arlington case.

"The sufficiency of the [Pupil-Placement] Act," he said, "has not been previously an issue in this suit and is now advanced prematurely." He said that "the court must deny the plaintiff's request that the decree be enlarged to include a declaration parallelling the ruling of the Court of Appeals, in effect allowing the students to by-pass the Pupil Placement Act."

The deicsion was a victory for Oliver Hill and Spottswood Robinson of Richmond, Va., Negro attorneys. They argued that the Arlington schools should be desegregated this fall and that the Pupil-Placement Act should be disregarded.

Judge Bryan heard oral argument on the case this morning.

J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Virginia's Attorney General representing the county, centered his defense on Judge Paul's ruling on Friday. Mr. Almond also cited what he called "the insurmountable difficulties faced by the school board in making such an adjustment at this late date."

Mr. Almond also asked that Judge Bryan withhold the desegregation decree until the Pupil-Placement Act had been tested in the Supreme Court.

First Ordered in '56

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 27—In 1956 Judge Bryan ordered that Arlington's elementary schools be integrated as of last February and that the junior and senior high schools be integrated in September.

His ruling was upheld by the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court declined to review the case, which had the effect of upholding the Circuit and District Courts.

The county's schools remained segregated during the reviews of Judge Bryan's order.

Both the Arlington and Charlottesville cases originated before the Pupil-Placement Act was adopted by the Virginia General Assembly in its efforts to maintain school segregation in the state.

The Pupil-Placement Act gives a three-member state board authority to assign pupils to schools. Federal District Judge Walter Hoffman, in a ruling involving Norfolk and Newport News schools, held the law to be unconstitutional. His ruling was upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals two weeks ago. The court agreed to withold its mandate pending Supreme Court action.

Six Arlington Negroes Lose Transfer Plea

Post and Times Herald

P B 1 Jul. 8 30 57

Rebuffed by Placement Board, They Will Appeal to Judge Bryan

RICHMOND (Special) — All six Arlington County Negroes who applied for admission to white schools this fall have been assigned instead to a Negro school by Virginia's Pupil Placement Board.

A Board spokesman said the Negro children had been assigned to Hoffman-Boston School "for reasons sufficient to us."

An attorney for the Arlington Negroes immediately announced that the children would not report to Hoffman-Boston next Thursday but would defy the Placement Board and present themselves at the white schools to which they sought admission.

The Board's disclosure came at the conclusion of a day-long closed-door meeting at which members assigned some 10,000 children to various schools all over the State. Earlier, the Board had assigned an estimated 110,000 other children to specific schools without an appeal in a single case.

As fare as is known, the effect of al assignments made thus far is to preserve racial segregation.

Board members issued a written statement at the conclusion of today's meeting calling on all parents who have refused t sign its application forms to do so—under protest if they choose— for the sake of their children. The statement continued:

"If a parent is so oblivious to the welfare of his or her child that he refuses to comply with State law, even though he can do so without prejudice to the legal rights of himself or his child, the hardship of the child is the responsibility of the parents, and not of the State of Virginia or of this Board."

Board members said an Arlington branch will be opened next Tuesday in the Arlington Trust Building on Courthouse rd. and will be open for business from 9 a. m. to 4 p. m. five days a week to assist parents who have not signed application forms there.

An estimated 500 Arlington children will be ineligible to attend school this fall unless the forms are signed.

Validity of the Placement Act is under attack in separate suits pending before both the U. S. Supreme Court and the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. No ruling from either court is expected within the next several weeks.

Edwin C. Brown, one of the attorneys for the six Negro children in Arlington who were refused transfers to white schools, said the children will present themselves for admission to these schools anyway on opening day.

The six are Sadie, Elizabeth and Bowles F. Phillips, all of 1900 N. Culpeper st.; Gary Boswell of 2401 S. Seminary rd.; George T. Nelson, 2005 N. Cameron st. and Joyce Marie Bailey, 1929 N. Dinwiddie st.

Brown said about 20 other Negro children who have no filled out the pupil placemen forms will also seek admission to schools they feel the should attend on the first da of school.

If they are refused admission, he said, they will go a soon as possible into Alexandria Federal Court and as Judge Albert V. Bryan to enforce his own injunction tha Negro children could not b barred from attending whit schools by reason of rac alone.

On July 28, Judge Bryan reiterated his decision of year earlier and ordered al Arlington schools desegregated next month.

In his decision he said Negro children seeking admission to white schools must use the machinery of the Pupil Placement Act. That law, however, could not be used merely to obstruct Negroes seeking admission into white schools, he said.

Judge Bryan said if the complainants obtained no relief from the Pupil Placement Act or any other administrative machinery set up by the State they could return to his court immediately and seek relief there.

AIM Denies Plan To Study Schools

Post and Times Herald

P. B1 Washington, D.C.

Wed. 9-4-57

By Jack Eisen
Staff Reporter

Officials of the Arlington Independent Movement, the more conservative of the County's two political coalitions, heatedly denied yesterday that they plan a thorough re-examination of school curricula, textbooks, report cards and staff.

They took issue with an article published yesterday in The Washington Post which said the study would begin next January after AIM gains control of the appointive School Board.

The article was based on a survey of leaders of AIM and its more liberal rival, Arlingtonians for a Better County, and of school officials and educators. According to the survey, a study of virtually all phases of school operation —financial, educational, administrative—could be expected as an outgrowth of the changeover.

Speaking for the AIM, Fred A. Gosnell Jr., its general chairman, declared: "School matters are entirely up to the School Board, and not up to AIM or ABC."

Statement Issued

His full statement follows:

"Reports that the organization is contemplating a study of the school system are completely erroneous and without foundation. No such study or quiz has ever been discussed or even thought of by AIM. School matters are entirely up to the School Board, and not up to AIM or ABC.

"We feel that the article attempted to make a political football out of the school system. Our main purpose is to elect a County Board member, J. Maynard Magruder, and we have no desire to run the schools.

"The reporter for The Post had never discussed the contents of his article with me or any other official of AIM, and it is our opinion that his article is his imagination or the result of promptings by our political opponents, ABC.

"Our candidate, M. Magruder, has served in the State Legislature 12 years and has done as much for the schools of Arlington County as any other person, and his record is a matter of history and cannot be changed."

Gosnell declined to discuss specific points in the newspaper account. Earlier in the day he had scheduled a press conference, but cancelled it and substituted the prepared statement.

Leader Interviewed

Leone Buchholz, leader of the County Board's AIM majority, said she had been interviewed by Post Reporter Ralph Reikowsky when he was gathering information for the article.

She denied, however, that she said the faction was "determined to take control of the School Board and put the schools on a sound financial basis."

Mrs. Buchholz said the AIM majority voted to appoint Robert A. Peck to the School Board because in prior public service he had demonstrated he was generous toward school budgets, because he was a good businessman and the School Board needed one, and because he is honest and has high moral standards.

All she knows about Peck's educational philosophy, she added, is that he feels the basic fundamentals should be thoroughly taught — "something everyone can agree on."

A former teacher, Mrs. Buchholz said she did not want to do away with school buses or the hot-lunch program—two areas, the news account said, that seem certain to come under scrutiny.

"Over-Organized"

Mrs. Buchholz said her personal feeling is that Arlington schools are "over-organized," with teachers doing too much clerical work. She acknowledged that this is a national problem.

Only a State Supreme Court of Appeals decision stands in the path of a third AIM appointment to the School Board. The two ABC members of the County Board have appealed a lower court's finding that the County Board as presently constituted may appoint a School Board member for a term starting next Jan. 1.

The School Board now has a 3-2 ABC majority, with two seats to be vacated Dec. 31.

If the AIM's view on the School Board appointment is upheld by the high court, this November's County Board race would have no effect on the control of the School Board for two years. In the November race, Magruder is opposed by Herbert Brown, a magazine editor who is the ABC candidate.

Virginia city drops placement forms

Afro-American Sat. 8-24-5

Baltimore Md

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Following a consultation with former Gov. John S. Battle attorney for the Charlottesville School Board, the board has decided to drop the use of pupil placement forms. P. 20

This means that when school opens on Sept. 3 children will be permitted to attend classes even though their parents or guardians failed to fill out the required forms of the State Pupil Placement Board.

Judge John Paul of the U.S District Court on July 26 ruled that children must be permitted to attend school whether or not their parents or guardians filled out the forms.

He also postponed a previous desegregation order until the U.S. Supreme Court could rule on the constitutionality of the Placement Board in the Newport News and Norfolk cases.

SUPT. F. R. ELLIS said the decision was not reached at any formal meeting of the school board, but he said that he had discussed the matter with each member. A scheduled meeting will be on Sept. 12.

In a public statement, the board declared that "this matter has been discussed with counsel and the members of the school board."

The board added that it was complying with the U.S. District Court order that "no child will be denied entrance to the public schools of Charlottesville in September because of failure of parents or guardians to make application for school assignment to the Pupil Placement Board."

"Pupil Placement Board applications forms, however," the board stated, "will be made available . . . for the voluntary use of parents enrolling children in school."

THE PLACEMENT board reports that some 56 applications haven't been returned—some 47 being held by parents of colored children attending the lone colored elementary school.

Following a meeting of the Placement Board last week, the body released a statement it would continue its functions of assigning pupils to schools throughout the state.

Integration may come in February

RICHMOND

"It looks as if some schools in Virginia will be ordered to integrate by February. The ruling foreshadows the doom of the Byrd machine massive resistance program."

Oliver W. Hill, attorney for the Pupils Protective Association, which fought to abolish the Virginia Placement Act, made this comment on Monday after the U.S. Supreme Court, to all practical purposes, rendered the Pupil Placement Law ineffective.

The Supreme Court refused to review a judgment of a U.S. District Court ordering integration of the public schools of Norfolk and Newport News, Va.

THE EFFECT was to leave standing an integration order issued last February by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman.

Ruling from the bench, Judge Hoffman called the Placement Law "unconstitutional on its face." Afro American

He ordered the public schools of Norfolk and Newport News to integrate by September.

As a result, Virginia had asked the Supreme Court to delay the order, contending that it should not be made until the constitutionality of the law had been ruled on by the State Courts.

JUDGE HOFFMAN must now set a new date for the schools in question to be integrated. Sat 11-2-57

It was this fact which Mr. Hill had reference to when he stated it is likely integration will begin in Virginia next February.

Another desegregaton case, which probably will be affected by Monday's action of the Supreme Court, is that of the Charlottesville District. Federal Judge John Paul had suspended action on a pending case to await outcome of the appeal to the Supreme Court on the Placement Law.

Both judges have indicated that they would hesitate to order integration in the middle of a semester. This is why February, the beginning of the second half of the term, is likely to be the target date.

CHESTER M. HAMPTON, editor of the AFRO, and president of the Pupils' Protective Association, hailed the Supreme Court's action as "timely and appropriate."

Mr. Hampton called upon the foes of public school integration to stop wasting state funds fighting for a "lost cause."

"If our public officials spent a fraction of the time, energy, and money in an effort to uphold the law of the land, they would be doing a public service for both the state of Virginia and its people.

"The court's action offers the state administration an opportunity to junk its 'dead-end policy' of massive resistance policy, and comply with the high court's rulings."

W. LESTER BANKS, executive secretary of the Virginia NAACP, expressed pleasure over the courts' action. "It sounds like good news," he declared.

Reaction of the proponents of Virginia "massive resistance" to school integration was that of continued defiance.

J. Lindsey Almond Jr., who was state attorney - general when the General Assembly enacted the anti - integration laws, said he still favors the "massive resistance" program.

The refusal of the Supreme Court to review the judgment does not change his position "one iota," he declared.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, who says he will cut off state funds to any school district that is integrated, indicated that the state government will continue its all - out resistance to integration.

THE PLACEMENT LAW, which became affective last Dec. 29, was passed by the General Assembly's special session of 1956.

It also provides that, if any school permits integration, either by court order or otherwise, the school is to be closed immediately.

In this connection, Mr. Hill, who is also chief legal counsel for the Virginia Conference of NAACP Branches, has indicated that padlocking of the state's schools will be contested.

He stated earlier this month that the NAACP does not plan to sit idly by while the schools are closed.

"We propose to go into court, if necessary, to force public officials to do what the laws require of them."

Virginia Moves To Avoid Compliance

RICHMOND, Va. — (NNPA) — Both sides appeared Wednesday to be set for the probable closing of public schools in Prince Edward County to avoid compliance with the ruling of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals that "a prompt and reasonable start" to desegregate schools in that county must be made.

The case in which the appeals court rule is one of the five cases in which the Supreme Court handed down its decision of May 17, 1954, against segregated public schools and directed lower Federal courts on May 31, 1955, to require that the defendants in those cases "make a prompt and reasonable start toward full compliance" with its decision.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley said on Tuesday that white citizens of Prince Edward County would be ready to run private schools with very little delay rather than comply with the court order.

On the other hand, Oliver W. Hill, NAACP attorney, has repeatedly told the Federal courts that the NAACP will not stand idly by and permit any school district in Virginia to close its public schools rather than permit a colored child to attend a white school.

It is his opinion that public schools may not be closed without an amendment to the Virginia constitution. Atlanta Ga.

This opinion is based on a section in the Virginia constitution requiring the General Assembly to "establish and maintain an efficient system of public free schools throughout the state."

Mr. Hill said the NAACP proposes "to go into court, if necessary, to force public officials to do what the laws require of them."

If the public schools are closed and private schools for whites are opened, as is planned, no provision has been made for the schooling of colored children in Prince Edward County.

Prince Edward County has a colored population of about 55 percent. White residents have pledged $200,000 to carry out private schooling of white pupils if the public schools are closed.

Highest Court Refuses To Grant Arlington Desegregation Delay

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. Tues. 3-26-57

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

The Supreme Court yesterday upheld lower court decisions directing Arlington and Charlottesville to begin racial desegregation of their schools.

By an 8-0 decision, the highest Court refused to review Virginia's appeal and sent the cases back to the Federal District Courts to carry out.

Arlington had been ordered to begin desegregation of its elementary schools by last February and its secondary Schools by next September. Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan issued the order last July 31.

Charlottesville had been ordered to begin desegregation in schools by last September in a July 12 order by Federal Judge John Paul. But the State had appealed to the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals and, losing there, asked the Supreme Court for a review.

Yesterday's decision did not take Virginia's legal experts by surprise. They think it unlikely that the Court's will order desegregation in the middle of the term, and a National Association for the Advancement of Colored ePople spokesman said it would not ask such action.

This makes a September date likely. At that time, the State plans to use the new State Pupil Placement Board to further delay desegregation.

Neither the board nor any other of the State's anti-integration laws enacted last September were issues in the Charlottesville and Arlington cases. The Board was declared unconstitutional in the Newport News and Norfolk cases by Judge Walter E. Hoffman, but that decision is being appealed.

It is unlikely a decision on the legality of the Pupil Placement Board by the Supreme Court will be forthcoming until October. State legal experts believe, therefore, Virginia will not be faced with a final desegregation decision until next February when the General Assembly will be meeting.

Officials Decline Comment

Neither Gov. Thomas B. Stanley nor Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., leading candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination would comment on yesterday's decision. Almond said he would first have to confer with school board attorneys.

It is understood he will recommend that the school boards, when the Federal District Courts reset desegregation dates, plead that they no longer have jurisdiction over pupil assignments.

The Arlington School Board will huddle Thursday night with its attorneys to discuss the decision.

In another desegregation case yesterday, the Supreme Court approved a lower court decision which denied Negroes outright admittance to a white school in Old Fort, N. C., until they have exhausted procedures set up in that State's pupil assignmen tprogram.

Virginia and North Carolina have enacted different plans to deal with desegregation. Virginia coupled its assignment plan with a provision to close integrated schools and ultimately withhold State funds if they remained integrated. North Carolina put no such restrictions on its plan.

In addition, Virginia centralized assignment of pupils in the State Pupil Placement Board while North Carolina left assignment with the local school boards.

Arlington Plans Appeal Of Desegregation Order

Star Thurs. 1-3-57 P. 19-A Washington, D.C.

Arlington County and Charlottesville will appeal to the Supreme Court to reverse Federal court orders that they desegregate public schools. The appeal procedure may result in postponement of deadlines facing both jurisdictions to begin desegregation this month.

Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., announced this course of action following conferences with attorneys for both school boards yesterday.

The Arlington School Board held a closed conference last night. The only comment on what occurred there came from Chairman L. Clark Keating, who said the board "is prepared to follow the recommendations of the attorney general in this matter, just as we have from the beginning."

Brought Assembly Action

(It was the School Board's announcement last January of tentative plans to integrate some of its schools that led the General Assembly to revoke the county's right to elect members of the board.)

Mr. Almond said attorneys for the two school boards will ask the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to stay its mandate pending the outcome of the appeals to the Supreme Court.

The Circuit Court Monday unanimously affirmed lower court orders calling for desegregation of schools in the two localities. Unless the stay is granted, the court would issue a mandate January 31 informing District Judges John Paul and Albert V. Bryan that their judgments had been affirmed and were to be executed at once.

Previous Orders Stayed

Judge Paul ordered Charlottesville's schools desegrated as of last September, but this was stayed pending the appeal to the Circuit Court. Judge Bryan had ordered Arlington's elementary schools desegregated by the start of the second semester in the current school year, and high schools by next September.

Mr. Almond said yesterday, "We're starting study on the process of appeal within the next few days."

The attorney general also said he believed that if a stay is not permitted, the State would invoke its new pupil placement act as a means of preserving segregation in the schools of the two localities.

Blow Dealt Virginia On Integration

Post + Herald Balto., Md. Tues. 3-26-57

Top Court Rejects School Appeal In 'Massive Resistance'

WASHINGTON, March 25 (AP)—The Supreme Court today dealt a blow to Virginia's policy of "massive resistance" to racial integration in its public schools.

With a minimum of words, the court rejected 8-0 Virginia's appeals from orders of lower federal courts enjoining enforcement of racial segregation in Charlottesville and Arlington County.

Treating the appeals as routinely as possible, the court grouped them with 23 others in its list of orders and merely said as to all of them: "The petitions for writs of certiorari in these cases are severally denied."

Charlottesville, in the central part of the state, is the seat of the University of Virginia. Arlington County, just across the Potomac River from Washington, is populated heavily by government workers and service personnel.

The court emphasized again its policy of giving lower courts wide discretion in bringing about desegregation "with all deliberate speed," as ordered in May 1955.

It did so by refusing to review orders of lower courts denying immediate admission of Negro children in Old Fort, N. C., to a white school.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, now a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Virginia, carried the Charlottesville and Arlington appeals to the Supreme Court.

In both cases the U. S. Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit (Maryland, Virginia, the Carolinas and West Viriginia) affirmed orders of district judges directing the ending of segregation.

Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington elementary schools desegregated as of last Jan. 31 and high schools by next September. Judge John Paul ordered Charlottesville schools desegregated as of last September. Both these orders have been held in abeyance pending the exhaustion of appeals procedures.

Virginia now has 25 days in which to petition the Supreme Court to reconsider its today's refusal to review the two cases. Ultimately they will have to go back to the district judges for them to set new deadlines.

Almond questioned, among other things, the power a federal district court to enjoin a local school board, an agency of Virginia, without the state's consent to be sued. He also contended the Negro pupils had not exhausted state administrative remedies before going to federal courts, and said Judges Bryan and Paul abused their discretion.

In affirming the rulings of the two district judges, the Court of Appeals said the orders of the district judges "are not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated."

Both Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., declined "at this time" to say if they would bring the case before the high court.

NOTHING DONE

The District court was acting on a two-year-old Supreme Court order that Negro leaders claimed the local school boards had done nothing about.

On July 31 a District Court ordered all elementary schools in Arlington county desegregated by the end of January, and desegregation of Junior and Senior High Schools by next September.

On July 12, the Charlottesville School Board was ordered by Fed. Judge John Paul to begin to plan for school segregation during the past fall. A delay had been granted, however, last August in order to allow the appeal to a higher court.

NEGRO LEADERS

Negro leaders said the state was not proceeding with "deliberate speed to desegregate as the Supreme Court had ordered."

While upholding the Negro protest, the Appeals Court, in an opinion written by Judge John J. Parker, said the move was not deliberate, "but was a clear manifestation of an attitude of intransigence which justified the issuance of the injunction."

He said it was the school authorities' "obligation under the law" to carry out the integration program."

Two Cities Face January Integration

RICHMOND, Va. — (INS) — The Fourth U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Monday directed Charlottesville and Arlington counties to desegregate their public schools.

The ruling upheld earlier lower court decisions calling for desegregation by specified dates.

Unless an appeal is made to the U. S. Supreme Court, the two cities would be obliged to begin school segregation in Charlottesville immediately and Arlington by January.

SUPREME COURT REJECTS PLEA FOR DELAY IN DESEGREGATION

Alabama's Assignment Law And The Virginia Ruling

Advertiser

The ruling of a Virginia federal judge, U. S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman, that Virginia's pupil placement law is "unconstitutional on its face" casts a cloud over a similar law in Alabama—the pupil assignment law.

Alabama's law, the first major legislative effort to thwart forceful integration in state public schools, grants to local boards of education broad powers for assigning pupils to schools after consideration of a variety of factors, including intellectual capacity of the child, social background, the possible psychological effects on him and other children, etc.

Although openly proposed as a way of defeating the Supreme Court's race-mixing order, the Alabama law makes no mention of race as a basis for assignment.

Montgomery, Ala.

We have no legal understanding of the fine points of similarity between the Virginia and Alabama laws, but they seem basically the same. Judge Hoffman, considering the legislative intent behind the Virginia act said: "The pattern is plain. The legislature has adopted procedures to defeat" the Supreme Court decision.

Should the Hoffman ruling be upheld, Alabama's counterpart would seem mortally wounded. Still untested of course is the state's "freedom of choice" amendment and act, but if legislative intent is to be the basis for invalidation, this measure too would seem in doubt. The Alabama legislature which convenes in May would seem to have its work cut out, plugging the holes.

Civil Rights Bill Delayed By Dixie Dominated Senate Group

World B'ham, Ala.
Sat. 3-30-57

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The Supreme Court Monday rejected appeals by the State of Virginia from court orders to integrate public schools in Arlington and Charlottesville.

Figuring in the two appeals was the question of whether a state may be sued without its consent, an issue not raised in earlier segregation suits.

Petitions by Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond also challenged the lower court decisions on grounds that the Negro plaintiffs had failed to show that their children were qualified for transfer to schools now attended exclusively by white pupils.

Arlington was ordered by lower courts to desegregate elementary schools by Jan. 31 and high schools by next September. Charlottesville was directed to desegregate as of last September.

CIVIL RIGHTS BILL

Meanwhile Southern opponents blocked action on Civil Rights legislation in the Senate Judiciary committee.

Sen. Thomas B. Hennings (D) Mo., said he moved in the closed session to take up the bill immediately for discussion and consideration of amendments.

But he said that Sen. Sam J. Ervin (D) N. C., and Olin D. Johnston (D) S. C., then "took the floor and there was considerably discussion" without any showdown on his motion.

The committee meeting broke up promptly at noon when the bells rang for the Senate session. Hennings said that chairman James O. Eastland (D) Miss., a strong foe of Civil Rights legislation, announced he had to go to the floor because of his interest in pending measures.

If his motion had been put to a vote, Hennings said, he was confident it would have been approved by an 8 to 4 margin. Delay is a major tactic of opponents of the legislation. Eastland, asked when his unit will meet again, replied: "Oh, Monday or our regular date."

Hennings said he will renew his motion if the committee meets Monday.

Asked if he thought the committee's lack of action was a rebuff, Hennings replied: "No, when you are in a Marathon race, you don't bother about who is ahead after the first couple of yards."

Once the committee decides to take up the Civil Rights legislation, opponents have said they will demand further hearings by the full committee. However, supporters claim the votes to beat this proposal.

The legislation approved by Hennings' subcommittee last Tuesday, would protect voting rights of Negroes, permit the government to seek an injunction in federal court to prevent offenses against minority groups, create a commission to investigate civil rights problems and establish a civil rights division in the Justice department.

The storm center of the program is a provision which opponents claim would deprive persons of a jury trial when they are accused of ignoring an injunction. Hennings said this charge is essentially without foundation.

Bias School Appeal Rejected

Defender P.1
Chicago, Ill.
Sat. 3-30-57

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The Supreme Court Monday rejected appeals by the state of Virginia from lower court orders to integrate public schools in Arlington and Charlottesville.

Figuring in the two appeals was the question of whether a state may be sued without its consent, an issue not raised in earlier segregation suits.

Petitions by Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond also challenged the lower court decisions on grounds that the Negro plaintiffs had failed to show that their children were qualified for transfer to schools now attended exclusively by white pupils.

Arlington was ordered by lower courts to desegregate elementary schools by Jan. 31 and high schools by next September. Charlottesville was directed to desegregate as of last September.

State Bids Localities Keep School Segregation in Face of Court Order

Wed. 3-27-57
New York

Special to The New York Times.

RICHMON, Va., March 26—Virginia's Pupil Placement Law became today the state's new line of defense in school segregation. It was indicated that the line would hold off desegregation for some time.

J. Lindsay Almond Jr., State Attorney General, was notifying two localities that they could not comply with court orders to desegregate. These orders, for Arlington and Charlottesville, were, in effect, left standing yesterday when the United States Supreme Court refused to review them.

Mr. Almond advised the Arlington authorities that they should refer to the state's Pupil Placement Board Negro children seeking admission to white schools. The three-man board was set up in January in line with laws passed at a special session of the Legislature last fall aimed at avoiding public school integration.

The Legislature ordered children kept in their present schools, empowered the placement board to authorize any shifting, and permitted segregation for reasons other than race.

The Pupil Placement Act has been declared unconstitutional by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk on the ground that it is a legislative effort to block desegregation. However, his decision is being appealed to the United States Circuit Court of Appeals here.

Decision Expected in 1958

Most observers expected a final decision on the procedure would not be reached until next year.

Despite the challenge, Mr. Almond said today the placement law was presumed valid until and unless it was overturned by a court whose decision could not be appealed.

On that basis, he advised Arlington officials that only the placement board and not local school authorities could assign or transfer pupils. It appeared that a locality seeking to undertake desegregation would need to assign pupils to schools other than the segregated ones they now attend.

Mr. Almond planned to give identical advice to authorities in Charlottesville. Observers believed the Attorney General's opinion that the localities could not comply with the court orders would establish for the defendants an answer to any contempt citation that might be filed against them.

Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, counsel for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said attorneys for the Association would not press for desegregation of the Charlottesville and Arlington schools during the current term.

"We will expect them to do something by next September," Mr. Hill said. He added that he did not believe substitution of the Pupil Placement Board for the local authorities in the cases materially changed the situation.

There was no indication today integration in the public schools whether Virginia would take another possible step by asking the Supreme Court to rehear the appeal petitions rejected yesterday.

In a statement today, Governor Thomas B. Stanley said "any ... of Virginia will destroy our system of public education."

State Denied Appeal From 2 Decisions

By LUTHER A. HUSTON
(Copyright 1957 by The New York Times Co.)

14d(1)

The court, in a brief order, refused to hear the state's appeal from lower court judgments ordering desegregation of schools in Charlottesville and Arlington County. The effect is to leave standing a decision of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals that district court orders for the admission of Negroes to hitherto all-white schools are valid.

The Supreme Court's ruling was unanimous. The order noted, however, that Justice Charles E. Whittaker, who took his seat today, did not participate.

INTEGRATION DATES ORDER

In the Charlottesville case, Judge John Paul ordered the schools integrated for the term beginning in September, 1956. Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington elementary schools integrated at the second semester of the 1956-57 term and high schools with the beginning of the 1957-58 session.

Both orders have been in abeyance, however, because of appeals to higher courts.

The situation with regard to enforcement of the orders remained to be clarified. Officials pointed out, however, that failure to obey might result in citation of school authorities for contempt.

N.C. WINS TEMPORARILY

Although Virginia lost, North Carolina won a temporary victory, at least, when the Supreme Court denied a hearing for Negro children who sought immediate admission to a white school in Old Fort, N.C. This left undisturbed a ruling of lower courts that the Negroes must exhaust administrative remedies provided by North Carolina's Pupil Enrollment Act before seeking relief in the federal courts.

The North Carolina act gives county and city school boards authority over pupil assignments and an appeal procedure through the state courts is possible.

The difference appeared to be that Charlottesville and Arlington officials, in the words of Chief Judge John J. Parker of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, had manifested an "attitude of intransigence" toward compliance with the Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954 outlawing segregation, while North Carolina had set up a statutory procedure for determining the rights of Negroes to attend nonsegregated schools.

14d(1) Va

NOT THE QUESTION

Judge Parker noted that the question of whether the North Carolina procedure had been constitutionally applied was not before his court because the administrative remedy it provides had not been invoked.

Although decided separately, the issues in the Charlottesville and Arlington cases were substantially the same. Judge Parker said that they were:

1. Whether the suits should have been dismissed as suits against the state.

P. 7

2. Whether the plaintiffs had failed to exhaust administrative remedies.

Jnls. 3-26-57

3. Whether there was abuse of discretion by the district courts in issuing the injunctive orders.

"PROTECTION OF RIGHTS"

Judge Parker held that they were not suits against the state but actions "for the protection of individual rights under the Constitution" by enjoining state officers and agencies from taking action beyond the scope of their legal powers.

Virginia argued that school boards in that state had been given corporate powers. Judge Parker said this was no reason why a school board should be exempt from restraint "from unconstitutional action."

"A state can act only through agents; and whether the agent be an individual officer of a corporate agency, it ceases to represent the state when it attempts to use state power in violation of the Constitution and may be enjoined from such unconstitutional action," Judge Parker declared.

WHAT NEGRO MUST DO

In the Arlington case, particularly, J. Lindsay Almond Jr., attorney general of Virginia, said that the right of a Negro to attend a white school exists, under the Supreme Court's decision. But, he said, the Negro child must show that he is fully qualified and desires to attend a particular school; must take these facts known to the school authorities and show that the school and his residence are so located geographically as to make his attendance practical.

There should be no finding of discrimination unless these factors are proved, Almond maintained. No such proof had been offered, he declared, and therefore the courts had "abused their discretion" in issuing orders restraining the school authorities from refusing admission to Negroes.

Judge Paul, in his decision, pointed out that the Supreme Court's ruling was more than two years old and the school authorities had admitted that they had taken no steps to comply with it.

Judge Parker held that the school authorities had not acted with the "deliberate speed" demanded by the Supreme Court and that Judge Paul and Bryan had not abused their discretion in issuing injunctions against the continuance of racial discrimination.

ton County, just across the Potomac River from Washington, is populated heavily by government workers and service personnel.

The court emphasized again its policy of giving lower courts wide discretion in bringing about desegregation "with all deliberate speed," as ordered in May 1955.

It did so by refusing to review orders of lower courts denying immediate admission of Negro children in Old Fort, N. C., to a white school.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, now a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Virginia, carried the Charlottesville and Arlington appeals to the Supreme Court.

In both cases the U. S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit (Maryland, Virginia, the Carolinas and West Virginia) affirmed orders of district judges directing the ending of segregation.

Desegregation Ordered.

Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington elementary schools desegregated as of last Jan. 31 and high schools by next September. Supreme Court Rejects Virginia Attempt to Delay Segregation

News + Observer Jnls. 3-26-57 Raleigh, N.C.

WASHINGTON, March 25 (AP)—The Supreme Court today dealt a blow to Virginia's policy of "massive resistance" to racial integration in its public schools.

With a minimum of words, the court rejected 8-0 Virginia's appeals from orders of lower federal courts enjoining enforcement of racial segregation in Charlottesville and Arlington County.

Treating the appeals as routinely as possible, the court grouped them with 23 others in its list of orders and merely said as to all of them: "The petitions for writs of certiorari in these cases are severally denied."

Charlottesville Seat.

Charlottesville, in the central part of the state, is the seat of the University of Virginia. Arlington County, just across the Potomac River from Washington, is populated heavily by government workers and service personnel.

The court emphasized again its policy of giving lower courts wide discretion in bringing about desegregation "with all deliberate speed," as ordered in May 1955.

It did so by refusing to review orders of lower courts denying immediate admission of Negro children in Old Fort, N. C., to a white school.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, now a candidate for the Democratic nomination for governor of Virginia, carried the Charlottesville and Arlington appeals to the Supreme Court.

In both cases the U. S. Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit (Maryland, Virginia, the Carolinas and West Virginia) affirmed orders of district judges directing the ending of segregation.

Desegregation Ordered.

Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington elementary schools desegregated as of last Jan. 31 and high schools by next September. Judge John Paul ordered Charlottesville schools desegregated as of last September. Both these orders have been held in abeyance pending the exhaustion of appeals procedures.

Virginia now has 25 days in which to petition the Supreme Court to reconsider its today's refusal to review the two cases. Ultimately they will have to go back to the district judges for them to set new deadlines.

The appellate court commented that "despite repeated demands upon them," the Charlottesville and Arlington boards of education had taken no steps towards removing the requirement of segregation in the schools. This, the court said, was not "deliberate speed" in complying with the law as laid down by the Supreme Court "but was clear manifestation of an attitude of intransigence."

The appellate court noted that a series of Virginia laws designed to stave off any integration had not become effective at the time the two cases were decided. The laws provide machinery for placing students in schools and the cutting off of state aid to any school which integrates.

Virginia's political leaders, headed by Democratic Sen. Harry F. Byrd, have laid down a policy which they call "massive resistance."

14d

In the Old Fort, N.C., case, counsel for Negro pupils appealed to the Supreme Court after the Court of Appeals for the 4th Circuit said parents of the children had not used all administrative remedies provided by the North Carolina Pupil Enrollment Act.

The appellate court said federal courts should not condone "dilatory tactics or evasion" on the part of state officials," but added it is for the state to prescribe the administrative procedures to be followed "so long as this does not violate constitutional requirements."

Officials in Arlington declined to comment on today's decision. L. Clark Keating, chairman of the Arlington County School Board, said the decision will be discussed with attorneys at a meeting next Thursday night.

Plans To Duck Decision Shown

Daily World Wed. 3-27-57 Atlanta Ga. P. 1

RICHMOND, Va. — (INS) — Officials indicated Tuesday there will be no change in Virginia's segregated public school system despite a U. S. Supreme Court move to begin integration.

PLACEMENT BOARD

He contends now any Negro children seeking admission must be referred to the state's pupil placement board, set up to prevent student transfers for the purpose of race-mixing. 14 d (1)

The Supreme Court Monday unanimously rejected the state's appeal of a lower court decision ordering desegregation of Arlington Elementary school by Jau. 31 and high schools by September. Charlottesville was directed to desegregate as of last September, but the orders have remained inactive pending the appeal.

WILL WAIT

Oliver W. Hill, Richmond Negro attorney, said neither the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People nor the children's parents would try to force segregation before the end of the current school year, but added:

"We wll expect something to be done by next September."

Hill said he expected the rulings to be complied with, and would give no indication of his course of action should segregation continue.

CONTEMPT OF COURT

Court oficials said failure to obey the desegration orders may result in a citation for contempt of court.

Almond said, however, that the state placement board act, which makes it illegal for Negroes to transfer to white schools, "is presumptively still valid, until and unless it is finally overturned by a court from which there is no appeal."

Firm High Court Stand Seen on Desegregation

Evening Star Tues. 3-26-57 Washington, D.C. P. 5-A

By ROBERT K. WALSH

Supreme Court refusal to interfere with school desegregation orders for Arlington County and Charlottesville, Va., indicated today the tribunal insists on a firm hand for Federal district courts in determining that communities show "deliberate speed."

The high court yesterday denied requests by Virginia officials to review orders by Federal Judges Albert Bryan and John Paul directing admission of Negro children to public schools in the two areas.

Those orders, held in abeyance pending Supreme Court action, had been affirmed by the United States Court of Appeals in Richmond. Judge Bryan in Alexandria originally ordered Arlington's elementary schools to be desegregated last January 31 and its high schools by next September. Judge Paul had ordered Charlottesville schools desegregated as of last September.

The high court as usual gave no reasons for denial of the review petitions. The terse refusal left in effect the orders of the two judges in those cases.

Court Responsibility

This was viewed in various quarters today as emphasizing the Supreme Court's 1955 pronouncement for the general method of putting into operation the May 17, 1954, decision against racial segregation in public schools everywhere.

The 1955 "implementation" decision directed compliance with "deliberate speed." It specifically vested Federal district courts with a major responsibility for determining whether individual areas move reasonably fast and with practical programs for integrating schools.

Lawyers said today the North Carolina case conceivably could return to the Supreme Court for a test of constitutionality of the pupil assignment law if the Negro parents lose again in the lower courts. The Supreme Court also seems likely to be asked to rule on cases from Newport News and Norfolk challenging validity of Virginia's somewhat similar pupil placement plan.

The action on the Arlington and Charlottesville cases, which had been appealed by the two school boards and by State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., came at a busy decision-day session marked also by the swearing in of Justice Charles Evans Whittaker. The new justice, appointed earlier this month to succeed Justice Stanley F. Reed, did not take part in any of the opinions or orders but he immediately joined his colleagues in hearing arguments on other cases.

Other Decisions

The Supreme Court's work yesterday included:

1. A 6-1 decision reversing the narcotics conviction of Albert Roviaro of Chicago because the lower court did not require the Justice Department to disclose the identity of an undercover agent. The opinion delivered by Justice Burton did not ban Government use of secret informants at all trials but it held that such secrecy must give way when disclosure of identify is "relevant and helpful to the defense." Justice Clark dissented.

2. Refused to review the income tax evasion conviction of Joseph D. Nunan, jr., former Internal Revenue Commissioner.

3. Agreed to review a decision that in the making of collective bargaining agreements an employer can demand a provision permitting strikes only by secret ballot votes by union and nonunion employes.

4. Ruled, 8-0, that Railway Labor Act allows Federal courts to enjoin strikes by railroad workers. Chief Justice Warren delivered the opinion which upheld an injunction notwithstanding a Norris-LaGuardia Act restriction.

5. Held, 6-2, in three separate opinions written by Chief Justice Warren concerning cases in Ohio, Utah and California, that States are greatly limited in handling labor controversies on which the National Labor Relations Board has jurisdiction but declines to exercise it. The high court held that states could act in such instances only if the NLRB specifically ceded its jurisdiction and if the states themselves have appropriate agencies and statutes. Justices Burton and Clark dissented mainly on the ground that the decision created an "extensive no-man's-land where no Federal or State agency or court is empowered to deal with labor controversies.

6. Ruled 6-2 in an opinion delivered by Justice Harlan, with dissents by Justices Black and Douglas, that the Attorney General properly exercised his discretion under the McCarran-Walter Act in refusing to suspend a deportation order against alien parents whose child was born in the United States.

In another possible indication of the authority and latitude provided for lower Federal court determinations in this field, the Supreme Court yesterday refused to review a decision against immediate admission of Negro children to a white school at Marion, N. C.

In that case the high court left standing a United States Court of Appeals finding in Richmond that parents of the children had not used all State administrative remedies, particularly the North Carolina pupil assignment act. The appeals court had upheld a ruling on that point by Federal Judge Wilson Warlick in North Carolina.

New Review Possible

Dalton Assails Byrd on School Segregation

Star P. 15-a Sun. 3-24-57 Washington, D.C.

RICHMOND, Mar. 23.—Republican State Senator Ted Dalton, possible gubernatorial candidate today attacked the anti-segregation program of the Virginia Democratic organization as "futile and unthinking."

"When they talk of resistance and the closing of public schools, they are not talking about resistance. They are talking about surrender," Senator Dalton told a meeting of the Republican State Central Committee.

His remarks were in answer to a speech last Monday in Richmond by Senator Byrd, Democrat of Virginia, whom Senator Dalton referred to as "the chief spokesman for the Democratic machine in Virginia."

Says Cue Has Been Given

Noting news reports that Senator Byrd said the Supreme Court may reverse its desegregation decision and, further, that Senator Byrd said most communities in the Commonwealth would choose to have no schools rather than integrated schools, Mr. Dalton declared:

"This is the pattern that the gubernatorial campaign of 1957 will take. The chief spokesman has spoken and has given the cue, and this refrain will be echoed day in and day out all through Virginia until November election day."

Senator Dalton said the time is past to be talking about what the Supreme Court may do.

"They have already done it to us, and what we need to be doing is to help work out an intelligent approach that will meet the situation in our schools by keeping the white schools as white as possible under law and order, but, by all means, to keep the public schools open."

Calls Action Futile

He accused the Democratic leaders of talking about resistance in one breath and then talking of closing public schools.

"If this is resistance, then it is futile, unthinking resistance," he declared.

"It is resistance which calls upon the school children of Virginia to bear the brunt of the battle when the schools are closed.

"It is a resistance that the Democrat leaders do not favor for the big children in the State university and colleges, but which they advocate for the little children of this State," he added.

Senator Dalton charged that Virginia is caught between "an unreasonable and unfair court decision and an inflexible Democrat machine that refuses to face reality and provide a workable defense. It is the cause of education that is likely to suffer."

He noted that Senator Byrd had praised legislation passed by the Virginia General Assembly that includes a measure to cut off State aid to localities which may be forced by court order to integrate.

Of Senator Byrd's contention that the localities would close schools rather than integrate, Senator Dalton said:

"The people of Virginia are going to have to face this argument for what it is, and I for one stand ready to speak my mind on the subject."

One subject on which Mr. Dalton did not commit himself however, was whether or not he will be a candidate for Governor. He polled nearly 45 per cent of the total State vote in running for the office four years ago.

G.O.P. leaders have urged him to seek the office again this year.

"While I have not definitely and positively removed my name from the list of those who may be considered," Senator Dalton said today, "yet permit me to say again that I feel strongly inclined against undertaking it."

VA. CITIES MUST MIX SCHOOLS BY AUG. 15:

For they have met their match'---judge

Afro American Sat. 2-23-57 P 2

Baltimore MD.

By RALPH MATTHEWS

NORFOLK, Va.—"The leaders of Virginia think that no Federal judge would have the nerve to jail local school boards for contempt of court if they fail to obey an order to integrate their schools by the date set, but they have met their match."

That was the grim warning of Judge Walter E. Hoffman to school autho[illegible] when he issued and opi[illegible] Tuesday, setting next Au[illegible]15 as the date when schools [illegible] the city must be placed on a non-segregated basis.

His action here followed the same position he had taken in Newport News, Va., on a similar petition the previous day.

THE PROCEEDINGS seemed almost superfluous as attorneys for both sides went through the motions of a hearing, making concessions for the sake of speed as the jurist had already indicated what his ruling would be at the outset of the trial when he said:

"This whole matter of integration has narrowed down to the simple issue of whether the state legislature of Virginia or the Supreme Court of the United States is to have the final say. As a Federal judge I have no choice in the matter, but to enforce the law of the land."

He expressed sympathy for the local school officials, whom he said he believed would have proceeded in good faith to work out an acceptable plan had not their hands been tied by a special session of the legislature which provided for the withdrawal of all state support from any schools operated on a non-segregated basis.

THE NORFOLK school stands to lose two million dollars in revenues, Superintendent Brubecker told the court and they would be unable to operate. He pleaded with the court to permit more time to work on an adult level to prepare the atmosphere for integration before attempting to mix the children.

"This case," snapped Judge Hoffman, "has nothing to do with adults. They are not going to school and besides what can you do with adults under existing state laws which prevent the mixing of races?"

Mr. Brubecker admitted that little could be done.

The minutes of the board of education were introduced to show that no action had been taken to give relief to the 232 colored parents who had petitioned to have their children assigned to schools nearest their homes, except to advise them that the board intended to operate the schools in accordance with existing state laws.

AN INTERESTING exchange followed the statement of Walter W. Brewter, clerk of the school board, who in reading the minutes said, "we received the petition from the NAACP on July 14, 1955, and—" he was cut off by Victor Nash, attorney, who insisted that he reread the petition to prove that in no way was the NAACP involved or associated with the petition.

Mr. Brewster admitted that only the names of individual parents were signed to the petition and the NAACP was not mentioned.

Another sharp exchange stemmed from the testimony of Police Lieutenant Racine who urged postponement of integration on the ground that it would increase violence and fights among the pupils.

"DO YOU MEAN," asked J. Hugo Madison, "that you do not have any fights among school children at present?"

"Oh yes," he replied, "but not of an interracial nature which is more serious."

"Isn't it true," asked the attorney, "that students are already mixed in the Parochial schools and do you have more fights there?"

The officer admitted they had had no trouble from this source. "Speaking as a police officer," he said, "I just feel that mixing the races means trouble."

Only three of the 232 petitioners testified. They were the Rev. William D. Westbrook, Mrs. Elizabeth T. Branch and Mrs. Anna Cheatham. Both sides conceded that all subsequent testimony would be practically identical.

DEFENSE ATTORNEYS urged the judge to postpone his ruling and give the school authorities time to work out a solution.

"How can you solve it," asked Judge Hoffman, "when everybody is afraid to speak out? Everybody who tries to champion the cause of integration is silenced and those on the other side are made into heroes.

"I would even listen to to a program that provided for the gradual integration of schools, but you come in court without the semblance of a plan except the defiance of the Supreme Court.

"So since you have no plan at all, I will set a date for you. If, in the meantime, you can present any program devised in good faith I will give it careful consideration."

The only comment of Chief Counsel Oliver W. Hill was, "We are on the right track but they just won't let us pull into the station."

FEDERAL COURT in Norfolk, Virginia, was the scene last week of another round in the state's colored citizens' long fight to desegregate the public schools. Among spectators there were Mrs. Willie Mae Bridges and Mrs. Mary Moore (right). ATTORNEYS who argued the case for the school children included, from left: J. Hugo Madison, James A. Overton of Portsmouth, Oliver W. Hill of Richmond and Victor J. Ashe of Norfolk. Judge Walter Hoffman set Aug. 15 as the date for compliance with the Supreme Court decision of 1954 by the Norfolk and Newport News board of education.

ONLY WITNESS — Accompanied by two parents, Mrs. Elizabeth Branch (center) was the only witness to testify, the court conceding that other testimony would be essentially the same. The parents are Mrs. Velma Kelly (left) and Mrs. Lillie M. Sawyer.

Arlington Parents Quizzed in Racial Suit

State Probers Are Making Only Slight Progress, Thomas Admits

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

Del. James M. Thomson of Alexandria said yesterday that his committee is investigating the parents who have filed three Virginia's five school desegregation suits, including those in the Arlington case.

The purpose, Thomson said, is to find out if the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People or its attorneys induced any parents to bring the suits.

Such inducement, Thomson said, would be a violation of Virginia law and the NAACP or its attorneys would be guilty of a misdemeanor.

But the Thomson Committee, one of two racial investigation committees established by the General Assembly in its anti-integration session last fall, apparently has been having its troubles with the Arlington parents.

Little Progress

Thomson said he understands the Committee investigator isn't getting very far.

"From what we have found out about the Arlington case so far," he said, "there was no violation. We didn't think there would be there, but we may find a different situation in the other two cases."

The Committee investigator has talked to about a half dozen of the 22 Arlington parents who brought the suit, upheld on Monday by the Supreme Court. Both white and Negro parents are involved. So far, the investigator has concentrated on the Negro parents.

Edward D. Strother, 2819 S. 18th st., Arlington, one of the Negro parents, recounted the recent visit of the Committee investigator.

"I filled his ears up," said Strother. "Some of the other parents burned him up."

Strother said he was asked about the details of his entrance into the suit, his contributions to the NAACP, whether he was asked to join the suit under pressure and about his contributions to lawyers.

Own School Days

Strother said he also was asked how he personally felt about mixing races in the schools.

"I told him I went to school No. 18 on Route 55 near The Plains in Fauquier County where all the grades were taught by one teacher, and I told him I had occasion to visit that school recently, 50 years later, and nothing has changed; they haven't nailed a new board to it yet," Strother said.

"I told him if I could have gone to a better school, I might have been a physician or lawyer instead of what I do." Strother shoes horses for a living.

Barbara S. Marx, 6897 N. Washington blvd., one of the white parents, said the investigator had not called upon her yet. When told by other parents of the investigation, she said, she told them they did not have to answer the questions unless subpenaed.

Thomson said no subpenas had been issued and would not be issued unless the Committee as a whole approves.

Told to Use Care

He said the investigator had been instructed carefully on how to proceed with the parents, that he was not to engage in any arguments nor infringe on any of their rights.

"He has reported the parents are surprisingly friendly," Thomson said.

Thomson declined to say which two other suits the Committee is investigating. Suits by parents in Norfolk, Newport News, Charlottesville and Prince Edward County are before the courts.

Meanwhile, the Boatwright Committee, also investigating racial activities in the State, is scheduled to meet in Richmond today to question officials and lawyers of the Virginia NAACP who have been subpenaed for the occasion.

'Hoffman ordered integration with intemperate speed'

Afro-Magazine Section
Baltimore, Md. p. 9

RICHMOND

"Courts cannot force 99 percent of the white people to do what they are convinced is wrong; therefore not marshals enough nor jails enough to accomplish that result."

So declared attorneys for two Virginia school boards —Norfolk and Newport News — in briefs filed with the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, charging that Judge Walter E. Hoffman ordered integration of schools with "intemperate speed."

The Circuit Court is scheduled to hear and consider the charges when it meets in Asheville, N.C., on June 11. The briefs, one from each of the school boards, were filed with the court here last week and will be heard together.

THEY CERTAINLY will file briefs in reply to those filed by the school board lawyers, according to NAACP attorneys, who have until May 29 to file their briefs.

Norfolk's Judge Hoffman, who has become anathema to Virginia officialdom, ruled last February that Norfolk must begin integration of its schools by September and Newport News by Aug. 15.

In their briefs, the school boards lawyers declared:

"THE SUPREME COURT directed that segregation be ended with deliberate speed; the district court (that is, Judge Hoffman), disregarding uncontradicted facts of record, decreed its end with intemperate speed."

They asked that the court set up a similar pattern for Newport News and Norfolk as was outlined for Prince Edward County, in which Judge Sterling Hutcheson declined to set a deadline for integration of the schools.

Nevertheless, Judge Hutcheson told the lawyers for the Prince Edward board that the Supreme Court's decision must be obeyed.

* * *

OTHER LEGAL questions which the boards' attorneys ask the Circuit Court to decide are:

1. Was Judge Hoffman justified in branding the state's pupil placement law "unconstitutional on its face" before its administrative machinery had been put into operation?

2. Was he justified in refusing to assemble a special three-judge Federal court to consider whether the pupil placement plan was constitutional?

Almond Sees Eternal Fight To Segregate

Herald P. 1-2
Thurs. 5-23-57
Washington D.C.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. of Virginia said yesterday the Old Dominion will always resist the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

"I don't see the time when Virginia will fail to resist," he said, "or even abate her determination to handle this matter as she conceives her rights to be under the Constitution."

Almond, Byrd machine-backed candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, had been asked to elaborate on a speech he made in Richmond on Tuesday night.

In a speech, he aimed another blow at the current favorite Southern target—integration in District of Columbia schools. This integration, he said, has created a "deplorable situation" and he pledged his efforts "to save our public school system from such a chaotic condition."

In elaborating yesterday, Almond cited the Davis subcommittee report as evidence for his remarks as well as investigations he and his staff had made.

The controversial findings of the subcommittee were the work of four pro-segregationist Southern Congressmen, headed by Rep. James C. Davis (D-Ga.). Although widely attacked as a biased report, it nevertheless is distributed generally throughout the South as "evidence" of the evils of desegregation.

Almond was asked if he could see the day when any desegregation would come to Virginia, and he replied: "I don't want to say." He had the same comment when asked if he, like Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, would prefer no schools to some desegregation. He did say:

"I recognize that morally and legally the State has no right to furnish a public service to one racial group which is inferior or superior to that furnished another racial group."

Dalton Calls Race Policy Huge 'Myth'

[illegible] Va., [illegible] Dalton of Radford, today called massive resistance to the Supreme Court's school desegregation decree ". . . nothing more than a massive myth that will collapse and leave us without any defenses.

"We are losing valuable time, intensifying emotions that make a sensible defense more difficult to achieve," the Republican National Committee said. He is a possible GOP gubernatorial candidate.

Dalton's statements were contained in answers to six questions submitted by Thomas M. Martin [illegible] editor of The Cavalier Daily, undergraduate newspaper of the University of Virginia.

Martin's paper carried Dalton's replies in a news story today. The college editor said he also had sent the same questions to Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., organization—backed candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination.

Almond, Martin said, declined to participate, saying that he preferred to wait until after the Democratic primary and after the GOP had picked a candidate.

Dalton prefaced his answers with the statement: "At your request, I am submitting these answers, with the caution, however, that, in all likelihood, I will not be the Republican candidate for governor."

The questions ranged from Federal aid to schools and the poll tax—Dalton doesn't like either, he said—to plans for averting school integration.

The Radford Republican said he opposes Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's plan which, he said, "would bring integration quicker than anything yet devised. It plays into the hands of the NAACP. North Carolina, with a workable pupil assignment plan, is still fighting in the state courts, while Virginia is reaching the end of the road in the cases in Federal courts."

Delay Sought In Order on Desegregation

Evening Star
Tues. 1-15-57
Washington D.C.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals has been asked to postpone enforcement of desegregation decrees against Arlington County and Charlottesville, pending an appeal to the United States Supreme Court.

Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., said a request has been mailed to the appeals court, now sitting at Charlotte, N. C., asking the deferment.

P. 3

The appeals court last month upheld desegregation decrees in the Arlington and Charlottesville cases. Those decrees would become effective January 31 when the appeals decision formally is entered, unless the State's request for a deferment is granted.

If the appellate court grants the motion mailed today, State and local lawyers must then file notice of appeal pending preparation of requests for appeal to the Supreme Court.

Judge John Paul had ordered Charlottesville's schools desegregated as of last September, but the order was postponed to permit appeal to the 4th circuit. Judge Albert Bryan ordered Arlington's elementary schools desegregated January 31 and high schools next September. Both rulings were upheld by the appeals court.

Pupil Placement Challenged by Mrs. DeFebio

Test of School Law Sought in Virginia Court of Appeals

By MARY LOU WERNER

Validity of Virginia's new pupil placement law was challenged today in litigation brought by Mrs. Theo T. DeFebio to get her sons back in Fairfax County schools.

Her attorneys, C. Douglas Adams, jr., and Albert I. Kassabin, served notice on local and State school authorities that on June 10th they will ask the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals to hear a motion asking readmission of the two suspended boys.

Copies of the motion were mailed to the high court, and also to Fairfax Sheriff John Taylor for service on all local defendants in the action.

Dropped Last Month

Nicky DeFebio, 9, and his 14-year-old brother Teddy were dropped from county schools last month because Mrs. DeFebio refused to sign placement applications for them. She said she declined because she considered the application part of a scheme to foil the Supreme Court desegregation decision, and did not want to be party to such a program.

The boys were dismissed under a regulation issued by the State Pupil Placement Board in March, that no new students may remain in school unless placement applications are filled out within 15 days after they are sent home.

Motion Cites Reasons

The motion that the State Supreme Court will be asked to hear gives the following principal reasons why Mrs. DeFebio claims the suspension of her sons was "arbitrary, capricious, unlawful and void . . .":

1. It deprives her sons of their right to attend public schools "as guaranteed by law."

2. It forces the two boys to violate the Virginia compulsory school attendance law.

3. The Virginia constitution grants general authority for supervision of schools solely in the State board of education and local supervision to the local school board—"and not in the pupil placement board, or any other State agency."

4. The pupil placement act violates the 14th Amendment of the Constitution because "it deprives plaintiffs of liberty and property without due process of law and equal protection of law."

Mr. Kassabian said the action does not ask that Virginia schools be integrated, but only that school authorities be directed to readmit the De Febio boys to county schools.

Defendants Named

Named defendants are the county school board, County School Supt. W. T. Woodson; Melvin Landes, who is principal of Mount Vernon High School, where Teddy was a student; Elsie Fletcher, principal of the Hollin Hall Elementary School, where Nicky was a student; the State Board of Education and the State School Supt. Davis Y. Paschall.

The three-member placement board is not named as a defendant.

The placement board was set up under legislation adopted by the Virginia General Assembly last fall to preserve segregated schools. All assignments of students entering the State school system for the first time, or of students moving from one school to another, are supposed to be made by the placement board. There is no mention of race in legislation creating the placement board, but other legislation adopted at the same time allows the Governor to close any schools or classes where integration occurs. If the schools re-open with races mixed, State school funds automatically will be withheld from the elementary or secondary schools of the locality, whichever is involved.

Federal Judge Walter Hoffman has ruled the placement act unconstitutional in the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation suits, but his opinion is being appealed. In the meantime, the placement board has continued to operate.

U.S. Court Told Va. Robs School Pupils

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

p. 17

ASHEVILLE, N.C. — "With the passing of each school session, the rights of thousands of colored school children are lost forever."

That is what NAACP attorneys said last week in briefs filed with the U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals here in asking that Judge Walter E. Hoffman's ruling that Virginia's pupil placement law is "unconstitutional on its face."

Asking the court to act promptly on the issue, the attorneys for the plaintiffs in the Norfolk and Newport News school cases told the court that Federal courts in Virginia are being subjected to a "siren song" of interminable delay in effecting integrated schools.

* * *

LAWYERS FOR the two school boards had argued in briefs filed earlier that Judge Hoffman abused his discretion in ordering integration in schools of the two cities not later than the beginning of the next term.

Reply briefs filed by the NAACP lawyers declared:

"The commonwealth, through its attorney general, has been an active participant in all litigation relating to segregation in the public schools of Virginia and, with varying phraseology, the argument advanced on behalf of defendant schools officials to the respective courts has been:

"Deny the complaining colored children the relief to which they are entitled and wait for the Gray Commission to report, or wait for the special session of the General Assembly of 1955, or

"WAIT FOR the plebiscite on a constitutional convention, or wait for the regular session of the Legislature in 1956, or wait for the extra session of the General Assembly in 1956.

"And now they say wait for the regular session of (the General Asembly) 1958 and, if, asking as, any court will listen to this siren song, the chant will continue until doomsday.

"In the meantime, with the passing of each school session, the rights of thousands of colored school children are lost forever."

Oral arguments on the issue will be heard from both sides here next Tuesday (June 11). At issue are two points:

* * *

JUDGE HOFFMAN'S declaration that the placement act is unconstitutional and his order requiring superintendents and school board members in Norfolk and Newport News to begin assigning children without regard to race.

Since the placement act, in effect, deprives local school officials of power to assign any child to a school, these officers told Judge Hoffman they would be powerless to comply with his integration orders.

That excuse offered by the local school officials was swept away, however, when Judge Hoffman offered them the full protection of the Federal courts if they decided to comply with the law.

IN ADDITION, attorneys for the boards argued in their briefs on appeal that Judge Hoffman ignored "all warnings of intensified racial strife" and disorder that would follow "any sudden move to mix the races" in the public schools there.

Most of the argument in the appeal briefs filed by both sides, however, deal with the constitutional question.

Lawyers for the plaintiffs argue that the pupil placement act was part and parcel of a cohesive package of bills, all designed for the purpose of staving off school integration indefinitely.

* * *

THEY SUGGEST that the court, in acting on the Norfolk and Newport News cases, follow the course it set recently in upholding the earlier integration orders against the Charlottesville and Arlington school officials.

In those cases the same appeals court ruled that:

The "intransigence" of local school officials in refusing to take any steps toward integration made it proper for the trial judges to order "prompt compliance with the constitutional requirements as interpreted by the Supreme Court."

Counsel for the school boards argue in their briefs that Judge Hoffman, during trial of the case in District Court, tried to read into the placement implications from other legislation passed at the same time but not under challenge at all.

School Pupils End 15-Month Boycott

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

SCHOOL PUPILS—48 pt

SURRY, Va. (ANP) — A school boycott of more than a year ended in Surry County last week as the class of 26 third grade colored pupils returned to school.

The pupils quit classes in February 1956 in protest attending class in a one-room cinder block annex heated by a potbellied stove.

Surry is one of the counties in Virginia where colored parents brought suit against school board for equal facilties with whites under the old "separate but equal" formula which has been discarded as meaningless.

FOR MORE than 50 years white officials in Virginia and other southern states have seen to it that the schools for the two races were separate but not equal.

Actually, the two basic reasons for segregation in the public schools as in other areas of life were to stigmatize the colored as inferior and to assign to him an inferior place in society with inferior accommodations and less or no rights.

The school board of Surry built the annex to Lebanon Elementary School and it had to be used because the five-room Labanon School was dangerously overcrowded.

OPPONENTS OF the annex were afraid the use of the one-room school might begin general use of one-room schools in the county.

Only 13 of the original pupils returned to the one room structure. The rest were divided among other schools in Surry and Sussex Counties.

School officials expect to have with the next school term, no child will be admitted to any state public school until requirements of the pupil placement act have been met.

The act is Virginia's answer to the U.S. Supreme Court segregation decision.

For the present term, however, the board told local school authorities the 15 days allowed for the completion of placement applications could be extended "for a brief additional time in order to secure compliance with the law" where circumstances justified.

This seemed to indicate that 300 Richmond children whose parents have not returned placement applications probably would be allowed to complete the school term, which ends June 12.

FIND OUT WHY

In its meeting here yesterday, the board directed Richmond school authorities to find out why the 300 applications have not been returned. H. I. Willett, superintendent of Richmond Public schools, said he did not know at present how many of the cases involved willful refusal nor did he know whether this could be determined by the end of the year.

The board also said it had received a flat refusal from the parents of a Norfolk student to sign the application.

Norfolk school authorities said the parents of three Negro children have declined to sign the forms.

Not Near Enforcement

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., June 22 (AP)—Two southern governors said today the South is hardening, rather than slackening, its resistance to racial integration in the schools.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley of Virginia and Gov. George B. Timmerman Jr. of South Carolina, early arrivals for the 49th annual National Governors Conference, said in separate interviews the Supreme Court's school integration opinion is nowhere near enforcement in their states.

Host Governor.

Stanley, host governor for the conference in hitsoric Williamsburg, said he does not believe the controversial question of racial segregation will be injected into the governors' discussion tomorow of educational problems.

But he made it plain he feels any avoidance of the subject cannot be interpreted as a trend toward Dixie acceptance of integration.

"In my judgement," he said, "the people of the South are more determined than they ever were to preserve thir way of life and their socal customs. They are not willing to accept racial integration in the schools."

Timmerman said in his opinion, "South Carolina will never be integrated in a thousand years."

"There is no demand for integration in my state among either the Negroes or the whites," he said. "The opposition to it is just as strong as it ever has been. With us, segregation is ont a matter of politics."

Major Address.

President Eisenhower will make a major address at a formal state dinner Monday night. The subject of the talk has not been announced, but presumably it will deal with budgetary or domestic matters.

Before the conference will be a proposal for year-round use of school classrooms to alleviate the shortage of facilities for pupils.

Hodges Arrive.

Governor and Mrs. Hodges of North Carolina arrived with their party shortly after 5 p.m. They flew into Langley Field, Va., and came the rest of the way by car.

With the North Carlina governor were his secretary, Ed Rankin; Revenue Commissioner and Mrs. Eugene Shaw; and two newsmen, Charles Clay of The News and Observer and Jay Jenkins of The Charlotte Observer.

Mrs. DeFebio Plans Challenge of Placement Board As She Refuses to Sign Forms 'Under Protest'

Thurs. 5-1-57

By Robert L. Baker
Staff Reporter

Theo DeFebio decided yesterday not to sign Virginia pupil placement applications for her two sons, "under protest" as suggested by the State.

Instead, she told her lawyers to challenge the validity of the Virginia Pupil Placement Board as soon as possible.

Her decision left state and local officials saddled with an unsolved conflict between two state laws: The Board's regulation calling for expulsion of pupils whose parents refuse to sign applications, and the State's law providing for compulsory school attendance.

A survey of officials both at state and local levels indicated that they plan no further action on the touchy problem. Mrs. DeFebio will have to carry the ball.

Children Dismissed

Her children, Nicky, 9, and Teddy, 14, were dropped from Fairfax County schools last month after she refused to sign an application for their assignment to segregated white schools. She said the application was a device to defy the Supreme Court's school decision.

The application is required by the Pupil Placement Board, set up by the General Assembly last September as part of Virginia's anti-integration program.

Fairfax school officials called the DeFebio case to the attention of the Pupil Placement Board which suggested on Tuesday that she sign the applications "under protest" so her sons could continue their schooling.

After a conference with her attorneys yesterday, Mrs. DeFebio said she would not sign because "no letter of protest can encompass the breadth and depth of my conscience." Mrs. DeFebio previously said she believes in "integration 100 per cent."

Private Teaching Planned

She said she would arrange to have the boys complete their school year through private teaching. Mrs. DeFebio, a District taxi driver, mentioned a "deep concern" that the boys might be placed in the hands of the Department of Welfare.

State and local officials denied any threat had been made to take custody of the boys. Violation of the state's compulsory attendance law sometimes is used as a basis for an investigation into possible child neglect by parents, they said, but such was not the case in the DeFebio problem.

Officials appear anxious to avoid any further action in the case. The Fairfax Commonwealth's Attorney, the State Attorney General's office, Fairfax school officials and the Pupil Placement Board all said they plan no further action now.

But Mrs. DeFabio plans action. She told her attorneys, Albert I. Kassabian and C. Douglas Adams Jr., both of Annandale, to "seek redress in the courts at the earliest possible moment."

State Asks Dismissal Of NAACP's Challenge

RICHMOND, May 1 (AP)—The State has asked that two suits filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) attacking the constitutionality of state laws be dismissed.

Attorneys for the Commonwealth contended yesterday in answers to the suits filed here that the so-called "NAACP laws" passed by the special session of the General Assembly last fall are constitutional and that the NAACP has no cause to attack their validity.

They added that NAACP allegations that the special legislative session was bent on destroying the NAACP by passing the laws "are extraneous, irrelevant and immaterial to the proper consideration and decision of the question of the constitutionality of the enactment challenged in the complaint and should be stricken therefrom."

Action of the General Assembly in passing the legislation was defended as being "for protection of the educational system of the Commonwealth and all of its people."

A special three-judge Federal court will hear arguments on the validitw of the laws in Federal District Court here June 26. It will then decide whether it has jurisdiction over the issue and whether it should exercise this power.

The State contends the Federal court has no jurisdiction over the two suits because the money issue does not exceed $3000. Federal courts limit their jurisdiction to cases involving this sum or more.

NAACP lawyers, in two complaints, contend state officials have been seeking ways and means to avoid implementation of the United States Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, outlawing racial segregation in public schools.

Dalton Blasts Democrats On Virginia Pupil Plan

Star Aug. 2-5-57 P.21-D
Washington D.C.

By MARY LOU WERNER

The "broken promise" charge that Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., hurled at the Republican Party was heaved right back at him last night by G. O. P. State Senator Ted Dalton.

The Radford Republican told a G. O. P. dinner meeting at Marion, that Mr. Almond's own Democratic Party "is guilty of the biggest breach of faith this State has ever seen."

Instead of a protective pupil assignment plan originally promised after the Supreme Court outlawed school segregation, Senator Dalton said the people got "a program called massive resistance, in reality a massive retreat that leaves the localities helpless."

He recalled how the State's Democratic leadership threw its weight behind the so-called Gray plan for meeting the Supreme Court desegregation decision, got the voters to change the State constitution accordingly, then scrapped the program for a sterner line of resistance.

Byrd's Backing

Mr. Almond is seeking the Democratic nomination for Governor, and is virtually sure to get it with Virginia's Byrd organization hard at work in his behalf. He is opposed by Howard H. Carwile, Richmond attorney. The attorney general pinned the "broken promise" label on the Republican party in a speech last week at Richmond, Va.

Senator Dalton is the Republican party's favorite choice for Governor because he captured over 45 per cent of the vote when he ran against Gov. Stanley four years ago. He repeatedly has insisted he does not want to run this time, and last night said "I want to emphasize again that in all likelihood I will not be the Republican candidate for Governor."

But whether he runs or not, Senator Dalton let it be known he is not about to let charges against his party go unanswered.

Cites Speeches

"A little more than a year ago, in speech after speech, Virginians were assured by Democratic leaders that by voting for constitutional change, permitting tuition grants for private scholarships, the people would also get a workable pupil assignment plan to be administered by the localities," said Senator Dalton. He continued:

"Time and again from one end of the State to the other, Democrat leaders offered the two-parts package of tuition grants and pupil assignments as outlined by the Gray Commission. Gov. Stanley said he concurred wholeheartedly in the commission's recommendations, and they established a State referendum information center which also advocated the two-parts program."

"With such assurances of locally-controlled pupil assignments, the Virginia people approved calling the constitutional convention on tuition grants," said Senator Dalton. "But when the time came to adopt the second half of the package (pupil assignment) the Democratic leadership junked the pupil assignment plan and clamped on the localities a provision to cut off State aid, thereby threatening to cripple or close any public school forced to admit a colored child."

Placement Board

The legislative program finally adopted by Virginia last fall to cope with segregation created a three-member State Placement Board to assign students to schools for reasons other than race. If by any chance integration does occur, the affected schools automatically close temporarily and lose all State funds if they reopen with white and Negro students.

Senator Dalton, who with State Senator Armistead Boothe of Alexandria sponsored unsuccessful legislation for a pupil assignment program to be administered by local school boards, pointed out that such a plan has been adopted by North Carolina and has survived a test all the way to the Supreme Court. Virginia's assignment plan, on the other hand, has been held unconstitutional by Judge Walter Hoffman. It is still being used while Judge Hoffman's opinion is appealed.

Senator Dalton reminded that he wanted the tuition grant program accompanied by a pledge that the free public schools would be maintained.

"Some of my colleagues in the State Senate declared that such a pledge was unnecessary," he said. "The people now know better."

Virginia Acts On Evasion of School Law

Richmond Ordered To Check on Parents Ignoring Applications

Washington D.C.

RICHMOND, May 21 (Special)—Virginia's Pupil Placement Board directed Richmond school officials today to determine whether the parents of 300 children here intentionally failed to sign required application forms.

If the failure to sign the forms was intentional, stated the Board, then local officials must expel the children from school.

If the failure was due to misunderstanding or parental neglect, the Board went on, then local officials should give what help they can to bring about compliance. Continued failure to comply must be considered willful refusal, the Board said, and the children involved must be expelled.

Thus the Board, in effect, tossed the knotty problem back to local authorities. The decision came after a lengthy closed door meeting attended by Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr.

The Board again skirted a big issue: How can the state on one hand, through the Board's regulations, legally expel pupils from school with another law on the books compelling attendance?

The Board was set up by the General Assembly as part of Virginia's "massave resistance" program to the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. It divested local school officials of their pupil assignment powers.

Although the Board's pupil assignment applications do not mention race, it is obligated under an act of the Assembly to assign pupils in such a way that the state's traditional segregated schools will be maintained.

The Last Ditch

Post + Times Herald

Washington D.C. 5-22-57

Governor Stanley's clear implication that the public schools in Arlington and Charlottesville may be closed if they are desegregated in response to Federal court order is ominous but scarcely new. The Sstanley plan as approved by the General Assembly empowers the Governor to close a school if a single Negro is admitted, and provides that state funds may be withdrawn and prilvate tuition grants established. But these portions of the Stanley plan have not yet been tested. The Federal courts have been knocking down like dominoes the various mechanisms contrived to evade the Supreme Court decision. It is inconceivable that the courts would sanction the punitive devices by which Governor Stanley is attempting to frustrate court orders.

In effect the Governor is forcing an impossible two-master predicament upon school officials; he is insisting that they choose the bigotry of the Stanley plan over the laws of the United States. Before a serious attempt were made to close the schools, very probably a Federal court injunction could be expected. Inasmuch as the Stanley plan vests much authority in the Governor personally, Mr. Stanley himself might well be held responsible. What a Federal court would do if a Governor were directly to defy an injunction is a nice question; but the very possibility of such a clash illustrates the absurd dead end to which Mr. Stanley has brought Virginia.

The Governor has been plucking the single string on his political zither for all he is worth, but there is reason to think that he has overdone it and that the good sense of Virginians has already brought a reaction against Mr. Stanley's extremism. All he has succeeded in doing, by impeding desegregation where it could be accomplished easily, is to make vastly more difficult a transition which Virginians know in their hearts must come. The damage cannot be easily undone, but at least there will be a merciful release when Mr. Stanley's term expires in another 8½ months.

Court of Appeals Delays Decision on Virginia Schools

Sunday Star Washington D.C. June 16 1957 P. 32-A

ASHEVILLE, N. C., June 15 (AP).—The U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals yesterday took "under advisement" a request that it give a Virginia court first chance to rule on Virginia's school segregation laws.

T. Justin Moore, sr., Richmond attorney, asked the court to "stay any further ruling" in the Norfolk and Newport News, Va., school cases, which were argued before the three-judge tribunal here Tuesday.

Mr. Moore's requestion was based on a hearing set for September by the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals, which will hear a Fairfax, Va., school case. Senior Judge John J. Parker told Mr. Moore, "We will take (your request) under advisement."

During arguments on the Virginia cases Tuesday, Virginia Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., declared, "I see no escape from the proposition that the (Virginia Supreme) Court would be called upon in that hearing to pass on the constitutionality of these school laws."

The laws in question provide for pupil placement and the cut-off of State funds to any integrated Virginia public school.

Judge Parker remarked Tuesday that "there isn't any doubt that the Supreme Court has held we ought not to hold State statutes unconstitutional until the State courts interpret the statutes."

The Virginia Ruling And Alabama's Placement Law

Advertiser 10-24-57 Montgomery, Ala.

IT WOULD be foolish to assume other than that the Supreme Court's decision on Virginia's Placement Act is a dark cloud over Alabama's law.

True, there are differences, perhaps even substantial differences, but as we have said before the Supreme Court has not shown an inclination recently to be impressed with legal niceties. Senator Boutwell of Birmingham has insisted that Alabama's law is "entirely consistent with the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court rendered in May of 1954." With all respect to the senator, who has given much time and legal talent to Alabama's law, that would indeed be a remarkable achievement.

The Supreme Court said separate cannot be equal, that state enforcement of segregation is unconstitutional. Since then the court has shown how far it will go to enforce this philosophy. In the Girard College case the right of a privately endowed school to accept only "poor white male orphans," as provided in an ancient will establishing the school, was denied by the Supreme Court on the grounds that the trustee of the college was the Board of City Trusts of Philadelphia. Since the board was created by an 1869 act of the legislature, the board is an agency of the state, the court reasoned. And a state may not discriminate against individuals on the basis of race, color or religion.

THIS attenuated reasoning indicates how far the Supreme Court will go to find "state action" in segregation matters. The Alabama Placement Act was advanced as a way of preserving segregation without actually saying so. It differs from the Virginia law in some respects. For instance: The Virginia law vested assignment powers in a special placement board; the Alabama law leaves the powers to local boards of education. A companion law passed by Virginia would cut off automatically funds to integrated schools; Alabama wisely refrained from such an obviously vulnerable declaration of intent, but we do have laws permitting the abolition of schools to avoid forced integration.

The district court decision, which the Supreme Court affirmed by refusing to review, looked at the companion law withdrawing funds and found a "fixed and definite policy of the school authorities to maintain segregation."

Although Alabama did not pass such a companion act, there is abundant evidence in other laws, resolutions, and the declared opposition of legislators and elected officials to document a "fixed and definite policy of the school authorities."

THE Alabama Placement Act is cleverly written, but as we have noted before, the Supreme Court has not shown any inclination to read Southern laws bearing on the race question. They are batted back like pingpong balls. Even as delay measures, they aren't as effective as formerly because of the accelerated processing of segregation suits.

The Advertiser hopes Boutwell is correct in his prediction that Alabama's law will withstand a court test despite the invalidation of the Virginia statute. But it would seem prudent to avoid such a test as long as possible. The court might, in its present extra-legal mood, simply say: Alabama has total segregation in the public schools and the Placement Law is responsible. Therefore it's unconstitutional.

Virginians To Continue School Plan

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. 10-24-57

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 23 (AP)—Atty. Gen. Kenneth C. Patty indicated today Virginia's Pupil Placement Board will continue to assign children to public schools in the face of adverse federal court decisions.

"I do not consider that the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals held that the Pupil Placement Act was inoperative in all instances," said Patty in his first comment on the matter since the U.S. Supreme Court declined Monday to review the lower court finding.

Thus Patty gave support to the view held by some state officials that the 4th Circuit Court hadn't specifically held the act to be unconstitutional. The court in a July 13 opinion upheld the findings of District Trial Judge Walter E. Hoffman in the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation cases. Hoffman, in his opinion, said the Placement Act was unconstitutional on its face.

Patty and an assistant attorney general, Robert D. McIlwaine III, expressed the view that the 4th Circuit Court had invalidated the Placement Act—but only in the specific cases where it was held that the act did not provide an effective state remedy for pupils who felt their constitutional rights were being abridged.

Their view was the act by itself was not declared a nullity but was held invalid when considered in connection with two other laws in the anti-integration package of legislation passed by the State Legislature in special session last year.

Newsmen seeking clarification from the Circuit Court on shades of meaning in its opinion and whether affirmation of Judge Hoffman's ruling meant the court agreed the act was unconstitutional were told by Senior Judge John J. Parker that the decision "must speak for itself." He said he could not comment on the questions raised nor seek to interpret the opinion and added:

"It seems clear to me and I don't see where any clarification is necessary."

It was noted that the state, in its unsuccessful petition for a review to the Supreme Court, based the petitition on four points—three of them dealing with the constitutional question.

Supreme Court Refuses Placement Act Review

Virginians To Continue School Fight

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.
Tues. 10-22-57

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 21 (AP) — Which way now?

That was the question facing Virginia's Democratic administration today with the Pupil Placement Act, a vital prop in its program of massive resistance to school integration, demolished by the U.S. Supreme Court.

If Gov. Thomas B. Stanley or any of his advisors knew the answer, they gave no hint what it was. But it was certain the governor will search urgently for alternative methods to prevent race-mixing in the public schools.

Within an hour after the high court dealt the death blow to the placement law, the Republican candidate for governor in the Nov. 5 election, Ted Dalton, called on Stanley to summon a special session of the Legislature at which a new program for averting integration could be formulated.

EMERGENCY ACTION

"This is an emergency situation which calls for emergency action," said Dalton, a state senator and apostle of a locally administered pupil assignment plan similar to the one now on the statute books in North Carolina.

What tack the state government will take now may be apparent within a few days, when Stanley, Atty. Gen. Kennety Patty and special counsel in the state's battle against integration hold a promised conference here.

Stanley called the action "not unexpected." He said statutes not affected by the decision provide an orderly course of action "in the face of these continuing attempts to force integration, and there is no cause for school patrons, faculties or pupils to be apprehensive."

"The Pupil Placement Act," he noted, "is only one phase of the program enacted by the General Assembly for the preservation of our system of public education, in accordance with the will of the vast majority of the people and with our constitutional rights.

"We shall continue to use every legal and proper means to carry out the mandate of the General Assembly."

Patty, who has been attorney general only since August, said he was "unable to say the effect on the over-all segregation picture in the state."

J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Democratic candidate for governor opposing Dalton, said his position favoring "massive resistance"—a term coined by Sen. Byrd (D-Va) to describe Virginia's full-scale effort to avoid integration — had "not been changed one iota" by the death of the placement law.

Byrd, head of the dominent, conservative state Democratic organization, declined comment. The senator is regarded as the principal architect of the Virginia anti-integration program, which would cut off state funds from localities where schools are integrated to any degree whatsoever.

The Pupil Placement Act, a necessary part of this program, vested in a three-member state board the power to assign pupils to all public schools in Virginia on any basis except race.

But J. Lindsay Almond Jr., Democratic opponent to Dalton and a former state attorney general who led Virginia's legal battle against school integration, said his support of massive resistance is not changed. He said: "After Little Rock, I'm not surprised at anything."

Almond, however, would not speculate on what the state's next step should be.

Judge Hoffman, in holding the Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional, said it provided no adequate remedy for Negroes seeking admission to white schools because of what he described as "the fixed and definite policy of school authorities with respect to segregation."

Hoffman noted that the same session of the Virginia General Assembly which passed that law also passed laws calling for the closing of schools and the withdrawal of state funds from any school departing from the policy of no integration.

SIGNED INJUNCTIVE

Hoffman signed injunctive decrees forbidding racial discrimination in the public schools in Norfolk and Newport News.

Similar injunctions have been issued by U. S. Dist. Judge Albert V. Bryan for Arlington and Judge John Paul for Charlottesville. Effectiveness of these decrees was stayed pending Supreme Court action in the Norfolk and Newport News cases.

The Virginia attorney general's office joined Norfolk and Newport News school authorities in asking the Supreme Court to review the cases. The Supreme Court denied this request in a brief order without comment.

The appeal said the action of the lower federal courts "makes even more difficult of solution the most difficult social problem presented to the people of this country in eight decades."

HAD OPPORTUNITY

Contending Judge Hoffman acted "with undue impetuosity," the appeal said the cases gave the Supreme Court an opportunity "to lead a large section of our country out of the chaos into which the Brown decision has plunged it." This was a reference to the Supreme Court's decision that compulsory school segregation is unconstitutional.

The appeal also contended that the Court of Appeals should not have acted in the Norfolk and Newport News cases while another case testing constitutionality of the Pupil Placement Act was pending in the Virginia Court of Appeals.

The pending case involved the suspension of two white boys from Fairfax County schools. Their mother, Mrs. Theo T. de Febio, refused to sign application forms required by the law. This resulted in the suspension of her sons, Theo, 14, and Nicky, 7.

ASKS STAY

David H. Scull of Annandale, Va., asked Chief Justice Warren to stay an order of Arlington County Circuit Court directing him to appear Wednesday before a legislative investigating committee.

The legislative group, known as the Thomson Committee, has asked Scull to appear to answer questions about his racial activities. Scull is vice president of the Fairfax County Council on Human Relations.

Ruling Hits Segregation Severe Blow

Advertiser

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21 (AP)—The Supreme Court today dealt a severe blow to Virginia's declared policy of massive resistance to any racial integration in its public schools.

It did so by refusing to review a decision holding unconstitutional the state's 1956 Pupil Placement Act, cornestone of the massive resistance framework.

The high court thereby let stand the decision of U.S. Dist. Judge Hoffman's ruling as affirmed by the U.S., the Circuit Cout of Appeals.

The Pupil Placement Act removed from local school boards and division superintendents all power to assign pupils, and placed it in the hands of a state board.

DECLINE COMMENT

The Supreme Court's action threw Virginia officials into a state of uncertainty about their next action. Gov. Thomas B. Stanley and other ranking state officials declined comment.

The state's attorney general, Kenneth Patty, said he plans to confer within the next few days with Stanley and with attorneys in the case.

As to what will happen next, he said: "I just don't know and am unable to say the effect on the over-all segregation picture in the state."

NOT CHANGED

State Sen. Ted Dalton, Republican candidate for governor in the Nov. 5 election, called for a special session of the Virginia General Assembly to repeal the state's program of massive resistance. He has advocated a locally administered pupil assignment plan as the means of averting public school integration.

State Court's Ruling Means:

Va. Pupils Don't Have To Attend Inferior Schools

Journal & Guide Norfolk, Va. Sat. 1-26-57 p. 1

Special to Journal and Guide

RICHMOND, Va.— Virginia's colored parents don't have to send their children to inferior schools.

That—in essence— is what the State Supreme Court ruled this week in a case in which a Circuit court had sought to have Prince William county colored parents punished for not sending their school-aged children to a school in no wise equal to others in the county.

The 7-man court in this manner overturned a decision which convicted the parents of violating the compulsory attendance law.

THE HIGH COURT said it has long been established that refusal to provide equal educational opportunities and advantages to members of one race constitutes a violation of the U. S. Constitution.

The case started in 1952 when the Beverly Allen School for Negroes at West Point was closed and pupils transferred to the Hamilton Holmes High School 18 miles away in King William County.

Parents of some of the pupils protested the arrangement and refused to send their children to Holmes. They asked for admission to the West Point white school, but were denied.

When the parents kept their children out of school, authorities brought suit in the Circuit Court and the parents were convicted of disregarding the compulsory attendance law.

IN over-ruling the lower court, the Supreme Court said the requirement that the children be sent to a school of "materially poorer facilities and educational advantages on penalty of prosecution" was an unlawful application of the attendance law and a denial of the constitutional guarantee for equal protection of the law. The opinion added::

"It has long been a settled law that the refusal of a state agency to afford members of one race solely because of their race educational facilities and advantages subtantially equal protection of the law, being violative of the 14th Amendment.

THE COURT REAFFIRMED the constitutionality of the school attendance law, but said:

"Here, however the section has been unconstitutionally applied. Application of a criminal statute so that it brings about or results in inequality of treatment to the two races is not justified."

The high court had had the case under consideration for more than a year.

Thurgood Marshall of New York and Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, NAACP attorneys, attacked the pupil placement law and related legislation as a "deliberate effort" to preserve the State's traditional segregated school system.

Virginia Holds Fast on Views

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Mon. 1-28-57 p. 14-A

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

RICHMOND, Jan. 27—Virginia newspaper officials have noted no change in their readers' attitudes toward the school desegregation problem over the past year.

This view was expressed in an informal survey of editors and publishers from various sections of the state who attended annual sessions of the Virginia Press Association and the Virginia Associated Press here.

In the past several months, the General Assembly enacted an antisegregation program which was declared unconstitutional by a Federal Court judge; desegregation decisions were upheld by the U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals in Arlington and Charlottesville cases, and Federal Judge Sterling Hutcheson gave additional time for Prince Edward County to desegregate its schools, with no deadline specifically set for compliance.

But despite all this activity, the newspapermen have noted no particular change in the attitude of Virginians.

The consensus is: The General Assembly action and the Federal Court decisions surprised few persons, changed the attitude of fewer. Those who bitterly opposed desegregation before, still do; those who didn't, still don't.

Some comment:

From Roanoke—"We have no real problem and can integrate if we have to. Elementary schools are being built in Negro districts so geographical lines will ease the impact, if and when it comes."

From Culpeper—"The people are not bothered because it hasn't been brought home to them locally. Some people feel we should express strong protests, in view of the Prince Edward decision, on the theory, which apparently worked in that case, that if you protest enough, integration won't happen."

From Fredericksburg—"There has been no change. Those for compliance are still for compliance; those against are stil against."

From Caroline County—"Our people are going ahead and building equal but separate schools, figuring it is just too bad if integration comes and the schools are forced to close. They think it would be too bad if Arlington and Charlottesville are forced to integrate, but they are not too concerned with that."

From Norfolk—"What has happened in the court cases has been absolutely no surprise whatever. Most people believe the time is coming when integration must take place, and they hope for as little impact possible."

From Staunton—"The people don't want integration, but they won't close down their schools to stop it."

From Prince Edward—"The people simply will not integrate their schools. Judge Hutcheson complied with the intent and spirit of the Supreme Court decision in his order, by not setting a specific date; but he did not touch on the usurpation of power by the Supreme Court in the first place, and that is all-important.

"The people hope Arlington and Charlottesville do not de-segregate, because any break in the ranks will make it that much more difficult for us."

School Authorities Given More Time

Federal Judge Postpones Final Ruling On Prince Edward Segregation Case

Post and Times Herald p. 1 A

Authorities in Prince Edward County, Va. were given "additional time" by a Federal judge yesterday in which to integrate schools.

District Judge Sterling Hutchenson postponed indefinitely a final ruling on a desegregation suit filed by attorneys for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. However, he said the plaintiffs could request further action "at a later date after the defendants have been afforded a reasonable time to effect a solution."

In a 31-page opinion on the potentially explosive case Hutchenson said that he believed it "is imperative that additional time be allowed the defendants in this case, who find themselves in a position of helplessness unless the court considers their situation from an equitable and reasonable viewpoint."

Prince Edward County is one of the original defendants in the cases that led to the United States Supreme Court desegregation ruling of May 17, 1954. It is the site of much of the state's bitterest opposition to school integration. Negroes outnumber white students in schools in this "deep South" type rural county, which is about 170 miles southwest of Washington.

Hutcheson overruled a motion by State and county attorneys that the NAACP's petition be dismissed but made no ruling on the constitutionality of Virginia's new enacted pupil placement law.

Eariler this month U. S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman in a similar desegregation case involving Norfolk and Newport News ruled that the pupil placement law is "unconstitutional on its face." Hoffman ordered that case to trial on Feb. 11.

In the suit before Hutcheson, State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. and T. Justin Moore, counsel for Prince Edward, argued that the Negro plaintiffs had not exhausted their administrative remedies under the pupil placement law.

NORFOLK SCHOOL MUST INTEGRATE

Times-Picayune Wed. 2-13-57 p. 5

Judge Sets Aug. 15 as Desegregation Deadline

New York

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 12 (AP) — US District Judge Walter E. Hoffman Tuesday ordered the Norfolk school board to abolish segregation in the public schools by Aug. 15.

Hoffman entered an identical order against the Newport News school board Monday.

Hoffman took the action without leaving the bench at the conclusion of a two-hour hearing of a desegregation suit brought against the Norfolk school board by parents of Negro pupils.

The jurist told the defendants that if they would submit to him before Aug. 15 a plan providing for compliance with the US Supreme Court desegregation decree and will promise to carry the plan out despite the governor and the state legislature, he would approve it.

The Norfolk school board could have submitted a reasonable plan for gradual compliance if the general assembly had not made "whipping boys of school boards and school superintendents," Hoffman said.

Norfolk has endeavored "to formulate some ideas and plans" looking toward eventual integration in the schools, Hoffman said. "But the general assembly put everything in reverse in September. I am glad the Norfolk members of the legislature did not participate in that action."

This was a reference to the special session of the general assembly which enacted legislation designed to maintain Virginia's traditional system of racial segregation in the schools.

A Wall Crumbles In Virginia

From Charlotte Observer

THERE probably are not a dozen persons in Virginia who are surprised that a Federal judge has ruled the state's pupil placement law to be "unconstitutional on its face."

The law bore all the marks of unconstitutionality when it was passed last September. It was part of an openly declared policy of "unyielding resistance" to integration—any integration—in the Virginia schools, come what may. It did precisely what North Carolina has very carefully avoided doing.

The act created a three-member Pupil Placement Board, appointed by the governor, to take over from local school boards the full authority to assign pupils to schools.

Many factors are to be considered in the assignment, including the "sociological, psychological and like intangible scientific factors as will prevent, as nearly as possible, a condition of socio-economic class consciousness among the pupils."

That jungle of words is all but meaningless; the important thing is that pupils are to be assigned on a segregated basis.

Virginia's policy also declares that a school will be closed automatically if a Negro child is admitted, whether by court order or by local authorities acting on their own volition.

Such a policy places Virginia in absolute defiance of the U. S. Supreme Court. The Federal courts could only say what Judge Hoffman has said in Norfolk, of the pupil placement act—unconstitutional on its face."

Virginia has only begun to pay the price for the inept handling of a perplexing problem.

North Carolina has wisely chosen to place pupil assignment in the hands of local authorities. These authorities are free to act in accord with local conditions. They are free to allow Negroes admitted to a school or, if conditions demand, to maintain segregation. What is essentially a local problem is to be handled locally, not from the state capitol.

There is excellent reason to believe that this state's pupil assignment law will stand the test of judicial review. That is especially true if the act is administered fairly and impartially in the local communities.

Flexible Desegregation

Post & Times Herald

Federal Judge Sterling Hutcheson in Richmond has provided a useful reminder that the Supreme Court did not prescribe a single fixed pattern of adjustment in its school desegregation decision. In granting more time for compliance in Virginia's Prince Edward County, Judge Hutcheson in effect held that "all deliberate speed" is an elastic formula which can take account of local conditions. This newspaper has contended from the beginning that the timing in desegregation was relative, and it is pleased to see this interpretation receive a judicial stamp.

Good faith is of course highly relevant in any such ruling; and whether or not Prince Edward County authorities are trying in good faith to bring about compliance is a question that will invite further discussion. Judge Hutcheson found, however, that a continuation of schools on a segregated basis was preferable to the closing of the schools which Prince Edward County authorities had threatened rather than submit immediately to desegregation.

The plain fact is that resistance in Prince Edward County is at a high pitch and that the adjustment there will be among the most difficult in Virginia. That is what distinguishes Judge Hutcheson's decision from other Federal Court orders calling for prompt desegregation in Arlington and Charlottesville. These communities do not face the same degree of problem; what is required in Prince Edward County, without any equivocation on the objective, is "patience, time and a sympathetic understanding."

It is necessary to add that this wise decision ought to hold no encouragement to would-be evaders. Federal Court decisions have already placed a line of nails in the coffin of the Stanley Plan in Virginia. The other day the highest state court, the Supreme Court of Appeals, declined to penalize Negro parents for refusing to send their children to an inferior segregated school; this decision, while consistent with the old and discarded "separate but equal" doctrine, could be the forerunner of others taking direct account of the 1954 and 1955 United States Supreme Court rulings. It would be prudent for all to read the signs.

Given a desire to cooperate in good faith, however, the effect of Judge Hutcheson's decision ought to be to relieve fears of immediate chaos and provide time for progressive but gradual adjustment—if Virginia authorities will have the foresight to use it.

Hate's Labor Lost

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE best white brains in Virginia, including the Governor and head of the University of Virginia got their heads together right after the U. S. Supreme Court's historic desegregation decree to plan ways and means of perpetuating the system of tax-supported segregation based on racial hatred.

After considerable intellectual labor they cooked up a scheme which the Virginia General Assembly, last September, enacted into law.

There was great joy among Virginia's bigots and hatemongers at the clever legal means whereby the tax-supported segregated school system could be continued despite the U. S. Supreme Court's decree, but now there is only gloom.

There is no joy among Virginia's white supremacists because Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman has ruled the complicated law unconstitutional and "in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court."

Hate's labor has been lost.

Other recalcitrant Southern states please take notice!

Arlington Bond Issues Get Legal Green Light

Post and Times Herald

Arlington officials got the green light yesterday to market $6.7 million in bonds which have been tied up in court suits since last June.

School and county heads labeled "good news" the Virginia Supreme Court's refusal to review a lower court's validation of the June 5 bond election.

Voters approved a $4.5 million school bond issue and a $2.2 million bond program for County Court House improvements.

The election was challenged in Circuit Court by two Arlington residents, William Burdette Jr., a Government attorney, and Jack D. Rathbone, chairman of the board of directors of the pro-segregationist Defenders of State Sovereignty, Arlington chapter. The circuit court upheld the election.

School Board Chairman L. Clark Keating, after hearing of the high court's refusal to review, said: "We'll take immediate steps to attempt to sell some bonds and then to send out for bids on jobs we have to get done, such as additions to old schools.

"Since the market is poor we'll sell as few bonds as possible at a time because we don't want to incur any more indebtedness than we have to."

Out the Window

Post & Times Herald

Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman in Norfolk has just about given the slip de grace to Virginia's notorious Stanley plan for defying the Supreme Court. In ruling that Norfolk and Newport News must desegregate their schools by Aug. 15, Judge Hoffman properly recognized that the General Assembly is the real culprit, not the local school boards which are handicapped in their planning by restrictions imposed from Richmond. He has directed the school boards to ignore Governor Stanley and the Assembly in carrying out the Supreme Court decision. Yet he also has taken account of local conditions in agreeing that desegregation can start gradually in the lower grades. Norfolk and Newport News are port cities of somewhat cosmopolitan attitude, and they do not face nearly so large a problem as that which affects parts of southside Virginia.

On the surface Judge Hoffman's order appears to be tough. It is tough, however, only because the Governor and the General Assembly have been so deliberately blind and rigid in their approach to the school situation. There is plenty of sentiment in Virginia for orderly desegregation on a reasonable timetable, as the courageous statement of the Richmond ministers demonstrates again; and there is plenty of competence among local school boards to cope with the transition if the General Assembly will afford some realistic guidance. There can be no real doubt in anyone's mind as to the outcome of the various appeals that are planned. The real question, then, is whether the General Assembly will be summoned soon to face the facts and outline a plan that will ease the adjustment, or whether the problems will merely be left to magnify until the merciful day when Governor Stanley steps down from office.

Virginia Awaits Final Decision On School Act

Mobile 7-24-57
Montgomery, Ala.

RICHMOND, Va., July 23 (AP)—Gov. Stanley said today he would advise Virginia's Pupil Placement Board to continue its work until the state act creating it is thrown out by the U.S. Supreme Court.

If that occurs, he told his press conference, "We will take up from there" in meeting the school segregation problem in Virginia.

The act was set up by the state's General Asembly in an attempt to preerve segregated schools. It sets up a three-man state board appointed by the governor and gives it all pupil placement powers formerly held by local school boards. The state board could assign students in public schools for a variety of reasons other than race.

COMMENT ASKED

Stanley was asked if he had any comment on last week's action by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in knocking down the placement act. The state has said it will appeal to the Supreme Court.

The Circuit Court upheld Norfolk Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman' sorders calling for desegratation in Norfolk and Newport News schools this September. The Circuit Court said that the placement act was unconstitutional when considered in the light of other legislation and the attitude of Virginia school authorities toward segregation.

Stanley said he did not want to comment on the opinion of the Circuit Court.

Advertiser P.10-A

He added:

"My advice to the placement board would be to continue their work as in the past until the act is declared invalid by the last court."

Stanley was asked what would happen if state money had already been forwarded to a locality and then the schools were integrated. He replied the local treasurers and other officials would be required to hold up the expenditure of any state funds for school purposes.

Another Virginia law provides for the immediate cut-off of state funds from any school in which the classes are integrated.

Virginia Battles To Keep Segregated Public Schools

Daily World
Atlanta, Ga.
Thurs. 9-12-57

By ARTHUR KRANISH

ALEXANDRIA, Va. — (INS) — The state of Virginia battled in federal court Wednesday to prevent immediate enforcement of the integration law in the schools of Arlington County, a Washington, D. C. suburban area.

State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, who clashed hotly with representatives of the National Association feo r th Advancement of Colored People, pleaded for "reasonable delay" in implementation of the Supreme Court outlawing racially segregated schools.

CONSUMING FIRES

Almond told federal Judge Albert . Bryan that integration difficulties are "raging like consuming fires" in Arkansas, Tennessee, and elsewhere in the South.

The jurist rejected Almond's request for a delay in the hearing on the appeal of an attorney for seven Negro children for an order directing the Arlington County School board to admit them to all-white schools.

Bryan turned down four motions filed by the school board asking that a previous integration order be dissolved and that the hearing be postponed.

S. W. Robertson, an attorney for NAACP, told the court that the Negro children were denied entry to the white schools solely because of race. He charged that it was "impossible" under Virginia's pupil placement act for the Negroes to attend a non-segregated school.

PLACEMENT LAW

The desegregation order under attack by the state was issued by Bryan July 27, but when the county schools opened earlier this month Negro pupils were turned away on grounds that they had failed to comply with the pupil placement law.

The law was evolved in an open attempt to uphold segregated schools in Virginia. It has been held "unconstitutional on its face" by another judge.

Times 9-12-57

Three Negro parents, summoned to the witness stand, testified that their children were denied admission to schools in defiance of the integration order.

NEGRO PARENTS

The three were Dr. Harold M. Johnson, Robert A. Eldridge, and Mrs. George M. Nelson, all of Arlington, Va.

Daily World

They were joined by Mrs. Geraldine Davis, also of Arlington, a white woman who said she escorted three Negro children to the schools because of her "Christian beliefs."

Mrs. Davis testified: "I thought if there was going to be any blood shed, it should be a white person's, mine if necessary."

Mrs. Nelson said she signed the pupil placement form for her son, but that he was nevertheless directed to a Negro school. Johnson and Eldridge refused to sign the form, which gives state authorities the right to assign pupils to an "appropriate" school.

All three of the parents testified that Negro schools were farther from their homes than white schools.

Johnson also testified that Negro schools did not offer some of the courses his children wanted to take, and that he was therefore sending them to schools in Washington, which are integrated, but where he had to pay tuition charges.

U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan used sharp language to attack the placement act—the heart of Virginia's declared policy of "massive resistance" to racial integration in the schools.

"Submission to that act amounts almost to assent to a racially segregated school," he said.

The judge ordered the seven Negroes admitted to three Arlington schools on Sept. 23. The parents of only one of the seven signed a pupil placement form required under the state law.

Attacks state law

JUDGE BRYAN said that if Negro parents signed this form, he "would not have an unfettered and free tribunal to act on his request" for admission of his child to a white school.

The state Pupil Placement Board, which considers such requests, "still deliberates on a racial question," he said, "under threat of loss of state money to the applicants' schools if children of different races are taught there."

Judge Bryan referred here to another new state law which would deny state funds to integrated schools.

The judge signed an order which restrained the Arlington school board from "refusing to admit" the students "or enroll or educate them at the schools to which they had made application for admission."

THE SEVEN NEGROES were refused admission to white schools on opening day of classes Sept. 5.

News

Attorneys for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People had sought an injunction to prohibit county school officials from barring the Negroes from white schools.

Pupil placement laws have been adopted by a number of Southern states since the Supreme Court ruled in 1954 that public school segregation is unconstitutional.

Times 9-13-57

Virginia's Placement Act, enacted last year, took the power of assigning pupils to specific schools from local school boards and placed it in a three-man board appointed by the governor.

The avowed purpose of the law has been to circumvent the Supreme Court's integration decree.

Arlington County lies on the Virginia side of the Potomac River, just across from Washington, D. C.

Original order

JUDGE BRYAN on July 27 ordered integration of Arlington schools this Fall. The NAACP asked for immediate enforcement of this order.

In his decision Judge Bryan noted that the Fourth Federal Circuit Court of Appeals had upheld a ruling that the placement act is unconstitutional. Judge Bryan said he could not "fairly require the plaintiffs even to submit their applications" to the state Pupil Placement Board.

The judge called "untenable" the state argument that the pupil placement act is a reasonable administrative remedy.

"The procedure there prescribed is too sluggish and prolix to constitute a reasonable remedial process," he said.

Two day hearing

BRYAN HEARD testimony and arguments on the motion at a two-day hearing Wednesday and Thursday.

Virginia Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. and Arlington School Board Counsel argued the pupil placement law is still the Virginia law and that parents of the Negro pupils ignored the act when they unsuccessfully sought their admission to white schools.

NAACP attorneys, including Spottswood Robinson and Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, contended the Pupil Placement Law freezes school segregation and that the new state laws foreclose any possibility of Negroes transferring to white schools. They said Negro parents felt it was futile to fill transfer applications under the state law.

Thomson Unsure Of Fund Cutoff

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.

Still Seeks to Keep Segregation, But Awaits Almond Proposals

Wed. 9-4-57 p. 1-B

By MARY LOU WERNER

Delegate James M. Thompson of Alexandria, who was the only Northern Virginia legislator to support Gov. Stanley's fund cutoff bill, is not certain how he will vote on the measure when the time comes to extend it.

Mr. Thomson stressed that he was not wavering from his determination to preserve school segregation, but declared that his future vote on fund withholding "depends on what the circumstances are at the time."

He added that he wanted to see what Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., proposed to do about the fund bill, and other segregation laws. Mr. nominee for Governor. Mr. Almond is the Democratic Thomson, also a Democrat, is unopposed for re-election in Alexandria.

The fund withholding bill was adopted at the 1956 session of the General Assembly as part of the State appropriation bill, and dies automatically with the appropriations act next June.

Anti-Integration Measure

The fund-withholding measure provides that State school appropriations shall be withheld from any locality that integrates schools. It is part of the anti-integration program sponsored by Gov. Stanley. Mr. Almond so far has not expressed himself specifically on the fund-withholding measure, but has promised a continued fight to preserve school segregation.

Mr. Thomson's comments today came when a reporter asked if he intended to vote for renewal of the measure.

"I want to be in a free position to take the best action to preserve segregation, so I cannot say at this time how I will vote," Mr. Thomson said. "I believe the fund-withholding law is the best thing we have come up with so far, but who knows, something better might be proposed."

He said other States with fund-withholding laws, such as South Carolina, Alabama and Mississippi, weren't having any school integration difficulties.

Probed Racial Suits

Mr. Thomson sponsored legislation creating one of two committees set up by the Virginia General Assembly last year to investigate groups promoting racial litigation. In the July primary Mr. Thomson won renomination as a segregation candidate over Albert A. Smoot, who campaigned for local pupil placement which he said might result in limited integration.

Northern Virginia's other legislators voted against the fund-withholding law. It has become an increasingly controversial measure, since it was cited by Federal Judge Walter Hoffman as one of the reasons he ruled that Virginia's pupil placement law is invalid. Judge Hoffman's ruling is being appealed.

Republican State Senator Ted Dalton, the G. O. P. candidate for Governor, repeatedly has criticized the fund-withholding law and the whole massive resistance" program of the Democratic administration. He has advocated a local pupil placement law, which he calls the best plan to keep schools largely segregated and keep them open.

Contempt Move Slated In Arlington Pupil Case

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.
Fri. 9-6-57

A move to hold the Arlington County School Board in contempt of court for turning eight Negro students away from white schools was expected in Alexandria Federal Court today.

Edwin C. Brown, jr., Northern Virginia legal representative for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said he intended to ask Judge Albert V. Bryan to issue a show cause order for a contempt hearing against the school board.

An injunction was issued by Judge Bryan on July 31, 1956, forbidding the Arlington school board to deny students admission to classes because of race. That injunction, which was upheld by the Supreme Court last March, became effective with the opening of school yesterday, when the eight Negro students were denied admission to the white schools.

Assignment Required

Arlington school officials took the position the Negroes could not be admitted to the white schools because they had not been assigned there by the State Pupil Placement Board.

The placement law is part of the legislative program Virginia adopted to preserve segregated schools. Under the placement law, all assignment powers are vested in the three-member placement board. There is no mention of race among the assignment standards set forth in the placement law, but other legislation provides for the closing of any schools where integration occurs and the withholding of State funds from school systems where races are mixed.

Mr. Brown said he would contend that the placement law was not a proper procedure to be imposed on the students, and therefore that the county had violated the desegregation injunction by requiring compliance with the placement law.

Punishment Not Specific

A. Andrew Giangreco, assistant United States Attorney at Alexandria, said there was no definite penalty for contempt action in an injunction case. He said punishment was at the discretion of the court, and could involve a fine or even jail terms if the court saw fit.

He said he intended to cite opinions in the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation cases, where the placement law was held "unconstitutional on its face" by Judge Walter Hoffman and subsequently called an "inadequate" administrative remedy by the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. The appellate court's opinion is being appealed by the State to the Supreme Court.

Evening Star

Arlington Schools Supt. T. Edward Rutter said at a press conference yesterday he did not consider county school officials in contempt of court, and declared that as far as he was concerned Virginia's placement law was still operative.

Fri. 9-6-57

First Test of Law

No specific attempts of Negro students to enter white schools were involved in the Norfolk and Newport News cases. The test shaping up in Arlington therefore is the first practical Federal court test of the placement law's validity.

Only those students who had not signed placement applications, and who were turned away from the white schools, will be involved in the move for a contempt citation, Mr. Brown said. Of the eight rejected yesterday, five had not signed placement applications. The three others were among six Negroes who filed placement applications last month requesting transfer to white schools. The placement board denied their applications, and reassigned all of them to Hoffman-Boston School for colored.

Cites Bryan's Ruling

Mr. Brown said he was taking the position that students shouldn't even be required to fill out placement applications, and he feared that those who signed them might be required to go through the rest of the long placement procedure before going into court.

The NAACP counsel cited a ruling by Judge Bryan in July, and said it did not require students to use the placement law.

Judge Bryan's July ruling came on a plea by the State to postpone desegregation of Arlington schools while the Norfolk and Newport News case goes up to the Supreme Court, and on a plea by NAACP counsel to specify that students did not have to use the placement law.

Judge Bryan denied the postponement, and declined to say that students should not use the placement law. In effect he said the time would not arrive to pass on the placement law until someone actually was denied admission to a particular school. In the light of yesterday's developments, that time now has arrived.

No Attempt in Richmond

In Richmond yesterday, no Negroes sought to enter white schools as the fall term began, but three Negro students were sent home from colored schools

Criticizes Pupil Placement Act As Too Sluggish

By WILLIAM L. UMSTEAD

ALEXANDRIA, Va. Sept. 14—(INS) — A federal judge, in a blow to Virginia's "massive resistance" to school integration, today ordered that seven Negro children be admitted to all-white schools in Arlington county.

U. S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan directed that the Negro students be admitted on Sept. 23. He issued the decree in a case brought on behalf of the children against the Arlington county school board.

The Negro children were refused admission to the Arlington schools last week on the grounds that they had not complied with the Virginia pupil placement law.

The Virginia act requires that before entering a public school for the first time, or upon graduation from one school to another, children must apply to the pupil placement board for enrollment.

POSSIBLE CONTEMPT

Judge Bryan issued a supplemental decree enjoining the Arlington school board from refusing to admit the Negro children. This posed a threat of possible contempt action against school officials if the children are refused admission.

Bryan ruled that refusal to admit the children to the Arlington schools violates a previous injunction by the court restraining county authorities from denying enrollment to any qualified child in any county public school because of race or color.

The judge criticized the procedures called for under the pupil placement act as "to sluggish and prolix." He said he could not fairly require the children to submit their applications to the school board for school assignment.

REASONABLE REMEDIES

In the previous injunction, he recalled, he had taken notice of the rules for assignment of children in Virginia schools and had directed conformity with them. But, he said, he had contemplated only "reasonable regulations and remedies."

Bryan said he could not require the children to submit their applications for assignment because the prescribed form requires the applicant to accept a school which the board deems most appropriate under the placement act.

He added: "Submission to that act amounts almost to assent to a racially segregated school.

"But even if the form he signed 'under protest,' the petitioner would not have an unfettered and free tribunal to act on his request.

"The board still deliberates, on a racial question, under threat of loss of state money to the applicant's school if children of different races are taught there."

Racial 'Hate' Mail to Pupils Protested

Evening Star
Washington, D.C.
Fri. 9-6-57

Arlington School Supt. T. Edward Rutter has filed a protest with postal officials over racial "hate" literature being mailed to students in the county.

In a letter to County Postmaster C. F. Simpson, Mr. Rutter said his office has received numerous complaints from parents on this score.

A school spokesman said the protests have come from parents of children in Arlington's two senior high schools—Washington-Lee and Wakefield.

The first batch of the anti-Negro literature was postmarked in Atlantic City, the week of August 26. It was followed by similar mailouts, postmarked in Baltimore, September 2.

Virginia is battling to stave off racial integration in Arlington's public schools.

In a letter to Mr. Simpson, the superintendent said:

"It is my conviction that this kind of literature leads to violence and therefore the privilege of mailing it through the United States mails should be immediately terminated."

Mr. Rutter went on to say: "I wish to make a vigorous protest as the superintendent of schools in Arlington County against the continuation of these mailouts."

Mr. Rutter told the postmaster that he would appreciate "any action that you could take to bring about a solution to the problem."

Fairfax Pupil Expelled as Mother Refuses to Sign a Placement Form

Post + Times Herald Washington D.C. Thurs 3-18-57

By Robert E. Baker and Mechlin Moore
Staff Reporter

A 9-year-old Fairfax County boy has been expelled from school because his mother has refused to sign one of Virginia's new pupil placement applications.

The mother, Theo DeFebio, said yesterday that she had refused to sign the application for her son, Nicky, "because I knew the purpose of the application was to circumvent the Supreme Court school integration decision."

Nicky was expelled from Hollin Hall Elementary School. On Friday, Mrs. DeFebio's son, Teddy, 14, will be expelled from Mount Vernon High School because she refused to sign his application.

Until she signs those applications, the two children apparently will not be educated in Virginia public schools, although the State has a compulsory attendance law.

George Pope, Assistant County School Superintendent, said Nicky was dropped in compliance with a directive issued by the State Pupil Placement Board on March 11.

This is the second time that Mrs. DeFebio, who calls herself a "nonconformist" and has a history to prove it, has clashed with school authorities over the education of her children.

A graduate of Smith College and a Washington taxi driver for the past 13 years, Mrs. DeFebio and her husband, Frank, moved to Kitty Hawk, N. C., in search for "the simple life" in 1950. She insisted on teaching Teddy herself, but ran afoul of North Carolina's compulsory attendance law.

Welfare authorities succeeded in taking away the DeFebio children. The DeFebios fought to regain them in court cases which attracted wide attention and split the Kitty Hawk community. They finally got them back two years ago.

But, whereas the DeFebio battle in North Carolina was to keep their children out of public school, Mrs. DeFebio's battle today is to keep them in.

"I'll do anything to get my kids back in school," she said. "I intend to take it to the Supreme Court if necessary. I hope it will be the thing that settles the assignment plan in Virginia."

The placement application requires no statement of race. It does require the name of the last school attended, however, and Mrs. DeFebio found this offensive because in a segregated system, she said, this would be the same as asking the race of the child.

She has spoken to a lawyer who is contemplating her case.

The March 11 order of the State Pupil Assignment Board required that parents must fill out applications within 15 days of receipt. Mrs. DeFebio was informed on Feb. 27 that her applications must be in by April 4 but she refused.

Principal Elsie T. Fletcher of Hollin Hall School, after advising Mrs. DeFebio of the requirement again, expelled Nicky on April 11. On the same day, she went to Mrs. DeFebio personally and asked her to sign, but Mrs. DeFebio refused.

A spokesman for the Pupil Placement Board in Richmond said the DeFebio case had not been called to its attention, nor did he believe the Board would consider it. Enforcement of the compulsory attendance law is up to local authorities, he said.

No Warrant

But in Fairfax, Commonwealth's Attorney Robert C. Fitzgerald advised school authorities not to get a warrant against Mrs. DeFebio under the compulsory attendance law. He reasoned the mother should not be prosecuted under a law requiring attendance when the authorities themselves expelled the children.

The Pupil Placement Board was set up by the General Assembly as an anti-integration measure and has complete authority over enrollments and assignments, previously reserved for local school boards.

Mrs. DeFebio's challenge of the Board is not the first. In Richmond, 26 Negro parents have refused to sign applications and have hired a lawyer.

A spokesman for the Richmond School Board said yesterday the Board plans no action to expel the students involved. He said the Board would wait until all applications submitted have been sorted, and then turn the problem over to the State Board.

Ruled Invalid

The law setting up the Board has been declared unconstitutional by Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman. His ruling has been appealed by the State.

Mrs. DeFebio, who said she believes "in integration 100 per cent," moved to her Fairfax County home, 39½ Northdown rd., Wellington, from Washington on Jan. 18. She chose the Potomac River site, she said, for its "peace and stability."

"I didn't move here to challenge the law," she said. Instead, she wanted to have a home and get her sons settled, she added. Her husband, Frank, lives in Kitty Hawk and she commutes often. They have another son, Carl, 4.

Theo T. DeFebio, who has refused to sign Virginia pupil placement applications for two of her sons, sent a letter yesterday to a Fairfax County school official blaming state authorities for maintaining "an unwholesome status quo" on segregation schooling.

Her letter was a reply to George H. Pope, Fairfax assistant school superintendent for administration, who wrote Mrs. DeFebio Thursday asking her to appear Tuesday and complete the forms.

Mrs. DeFebio, 39½ Northwood rd., Wellington, has refused to sign the applications, calling the pupil asignment plan an instrument to circumvent the Supreme Court ruling against public school segregation.

Her 14-year-old son, Teddy, withdrew from Mount Vernon High School Thursday, the day after Nicky, 9, was expelled from Hollin Hall Elementary School.

In her letter Mrs. DeFebio said she was "truly sorry that affairs must reach such a state that someone if not everyone must get hurt" but that she took her stand to undo "a great and far reaching moral injustice."

Norfolk Integration Ordered by Aug. 15 As Hoffman Gives 'Protection' Pledge

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 12 (Spl.)—Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman ordered desegration of Norfolk city schools today and offered "complete protection" to the School Board if it chooses to defy the Governor and General Assembly.

In an oral opinion after a brief trial, Hoffman called for desegregation by Aug. 15. The timetable was identical with the one he ordered for Newport News yesterday.

The judge again lashed Virginia's leadership in the school problem and took special note of the State's anti-integration program enacted by a special session of the General Assembyl last September. He told attorneys for the State and Norfolk School Board:

"I can assure you that the order will have to be complied with . . .

"Direct Conflict"

"We have a direct conflict between the leadership of the state and the judicial power of the Federal courts. The whole thing stays right in Richmond and in the legislature.

"If it hadn't been for what happened at the special session, the Norfolk School Board could have come in long before now with an acceptable plan.

"But the legislature has made whipping boys of the superintendents and the school boards."

As in the Newport News case, Hoffman invited the Norfolk School Board to develop a program for gradual desegregation before Aug. 15, "and then I will approve it, because I have utmost confidence in them."

Could Enjoin Governor

It was then that Hoffman offered "complete protection" to the school board from the governor and general assembly. He did not elaborate, but observers felt he meant he would issue an injunction if the governor attempted to close down an integrated school or the state withheld school funds, as provided in the state's new program.

It was the first time in Virginia's five desegregation cases that a Federal judge offered to help local school boards fight the state's efforts to thwart desegregation.

Board Presses Corning About School Issues

Answers Many Queries, Including Sex Education, Unruly Children

By Jeanne Rogers
Staff Reporter

The District Board of Education pressed School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning yesterday on several long-pending controversial issues. They include:

• Sex education—Wesley S. Williams, board proponent of a study of this field, said: "When do I get a report on just what we do teach in the schools on this?

Corning said he has a committee of 17 charged with advising him on whether the present program offers "too much, too little, too late, too soon."

Parents, from time to time, have charged that the District doesn't do enough about educating the child in the facts of life. Others, however, protest any undue attention paid to the subject.

• Unmanageable children—Williams said:

"I would like to know whether we intend to exclude these children as the superintendent proposes," or take up some of the other ideas that have been recommended.

These ideas, he said, include special disciplinary centers, a pulling-together of all community resourecs and residence-type detention schools or homes.

Corning said he would like to see the question of unmanageable children studied by the Commissioners' Youth Council of which he is a member.

He pointed out that its chairman, Addison M. Duval, offered such help on the subject during a recent school board hearing on children who now are a menace in the classroom.

• Counseling—Mrs. Frank S. Phillips, Acting Board President, said she had long sought the answer to whether local schools, on all levels, offered enough counseling services to children.

Corning pointed out the schools had been trying to get more junior high counselors in the budget for several years. He added that the schools also had asked for assistant principals to serve in large elementary schools.

"Counseling," Corning said, "is vital in all our schools to help spot the child with problems."

• Special education—Mrs. Ruth B. Spencer, board member, said:

"I want to know precisely what the schools are doing for the emotionally upset child, the backward one, the gifted."

Corning said "as much as possible," but added he would update his past reports on this subject.

• Hot lunch program for hungary grade school children—Walter N. Tobriner, board member, said:

"I want to know how many of these youngsters are attending school with empty stomachs".

Corning said:

"We are studying this matter now."

Expelled Pupil of 15 Committed by Court

A 15-year-old boy who was expelled from junior high school as unmanageable was committed to the Welfare Department yesterday by Juvenile Court Judge Edith H. Cockrill.

The boy, who will be held for treatment at the Children's Center, Laurel, Md., had been involved in a yoke robbery. A psychiatric report to the Court said he was sane, but had strong aggressive tendencies which he is unable to control.

Sen. Byrd Overruled

Afro-American
Wed. 2-6-57
Baltimore, Md.

The United States Supreme Court last Monday in 12 terse, but meaningful words overruled garrulous Senator Byrd and other Virginia authorities who have sought to delay integration in the public schools.

In a decision affecting Charlottesville and Arlington, the court affirmed the Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, ordering these school districts to desegregate by September.

Charlottesville is the home of the University of Virginia.

The movement there to keep the State of Virginia in the Union has been supported by an interracial committee, whose white members outnumber the colored.

Arlington is a suburb of Washington, D.C.

The integration movement there is supported by U.S. Government workers who frown on the conspiracy of Virginia officials to defy the Supreme Court and flaunt the Constitution.

In both cases, the Supreme Court held that integration has not proceeded with 'all deliberate speed.'

And as certain as night follows day, Norfolk and Newport News will be next.

All of Virginia's resistance to the Supreme Court ruling, its interposition scheme, its manifesto signing, its hasty enactment of unconstitutional legislation, its big speeches and naked prejudices have come to naught.

The court has ordered the school authorities to integrate without further delay.

They must now do so or go to jail for contempt.

He also stated that he would expect school boards and division superintendent in both localites "to use every power of persuasion they have against integration."

He pledged, "If this fails, we will have to use the other legislation enacted by the General Assmbly."

Under the proposals passed by the General Assembly earlier this week such "emergency" measures include cuts in state appropriations to integrated schools, as well as the authorization of the governor to take control of any integrated school, close it down, and try to reorganize it on a segregated basis.

"If nothing can be worked out with these measures," Governor Stanley told reporters, "we would have to go to the tuition grant bill."

Under the terms of the tuition grant program, two million dollars already has been appropriated for the governor to use to pay private secular school tuition to parents of Negro and white children who would find themselves in the situation where the public schools had been closed and where parents objected to sending their children to racially mixed schools.

Attorneys for the NAACP have revealed that they will press for integration in both Arlington and Charlottesville by September 1957.

On the other hand, attorneys for school officials have stated that their answer to the contempt citations for non-compliance with the desegregation order of the Federal courts would be one of inability to comply. In fact, the Pupil Placement act adopted by the General Assembly last fall took from the local school officials all power to assign school children and put such authority in the hands of the State Pupil Placement board in Richmond.

Here in Richmond over 300 parents have refused to sign pupil placement forms issued by the State Pupil Placement board.

Virginia Schools Prefer To Close Than Integrate

Arlington School Case Appeal Seen

Post + Times Herald P.1 Thurs. 1-3-57

Like Action Hinted In Charlottesville Desegregation Edict

Washington, D.C.

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., indicated yesterday that the Arlington and Charlottesville school desegregation decisions would be appealed to the United States Supreme Court.

On Monday, the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals upheld lower court decisions ordering the two school boards to cease operation of racially segregated schools.

Unless an appeal is taken, the court's official mandate would be issued Jan. 31 and become effective then.

Actually, the school boards must decide whether to appeal. Almond said he had talked to counsel for the boards and found them agreeable to carrying the case to the Nation's highest court.

No one involved in the cases sees much chance of the Supreme Court reversing the decision or even granting an appeal. But observers feel an effort is advisable for several reasons.

In the first place, it would stay implemntation of the appeals court decision and thus gain more time. Secondly, it would delay the dilemma facing the two school boards: to refuse to desegregate in the face of the court order, or to start desegregation and face punitive state legislation withdrawing school funds.

Thirdly, it again would show the state leadership's intent to use "massive resistance" and all legal means to thwart school desegregation.

Meanwhile, in other actions:

• The American Council on Human Rights wrote letters to the Arlington and Charlottesville School Boards, urging them to begin desegregation. The ACHR, composed of Negro college graduate and undergraduate fraternity members, urged the boards to contest legally any state action withholding funds. The Council also requested congressional leaders to introduce legislation providing Federal funds to localities deprived of state school funds because of desegregation.

• Four Virginia Congressmen predicted there would be much discussion on Civil Rights, but no laws passed at the new congressional session opening today.

School Board To Meet on Court Order

Post + Times Herald P.1-2 Wed. 1-2-57

The Arlington County Board of Education will meet in closed session at 8 p.m. today to decide what to do about the latest Federal Court order to desegregate public schools.

County school officials said they primarily will study the Monday opinion of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals which upheld two Federal District Court rulings that Arlington and Charlottesville cannot continue to segregate pupils racially.

These two cases were among four instituted against Virginia localities during the last year by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Norfolk and Newport News also were named in suits.

Actually, the appeals court decision means that Arlington must take steps toward desegregating elementary schools by Jan. 31 and high schools by next fall. The order, however, would be automatically stayed if Virginia appealed the case to the Supreme Court. State officials have not yet announced such a move.

The decision ordered the school boards to stop assigning pupils by race but did not order integration.

Board Sets Meeting On Desegregation

Arlington Group to Discuss Appeals Court Order Tomorrow

The Arlington County School Board will meet tomorrow night to determine what action it should take in the light of the latest Federal Court order to desegregate public schools.

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals filed an opinion yesterday in Richmond upholding desegregation orders of Federal District judges in cases involving Arlington and Charlottesville.

The appelate finding appeared certain to precipitate an early test of a new Virginia law prohibiting the classroom mixing of races. The Arlington school heads scheduled their closed conference for 8 p.m. in the school administration building to study the opinion.

Text of Court Decision Page B-7

The three-judge fourth Circuit Court of Appeals held in an unanimous opinion yesterday that desegregation orders for Arlington and Charlottesville "are not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated."

No Word From Stanley

In Charlottesville, where an order to begin desegregation at the start of the term last September was stayed to permit the appeal, School Board Chairman R. Stanley Goodman, jr., said he would call a meeting of the board at the earliest convenient time.

There was no immediate word from Gov. Stanley or Attorney Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, jr., on whether the State would consider another appeal to the Supreme Court. Both officials obtained copies of the decision written by Chief Judge John J. Parker and indicated they would have something to say after studying it.

John S. Battle, jr., Charlottesville School Board attorney, said he believed the order would only require the board to handle applications for the admission or transfer of school pupils on a racially nondiscriminatory basis.

The Appeals Court did not rule on the constitutionality of the package of anti-integration legislation passed by a special General Assembly session, since the assembly did not act until the orders were entered by Judge John Paul in the Charlottesville case and Judge Albert V. Bryan in the Arlington case.

Doesn't Nullify Rules

However, the court's opinion quoted from Judge Bryan's order which said that his injunction "shall not be construed as nullifying any State or local rules, now in force or hereafter promulgated, for the assignment of children to classes, courses of study or schools, so long as such rules or assignments are not based upon race or color."

But the circuit court noted in another connection that "equity does not require the doing of a vain thing as a condition of relief."

The appeals court rejected the three major contentions of the State and the two localities. These were (1) whether the action should have been dismissed as suits against the State; (2) whether the plaintiffs had failed to exhaust administrative remedies, and (3) whether there was an abuse of discretion by the lower courts in entering the injunctive orders.

No Complaints Seen

"We see nothing in these decrees of which defendants can complain," said the opinion by Judge Parker in which Judges Morris A. Soper and Simon E. Sibeloff concurred. "The decrees do not attempt to direct the school officials as to how they shall perform their duties or exercise the discretion vested in them by law, but simply forbid them to discriminate against the plaintiffs or other Negro children similarly situated on the group of race or color in violotion or their rights. . . ."

Federal Judge Rules:

Virginia Must End School Segregation!

Courier P-4 Sat. 1-19-57 Pittsburgh, Pa.

NORFOLK, Va.—"It is my firm conviction that Virginia's new law is unconstitutional." With that matter of fact statement, Virginia's latest device to circumvent the U. S. Constitution was smashed as Federal District Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman handed down a 12,000-word opinion which ruled unlawful Virginia's efforts to retain segregation in public schools of the Old Dominion.

Judge Hoffman's dissertation was handed down last Friday to reject motions to dismiss suits against segregated schools in the Tidewater towns of Newport News and Norfolk.

ATTORNEYS FOR the school boards concerned had asked for dismissal of the pro-integration actions on the grounds that Negro plaintiffs involved had not exhausted all administrative remedies.

Therefore, the cases will be heard Feb. 11-13, but the state's defense will have been immeasurably hurt by Judge Hoffman's decision.

The jurist's opinion read, in part: "The pupil placement program enacted by Virginia is directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court . . . which declared the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional."

THE LAW in question had been passed by a special session of the Virginia State Assembly last September.

Pro-segregationists had looked upon it as a model for like action in other Southern states which are seeking to circumvent the Supreme Court's ruling.

Judge Hoffman had given a preview of his action some two months ago. Asked then what he would do if he had to rule on the statute, he asserted, "If I had to rule on it today, I would have it thrown out the window."

Va. County Told To Buy Integrationists

Afro-American Sat. 1-19-57 Baltimore, Md.

P. 17

SUSSEX, Va.—Educators in at least one county in Virginia have been offered a scheme designed to stave off demands for school desegregation by building new, modern school buildings.

Although this would be something entirely new for the colored children of the county—especially in the counties of the socalled "Black Belt"—Virginia leaders are offering odds of 2 to 1 that the plan will fail.

The Sussex County School Board will receive at its February meeting the written report embodying the scheme, prepared by a committee of educators, recommending scrapping the county's colored school buildings and erecting new ones.

IN A verbal preview of the report, presented to the board last week, the committee urged construction of three elementary schools and one high school to house the county's colored pupils.

The new schools would be the best means of insuring voluntary segregation in the South Side county, A. L. Wingo, committee chairman and supervisor of the planning and research division, state department of education.

Colored people make up 65 per cent of the county's school population of 2,754. There are now 24 colored schools in the county, including a high school and 17 one room schools.

The committee also recommended that the county convert its four combined (consolidated) high schools and grade schools for white pupils entirely to grade school use. Pupils usually are transferred by bus to consolidated schools.

NO MENTION was made in the verbal report of building a new high school for white pupils. However, recommendations to that effect are expected to be included in the written report.

The study committee which compiled the report was composed of school superintendents from three neighboring areas and two representatives of the department of education.

The committee was authorized to study the county school needs at the request of the school. Prior to this time, the county has undertaken no school construction in 20 years.

Court Fixes Aug. 15 For Newport News School Integration

Judge Hoffman Rejects City's Pela To 'Hold Fire' on Setting Deadline

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Feb. 11—Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman ruled today that Newport News must begin desegregation of its public schools by Aug. 15—in time for the school term next September.

The oral decision followed a day-long trial of the Newport News desegregation case in which Archibald G. Robertson, school board attorney, had said to Hoffman:

"We're begging you to sit tight and hold your fire."

But Hoffman, who frequently criticized state leadership in dealing with the desegregation problem and consistently refused to admit evidence irrelevant, wound up with an immediate decision which stunned attorneys for the state and city.

"We thought he would at least wait until he heard the Norfolk case on Tuesday," said one attorney.

Hoffman said of the states: "There is nothing left for the court to do but restrain the defendants" from their segregation policies.

He noted that only one elementary school in the city posed a "substantial" desegregation problem. This is Walter Reed, a white school on the border of a Negro residential district. That problem, he said was not "insurmountable."

The judge suggested gerrymandering school districts to lessen the impact of integration.

"I don't know of any particular law that may prevent gerrymandering," he said. He continued:

"The school authorities are placed in an almost untenable position. If they comply, the schools close. If they fail to comply, they subject themselves to the processes of contempt. It is not for me to advise them."

Gives Up on Graduation

He said he thought that, if the Aug. 15 date is delayed by the almost certain appeal, the date of compliance should be put off a full year until September, 1958, because Newport News has no February term.

Hoffman said he had planned to order gradual desegregation in the city, with only a first grade in elementary schools and the beginning grades of high schools desegregating next fall.

Such a plan would have required good faith, Hoffman said. But "there has been no showing of good faith."

He added that if the School Board formulates its own desegregation plan or the General Assembly meets in the meantime "and does something effective," he would consider returning to the gradual program.

Prince Edward Case Cited

The state and city, during the trial, had asked Hoffman to hand down a similar decision to that of Judge Sterling Hutcheson in the Prince Edwards County case. Hutcheson declined to set a specific date for desegregation.

The state painted Newport News with its 60 per cent Negro school population, as in the same category with Prince Edward. Attorneys said the Hutcheson decision fitted areas with large Negro populations, as differentiated from areas like Charlottesville and Arlington with fewer Negroes. Charlottesville was ordered to begin desegregation by last September and Arlington by last Feb. 1, but the cases have been appealed to the Supreme Court.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., when summing up for the state today, was asked by Hoffman if Virginia could comply with the Supreme Court's desegregation decision of 1954 and still maintain absolute segregation. Replied Almond:

"No, your honor. I know that we cannot deny the Negro his adjudicated constitutional rights on the grounds that he is a Negro. I do know it is inevitable there will be large sections of the state in which public education will be destroyed for everybody. I also know there will be no descrimination in the destruction that will follow."

Criticized Leadership

Hoffman frequently criticized state leadership in dealing with the racial problem. At one time, for example, he spoke to a witness who forecast possible disorders if desegregation were ordered.

"It all comes down to leadership. Sure, you'll have trouble if you get John Kasper down here."

Kasper is a Northern-raised segregationist who led the Clinton, Tenn., resistance to desegregation.

"You have men in this room who could lead the state out of this," he said, obviously referring to Almond, who has the backing of the Byrd organization for governor. Hoffman, a Republican from Norfolk, was defeated by Almond in the 1953 race for attorney general.

But Almond defended the state's leadership;

"The representatives of the people must deal with the temperament of the people." H said the General Assembly, in enacting an anti-integration program last September, made a "reasonable start" in meeting the uproblem. Then he struck at the "other kind" of leadership.

"We've had that kind of leadership in the District of Columbia and that kind of leadership is anathema in the nostrils of decent people . . . no leadership can defy the will of the people."

Arlington School Case Appealed

Post + Times Herald P. 9-C Wash. D.C. Sat. 2-9-57

RICHMOND, Feb. 8 (AP)—Virginia sent appeal petitions to the U. S. Supreme Court today seeking reversal of school desegregation orders in Arlington and Charlottesville.

The petitions ask the high court to grant writs of appeal to a decision handed down on Dec. 31 by the 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

The decision affirmed decisions of Federal District Court Judges Albert V. Bryan and John Paul which set definite desegregation dates for Arlington and Charlottesville.

Their decisions were delayed by appeals to the circuit court and the effect of the circuit court's opinion has been stayed by appeals to the U. S. Supreme Court.

The appeal points listed in the petitions to the Supreme Court closely follow those used in the unsuccessful appeal to the Circuit Court.

Judge Bryan ordered an end to segregation in Arlington elementary schools by Feb. 1 this year and in high schools there by September, this year.

Judge Paul had issued a "forthwith" deadline ordering an end to desegregation in Charlottesville schools as of last September.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Feb. 9 (AP)—With the outcome clearly indicated in advance, hearings will be held next week in suits seeking the end of racial segregation in the public schools of Newport News and Norfolk.

In identical suits filed last spring, Negro pupils and their parents charged they were denied equal protection of the law and asked the U. S. District Court to enjoin the school boards of the two cities from separating pupils by race.

State and local authorities asked Judge Walter E. Hoffman to dismiss the suits. At a hearing on these motions in November they argued that before the plaintifs turned to the Federal Courts they should exhaust administrative remedies contained in recent legislation by the Virginia General Assembly.

In January Hoffman denied the motions to dismiss the suits and said the State's pupil placement law, key block in the wall of segregation, is "unconstitutional on its face."

Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., has said he will take the cases to a higher court if Hoffman's decision next week is in favor of the plaintiffs.

Prince Edward County Gets Indefinite Time

RICHMOND, Va. — When Federal Judge Sterling Hutcheson, Wednesday gave Prince Edward County public school officials more time to continue resistance to the United States Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, few people in this area were surprised.

Norfolk, Va.

Although approximately three years have elopsed since the Supreme Court banned public school segregation in a hearing which included Prince Edward County, this county has made no move to comply.

Sat: 2-2-57

FOR ALL INTENTS and purposes, Farmville is at present the capital of the State of Virginia. In the town lives the president of the "Defenders of Sovereign States Rights and Individual Liberties." This organization dominates the Southside, and is generally credited with killing the Gray Commisison Plan.

Your correspondent does not beleve, however, that this had anything to do with the failure of Judge Hutcheson to make a ruling. The Judge is a practical man, as well as a student of human affairs.

When he said:

"It is imperative that additional time be allowed the defendants in this case"

he was cognizant that any other decision at this particular moment would have brought about the immediate closing of the public schools in Prince Edward County. The administration at Farmville is just that determined.

THE COURT was bending over backwards when it said "these defendants find themselves in a position of helplessness unless the court considers their situation from an equitable and reasonable viewpoint." There is no doubt about the unpreparedness, and calculated action on the part of Prince Edward white leaders.

Then, he continued "considering all the factors, it is my conclusion that a decision on the motion for further relief filed by the plaintiffs should be withheld at this time, with reservations to the plaintiffs of the right to review the motion at a later date after the defendants have been afforded a reasonable time to effect a solution.

JUDGE HUTCHESON, in his 31 page opinion, quoted language in the United States Supreme Court's May 31, 1955 decree in the Prince Edward and companion cases, which he said, "is the law of this case and must be observed."

He no doubt had reference to local conditions, et cetera. But Judge Hutcheson quoted also the following language from the decision: "BUT IT SHOULD GO WITHOUT SAYING THAT THE VITALITY OF THESE CONSTITUTIONAL PRINCIPLES CANNOT NOW BE Allowed TO YIELD SIMPLY BECAUSE OF DISAGREEMENT WITH THEM."

THE COURT retained jurisdiction in the case but did not set a date for further proceedings. Since no decree was handed down, attorneys involved say there is no avenue for appeal to a higher court. However, there is implied in the U.S. Supreme court decree that there is a limit to a time that would seem necessary or reasonable for commencing desegregation, and the plaintiffs' attorneys will go back and reopen the matter with Judge Hutcheson. Certainly, the case is not going to 'die on the vine" and there is no belief that Judge Hutcheson intends for that to happen.

IN ADDITION, what happens in Arlington, Newport News, Norfolk and Charlottesville will have a direct bearing on Prince Edward.

Also, the decision of the Supreme Court of Virginia in Jan. 21 in the West Point King William school case will have the effect of undermining much of Virginia's resistance to compliance with the de-segregation ruling of the United States Supreme Court.

THE VIRGINIA Supreme Court's ruling in itself disposes of the validity which is supposed to reside in the Virginia Placement Law.

The explicit purpose of this law enacted in the Sept. special session of the General Assembly was to continue racial discrimination by placing all Negro pupils in the schools which they have heretofore attended or in no schools at all.

U. S. JUDGE RIPS VIRGINIA'S CURB ON INTEGRATION

Tribune P. 11

Chicago Ill.

Pattern Is Plain, Law Invalid, He Says

Norfolk, Va., Jan. 11 (AP)—A federal judge today branded Virginia's pupil placement law "unconstitutional on its face." The law is one of several pushed thru the legislature recently to circumvent integration in the state's schools.

Judge Walter E. Hoffman took the action in denying state motions to dismiss desegragation suits against the city school boards of Norfolk and Newport News.

Judge Walter E. Hoffman

"Pattern Plain," He Says

State and local authorities had argued that the newly enacted pupil placement plan afforded a course of appeal at the state level which should be exhausted before Negro plaintiffs turned to the federal courts.

In a 12,000 word opinion Hoffman reviewed the course taken by Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, a special commission, a constitutional convention and the general assembly all aimed at keeping the races separate in the schools. Then, he added:

"The pattern is plain. The legislature has adopted procedures to defeat" the Supreme court decision.

The placement act would keep all pupils in their present schools and put the responsibility for handling transfers or those advancing from elementary to high schools in the hands of a three man pupil placement board. The board, in theory, would assign for reasons other than race or color and would consider health, welfare, aptitudes, and "the sociological, psychological, and like intangible social-scientific factors as will prevent as nearly as possible a condition of social-economic class consciousness among the pupils."

Cases Still to Be Heard

The language dealing with the scientific factors was borrowed from the Supreme court decision striking down school segregation.

Hoffman's opinion did not decide the cases which will be heard Feb. 11 to 13. But his opinion made it obvious the state would have to take a new tack.

Hoffman, like other Virginia federal judges, said disposition of the cases in favor of the plaintiffs wouldn't mean the doors of any school would be opened to any pupil. But he said the placement authority vested in local officials must not transgress the constitutional guarantees of any pupils, as these guarantees were interperted by the Supreme court.

Virginia Board Bares Forms and Rules for Anti-Integration Law

Post + Times Herald Thurs. 2-7-57 Washington, D.C. P. 1-6

Pupil Placement Application Blanks Go Next Week To Local Schools

RICHMOND, Feb. 6 (Spl.)—Virginia's Pupil Placement Board revealed today its application forms and instructions designed to implement the state's anti-integration school program.

Board members met at the Capitol here and worked out plans for distributing 75,000 application forms next week to local school officials. Application blanks were shown to reporters.

The law establishing the Board was brushed off as unconstitutional last month by Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman in Norfolk. He made the observation in disposing of preliminary motions in the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation cases which will be heard on their merits next week.

Decided to Go Ahead

Board members decided to proceed under the state law until a final decision on its validity is reached.

The law, passed by the General Assembly last September as part of an overall anti-integration program, took away assignment powers from local officials. This feature is designed to remove local school authorities from liability under desegregation suits.

The Board's instructions, which will be distributed with the applications, stress it this way:

"In making your recommendations, you may do so without legal responsibility, it being the sole responsibility of this Board to place and enroll pupils."

The subject of race is not mentioned on the Board's assignment applications. The form requests information on the child's name, address, school to which enrollment is sought, school last attended, grade attained, sex, condition of health, physical or mental handicaps or disabilities, particular aptitudes of the child, and name and location of schools in which other children of the family are enrolled.

Effective Dec. 29

Applications for assignment will be required for all children who, since Dec. 29, 1956, have entered school for the first time in Virginia, transferred from one school to another or started school after the opening of a session. Dec. 29 is the date the law became effective.

The General Assembly placed all other pupils in their existing assignments when it passed the law.

Instructions accompanying the forms specify that:

- Disciplinary powers of local school officials "will continue to be exercised as in the past."
- Applications for enrollment must be made in triplicate, with two copies forwarded to the Board along with recommended action by the local officials.
- A birth certicate, or photostatic copy, must be attached to the application of each pupil who has moved to Virginia from another state and is seeking enrollment for the first time.
- Pupils may attend classes on a temporary basis until officially enrolled by the Board.

Board mmebers are Beverley H. Randolph Jr., Richmond attorney; Andrew A. Farley, Danville newspaper executive, and Hugh V. White, Nansemond County school superintendent.

It Cannot Stand

Balto. News Am. 2-7-57

The circuit judge who ruled Virginia has the right under the Tenth Amendment to enforce its segregation laws at public assemblies must know that his decision would not stand.

He indicated this by his remarks after upholding a $15 fine assessed against an Arlington librarian, who refused to move to a section of a church designated for whites during a political rally.

"It seems," commented Judge Emery Hosmer, "that the right to enforce segregation rests with the State under the Tenth Amendment UNLESS OTHERWISE DICTATED BY THE CONSTITUTION.

The capitalization is ours.

Those last six words show Judge Hosmer was fully aware that in ruling as he did he was treading on extremely thin legal ice and wanted to be sure there was some means to get back to shore.

It is true that the Tenth Amendment spells out the rights of states under the Constitution.

But in holding that this sustains segregation, Judge Hosmer would ignore the First Amendment which guarantees the right of peaceable assembly and more importantly the Fourteenth Amendment which spells out the rights of citizens of the United States which no state may abridge.

And clearly denied to any state is the right to make or enforce any law depriving citizens of liberty and equality, i.e. the right to segregate.

If Judge Hosmer is ignorant of this legal fact, he need only consult the March 14, 1955 decision of a fellow Virginian, Julge Armistead Dobie of Charlottesville, who as a member of the 4th U.S. Court of Appeals held that under the Constitution "segregation can no longer be justified."

U. S. Judge Bars Recent 'Pupil Placement' Laws

P. 3

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 11 (AP).—A Federal Judge today knocked down Virginia's pupil placement law—a key prop in the state's new plan to hold on to segregated schools. He said it was "unconstitutional on its face."

Judge Walter E. Hoffman took the action in denying state motions to dismiss desegregation suits brought by Negro pupils and their parents against the city school boards of Norfolk and Newport News.

State and local authorities had argued that the newly enacted pupil placement plan afforded a course of appeal at the state level which should be exhausted before the plaintiffs turned to the Federal courts.

Punishment

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C. Jan. 15, 57

Governor Stanley evidently is determined to leave a legacy of bitterness in Virginia. His appointment of Garland Gray to the State Board of Education is an insult to all those persons who, whatever their personal opinions, believe that adjustment to the Supreme Court school desegregation decision is necessary and inevitable. Mr. Gray is the symbol of die-hard resistance to the Court. He repudiated the plan proposed by the commission he headed in order to plump for the negative and futile Stanley plan which is being invalidated piece by piece by the courts.

The man whom Senator Gray replaces, Sen. Blake T. Newton, is a professional educator who had served on the State Board of Education for 20 years and who had been chairman for more than a decade. His sin, apparently, was that he did not support the Stanley plan (although he had endorsed the plan originally proposed by the Gray Commission). The Governor's excuse—that he wished to give more representation to southside Virginia—is pretty feeble and transparent; by this criterion the Tenth Congressional District of northern Virginia should really be howling, since it has no representative on either the State Board of Education or the Highway Commission. The change seems, on the contrary, to be a kind of punishment to Senator Newton for nonconformity—and in the process to be punishment for Virginians who are working for orderly compliance with the law.

Virginia 'Buys' a Year of Segregation

VIRGINIA'S FIGHT against school desegregation may have bought the state time until February, 1958.

By that date, legal experts in the state's effort to thwart enforcement of the Supreme Court's 1954 decision against school segregation expect to face an unappealable mandate to enroll a Negro child in a white school.

These experts expect that date will be the signal for a shift in Old Dominion strategy back to the original Gray Commission program, which was initially blessed by state leadership in a whirlwind campaign, then damned by the leaders when they realized that some communities—notably Arlington County—would use it to comply with the court mandate.

THE FEBRUARY, 1958, date will be shortly after the expiration of the term of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley, now the symbol of unyielding official defiance in Virginia. Stanley, who first sponsored and then repudiated the Gray Commission plan, is expected to be successful in maintaining his goal of "no integration anywhere" in the state during his term.

His successor, however, will be left with a pressing problem, if the legal experts are correct in their speculation on the court timetable. Barring an upset, Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. will succeed Stanley as Governor with the support of the Byrd organization.

Almond, a colorful, finger-waving orator of the old school, is a segregationist and States' Righter. But it is known that he feels personally that the state's present lot of anti-integration laws is fruitless, at least from a legal standpoint, and he was dismayed when the Gray Commission program, over which he labored long, was swept aside by Stanley.

Some observers feel that Almond, faced with an unappealable mandate in February, 1958, when the General Assembly will be meeting in regular session, might turn back to the Gray Commission proposals.

THIS PROGRAM would permit local school boards to assign pupils on bases other than race to keep schools as segregated as possible. It also would establish tuition grants for the private education of pupils whose parents objected to assignments to integrated schools, or for pupils in areas where schools were abolished. It was designed to comply with the Supreme Court decision, and thus envisioned some integration.

A review of Virginia's handling of the desegregation problem may put the present situation in perspective.

The Supreme Court's decision of May 17, 1954, outlawed racial segregation in public schools and, in effect, abolished the "equal but separate" doctrine which Virginia, and the South, had operated under for 58 years. One of the Supreme Court cases was a Virginia one—Prince Edward County.

There had been advance indications that the Supreme Court might rule the way it did, but Virginia's leadership remained silent and the General Assembly in early 1954 found no time for discussion of the impending race problem.

TWO HOURS after the court's momentous decision, Stanley was a model of calmness. Said he: "I shall call together as quickly as practicable representatives of both state and local governments to consider the matter and work toward a plan which shall be acceptable to our citizens and in keeping with the edict of the court.

"Views of leaders of both races will be invited. . . ."

Six weeks later, after he had been bombarded by resolutions and petitions, primarily from Southside Virginia where the Negro population is greatest and white resistance toughest, Stanley promised to "use every legal means at my command to continue segregated schools."

He never appointed his contemplated biracial commission. Instead, on Aug. 30, 1954, he appointed a 32-member Commission on Education of General Assembly members, weighted with Southside representatives. State Sen. Garland Gray of Waverly became chairman, and the Gray Commission was born.

ON MAY 31, 1955, the Supreme Court handed down the decree implementing its decision of a year earlier. It called for a "prompt and reasonable start" toward compliance and left it up to Federal district courts to decide if additional time is needed after the start.

On Nov. 13, 1955, the Gray Commission announced its program, and members expressed a desire for quick action because it was aimed for the September, 1956, school term. Said Stanley of the Gray Commission program:

"I concur wholeheartedly in the recommendations from this able, conscientious and dedicated group of legislators."

Stanley called the General Assembly into session, and a referendum, which would change the state constitution so the tuition grant part of the Gray Commission program could be put into effect, was approved. The mighty Byrd organization got behind a campaign for voter approval, and one after another the state's leaders endorsed the Gray Commission program.

ON DEC. 17, 1955, Sen. Harry F. Byrd (D-Va.) himself endorsed the constitutional change, as a clincher, but he talked also of shifting strategy in dealing with the desegregation decision. He talked of slowing down Virginia's swift pace in accepting the Gray Commission program. He already was committed to "massive resistance" as the South's answer to the Supreme Court decision.

It was during this time that the dusty doctrine of interposition, a word strange to most Southerners, was resurrected. In a general sense, it meant that a state interposed its sovereignty between the Federal Government and its citizens.

Virginians flooded the polls on Jan. 9, 1956, a cold and icy day, and approved the constitutional change, and in effect, the Gray Commission program, by a 5-2 vote.

THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY met Jan. 11 for its regular biennial session and set the wheels in motion for a constitutional convention to carry out the voters' wishes.

On Jan. 14, the Arlington School Board announced a program for partial and gradual desegregation, contingent upon enactment of the Gray Commission program. That action hit state leaders like a bomb, and Arlington learned the hard way that the Gray Commission program, even at that early date, was not going to be enacted. The General Assembly retaliated by taking away Arlington's privilege, unique in the state, of electing school board members.

Gov. Thomas B. Stanley
. . . temporary "guardian"

On Jan. 24, amid rumors of possible united action by Southerners in Congress, Stanley met in Richmond with the governors of South Carolina, Mississippi and Georgia. The Old Dominion, traditional Southern leader, was casting its lot with the Solid South, the hard-core resisters.

A week later, after much hemming and hawing behind closed doors and in hotel rooms, the General Assembly passed a compromise version of an interposition resolution which apparently satisfied those who wanted all-out nullification and those who wanted nothing.

The constitutional convention met March 5 and duly changed the constitution to permit tuition grants.

The General Assembly concluded its business without enacting the Gray Commission program, but amid talk of a special session later to enact it.

In early July, Stanley, Gray and other Southside legislators, Rep. William M. Tuck (D-Va.) and Wilkins M. Abbitt (D-Va.) met in Washington with the knowledge of Byrd. Here was solidified a Virginia program of defiance.

On July 23, Stanley said: "There shall be no mixing of the races in the public schools anywhere in Virginia." He repudiated the Gray Commission program. Gray did, too.

STANLEY ANNOUNCED his own program—considered but discarded in early Gray Commission deliberations—to withdraw state funds from any schools which desegregated.

A special session of the General Assembly met in September. It passed a package of anti-integration bills and a batch of bills aimed at curbing and investigating the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Stanley's withholding program won, 62-37, in the House of Delegates, but barely squeaked by the Senate, 22-16. Also included was a pupil placement law which seized assignment powers from the local school boards.

Meanwhile, the Federal courts were methodically implementing the Supreme Court's decree in five desegregation cases. On July 12, 1956, Federal Judge John Paul told the Charlottesville School Board to begin desegregation by September. On July 31, Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington to begin desegregation of its elementary schools by Feb. 1, 1957, and its high schools by the following September.

On Dec. 31, these decisions were upheld by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. The state's anti-integration laws were not an issue in these cases. The state appealed to the Supreme Court.

ON JAN. 11, 1957, Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman ruled that the pupil placement law was unconstitutional on its face and on Feb. 11, ordered desegregation to begin in Norfolk and Newport News by Aug. 15. Hoffman offered the school boards a gradual desegregation plan if they chose to defy the General Assembly and the Governor by bringing in a proposal by Aug. 15. The state will appeal.

On Jan. 23, Judge Sterling Hutcheson postponed indefinitely a final ruling in the Prince Edward case. He declined to set any desegregation date to give this Southside county "a reasonable time to effect a solution." Most observers agree that a showdown in Prince Edward County should be deferred until after the issue is settled elsewhere in the state. The state will not appeal the Prince Edward decision.

The future timetable, as viewed by the state's legal experts, looks like this:

The Norfolk and Newport News cases, and thus the Pupil Placement Law, will be ruled upon in June by the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals. If the court agrees that the law is invalid, the state will appeal to the Supreme Court, which probably will not rule until October, after its summer vacation.

The Supreme Court probably will deal with the Charlottesville and Arlington cases this spring. Desegregation likely will be ordered by September. But the Pupil Placement Law still would be in effect and would preserve segregation at least until the October decision in the Norfolk and Newport News cases.

Thus, these experts figure that there will be no desegregation until the February school term, 1958. But they admit that a speed-up in any court decision, or an unexpected and successful legal maneuver by the NAACP, might bring a quick showdown.

Segregation Fight Looms With Smoot Candidacy

Evening Star 1-31-4
Washington D.C.

A spirited fight marked by differences over Virginia's new school segregation laws began to take shape in Alexandria today with the announcement that Albert A. Smoot would seek the Democratic nomination for the city's House of Delegates seat.

The seat currently is held by James M. Thomson, also a Democrat, who is expected to run for re-election.

Mr. Smoot, a former vice mayor of Alexandria, and Mr. Thomson stood on opposite sides of the Gray referendum fight in the fal of 1955. Mr. Smoot was chairman of the Alexandria Save Our Schools Committee, which campaigned against changing the State Constitution to permit payment of tuition grants for the private education of students opposed to attending integrated schools. Mr. Thomson supported the change. The referendum carried State-wide, but was defeated in all Northern Virginia subdivisions—including Alexandria.

Segregation Issue Implied

In his announcement today, Mr. Smoot made no mention of Mr. Thomson by name, but clearly implied that the incumbent's support of Virginia's all-out segregation program would be a campaign issue. Mr. Thomson voted for key features of Gov. Stanley's program to preserve segregated schools—including the withholding of funds from any locality that might integrate.

Mr. Smoot declared that he was "dissatisfied with the lack of representation of Alexandria's people and Alexandria's ideals in the House of Delegates during the last two years." Asked to elaborate, he said he was referring to the incumbent's stand with Southside legislators on segregation laws.

Public Schools Lauded

In a nine-point campaign platform, Mr. Smoot pledged that "the public school system in Virginia must be preserved." He said, "We must stop trifling with it and rededicate ourselves to its continuance and improvement. Especially in Alexandria, we have a real pride in the public schools that we have developed."

The candidate promised to "represent Alexandria independently, beholden to no committee, group or clique elsewhere in the State."

He also called for a fairer share of State highway money for Northern Virginia, repeal of the poll tax, and development of Alexandria port facilities.

A native of Alexandria, Mr. Smoot long has been active in the city's civic, church and business affairs. He was educated in Alexandria public schools, Episcopal High School and the University of Virginia.

Heads Business

Mr. Smoot is president of the W. A. Smoot & Co., a coal and lumber firm, a member of the board of directors of the Alexandria National Bank, of the Vestry of St. Paul's Episcopal Church and recently resigned as chairman of the Alexandria Sanitation Authority to enter the House race.

Mr. Smoot was chairman of Alexandria's first board of public welfare, chairman of the Alexandria Hospital drive for funds several years ago, chairman of the Alexandria Tax Commission, and also has served on the Virginia State Ports Authority. He currently is concluding his second consecutive term as president of the Alexandria Community Chest.

His father, William Albert Smoot, was mayor of Alexandria in the 1920's, and represented Alexandria in the House of Delegates in 1918 and 1919.

Court Voids Virginia Plan To Keep Pupil Segregaton

Times Sat 1-12-57 P. 1

U. S. Judge Says Student Placement Act Flies 'in Teeth' of Integration Ruling—Negroes Bid President Appeal to South

New York

Special to The N

NORFOLK, Va., Jan. 11—A Federal District Judge ruled unconstitutional today the Virginia plan to retain segregation in schools.

Judge Walter E. Hoffman, in a 12,000-word opinion, rejected motions to dismiss suits calling for desegregation at Norfolk and Newport News, Va.

[In Atlanta, a conference of Negro leaders urged President Eisenhower to make a speech in the South on Civil Rights.]

[Quiet reigned in Montgomery, Ala., the second day of the suspension of integrated bus service because of violence.]

Judge Hoffman said in his opinion:

"The pupil placement program enacted by Virginia is directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court * * * which declared the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional."

The pupil placement law was passed by a special session of the Virginia General Assembly last September at the instigation of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley. It is being watched by other Southern states seeking to delay school integration.

The placement act would keep all pupils in their present schools unless transfer was approved by a special three-man board.

The board, in theory, would reassign pupils for reasons other than race or color. It would consider health, learning aptitude and "the sociological, psychological and like intangible social-scientific factors as will prevent as nearly as possible a condition of social-economic class consciousness among the pupils."

The language dealing with the scientific factors was taken from the United States Supreme Court decision striking down segregation in public schools.

Judge Hoffman was born in Jersey City, N. J. He attended the University of Pennsylvania.

Cites Governor's Stand

In his opinion Judge Hoffman said:

"Manifestly, the Governor of Virginia has suggested that there shall be no integration of races in the public schools of Virginia, irrespective of how slight it may be.

"The question remains: has Virginia now enacted a constitutional act which is nondiscriminatory in nature and not in violation of the Fourteenth Amendment?

"In compliance with my oath of office and my duty to determine matters from a legalistic viewpoint, I must answer in the negative.

"It is my firm conviction that Virginia's new law is unconstitutional."

Asked Dismissal of Suits

The attorneys for the two school boards had asked that the anti-segragation suits be dismissed because the program offered the Negro plaintiffs administrative remedies they should seek before going to the Federal courts.

Judge Hoffman's opinion did not decide the cases, which will be heard Feb. 11-13. His opinion, however, posed a strong challenge to the state's case.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr., anticipating an adverse final decision, said:

"Of course, we'll appeal if necessary."

Governor Stanley declined to comment until "I have an opportunity to read the opinion."

Mr. Stanley, prior to passage of the legislation by the Assembly, declared:

"I do not believe we can operate an efficient system of public schools in Virginia on an integrated basis."

In his stand, the Governor had the backing of United States Senator Harry F. Byrd and most of the Democratic leaders in the state. Senator Byrd said after the law had passed that Virginia was offering "its peaceful leadership to the South."

Fund Cut-off Provided

In addition to the three-man assignment board, the law also provides for a cut-off of state school funds to localities that practice any form of racial integration in public schools.

Judge Hoffman concluded that "the pattern is plain—the legislature has adopted procedures to defeat" the Supreme Court decision.

He said that disposition of the cases in favor of the plaintiffs would not mean that the doors of any school would be opened to any pupil. But he said the placement authority vested in local and state officials must not transgress the constitutional rights of any pupil, as those rights were interpreted by the Supreme Court.

The court did point out, however, that "as long as school boards maintain an announced policy of refusing to consider the applications [for transfer] separately and take no steps toward removing the requirement of segregation, * * * there appears nothing any court may do other than enjoin the violation of constitutional rights in the operation of schools by the authorities and, in the event of continued violation, proceed by way of contempt."

Thus, Judge Hoffman followed through on a statement he made two months ago during a hearing on the law.

"If I had to rule on it today," he said then, "I would have to throw it out the window."

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 12 (AP)—A federal judge today ordered schools of Virginia's largest city, Norfolk, desegregated by Aug. 15.

Yesterday the same jurist, Dist. Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman, ordered the shipbuilding city of Newport News, across Hampton Roads, to desegregate its schools by the same date.

Today he invited Norfolk school officials to submit a plan providing for compliance with the Supreme Court desegregation decree. If they do this, he said, and also promise to carry the plan out despite the governor and the State Legislature, he will approve it.

Norfolk has a school population of 31,544 white, 13,388 Negro. Newport News has aschool population of 3,967 white, 5,061 Negro.

Court Tells Norfolk To Integrate Schools

Wed. 2-13-57
Miami Fla.

NORFOLK, Va. —(AP)— U. S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman Tuesday ordered the Norfolk School Board to abolish segregation in the public schools by Aug. 15.

Hoffman entered an identical order against the Newport News School Board Monday.

Hoffman took the action without leaving the bench at the conclusion of a two-hour hearing of a desegregation suit brought against the Norfolk School Board by parents of Negro pupils.

The jurist told the defendants that if they will submit to him before Aug. 15 a plan providing for compliance with the U. S. Supreme Court desegregation decree, and will promise to carry the plan out despite the governor and the Legislature, he will approve it.

The Norfolk School Board could have submitted a reasonable plan for gradual compliance if the General Assembly had not made "whipping boys of school boards and school superintendents," Hoffman said.

Norfolk has endeavored "to formulate some ideas and plans" looking toward eventual integration in the schools, Hoffman said.

"But the General Assembly put everything in reverse in September. I am glad the Norfolk members of the Legislature did not participate in that action." The Legislature opposes integration.

Gradual Integration Ordered For Schools In Virginia City

Montgomery, Ala.

1440 Va.

U.S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman took the action at the conclusion of a hearing of a desegregation suit brought against Newport News School Board by parents of Negro pupils.

Hoffman told the defendants that he would permit gradual integration—in the lowest grades of the elementary and high schools—unless the Virginia General Assembly in the meatime does something "constructive" toward compliance with the Supreme Court's decree, or unless the Newport News School Board evolves a plan for integration.

The judge said that if his decree of today is suspended by action of an appellate court the effective date of integration in Newport News would be deferred one year. He said it would be unwise to shift pupils during a school term.

The jurist expressed the opinion that Newport News will not have "a great mass of integration." He expressed hope that the sensible people of this community" will work together amicably to work out the problems a[illegible]ant upon integration. Only one school in the city would be affected to any considerable extent by an integration order, he said.

Gradual Integration Ordered For Schools In Virginia City

Almond Appeals Order For Desegregated Schools

Star Tues. 2-12-57 P.1-B

Washington, D.C.

By the Associated Press

Virginia has appealed to the Supreme Court from decisions ordering an end to racial segregation in the public schools of Charlottesville and Arlington County.

1440

The United States Circuit Court at Richmond upheld the decisions last December 31.

One of them, by United States District Judge John Paul, ordered desegregation in the Charlottesville schools as of last September. United States Judge Albert Bryan ordered Arlington's elementary schools desegregated as of January 31 and the high schools next September. Both orders have been in abeyance pending appeals.

The State's Attorney General, J. Lindsay Almond, jr., filed two separate appeals with the Supreme Court. Mr. Almond said the Paul-Bryan orders raised these points:

May a Federal district court enjoin a local school board, which is an agency of the Commonwealth, and a State officer in his official capacity, when the Commonwealth has not given its consent to the suit?

Jurisdiction Question

Is there any case or controversy presented over which a Federal district court has jurisdiction?

Have Negroes seeking immediate admission to the State's white schools exhausted their State administrative remedies so as to entitle them to relief in a Federal district court?

Mr. Almond said that no court has decided that any particular Negro child, or particular group of Negro children, in the Charlottesville and Arlington County school cases had been denied the rights now guaranteed to them by the Supreme Court's decision that compulsory segregation in public schools was unconstitutional.

He said a Negro student's right not to be discriminated against "exists and must be recognized when an individual Negro child shows that he is fully qualified and desires to attend a particular school."

Proof Issue Raised

Mr. Almond said a Negro or group of Negroes "having affirmatively established the right to be admitted to or to transfer to another school, must prove the denial of that right solely because of race" before going into court.

In the Charlottesville and Arlington County cases, the Attorney General said, no Negro student had "attempted to show that he is as well situated to attend another school as the one he is now attending. . . .

"None of them has even applied for admission to another school and as far as the record will disclose, they have all volunteered to stay in the schools they are all attending. The fact that opposing counsel openly and obviously representing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People may contend otherwise makes no difference. . . .

"Not one of the Negro students has testified that he seeks or will seek admission to another school."

Deadline Held Impossible

Mr. Almond said that, in the Charlottesville case, Judge Paul had abused his discretion by issuing his order to end segregation by September, 1956.

Judge Paul, he said, "departed from the trend of decisions found in those States with heavy Negro population by ordering immediate desegregation and in so doing imposed and almost impossible task" on the city school board.

"The evidence presented in the Charlottesville case," Mr. Almond said, "conclusively showed that the school board could not desegregate the public schools within the time required by the District Court without disrupting the school system to the detriment of all the school children.

"At worst, the board should have been given a reasonable time to solve local problems and to cope with the decision in segregation cases."

Norfolk School Desegregation Hearing Opens

Mixed Classes Are Ordered by Court In Newport News

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 12 (AP).—Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman opened a hearing today on ending segregated schools in Norfolk one day after he ruled Newport News must desegregate its schools.

The judge, in a decision from the bench at the end of a one-day hearing in Newport News yesterday, held the shipbuilding city must desegregate its public schools, effective August 15. Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., said the State would appeal the decision.

Judge Hoffman said, however, he would permit gradual integration in the lowest grades of the elementary and high schools—provided the General Assembly in the meantime does something "constructive" toward compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decree, or if the Newport News School Board evolves a plan for integration.

Both the Norfolk and Newport News suits stemmed from actions filed by Negro pupils and their parents last spring, charging they were denied equal protection of the law. They asked the district court to enjoin the school boards of the two cities from separating the pupils by race.

Refused to Dismiss Suits

Judge Hoffman last month denied motions by State and local authorities to dismiss the suits. He ruled at that time the State's new pupil placement law, enacted at the September special session of the General Assembly as a key link in the administration's no-integration policy, was "unconstitutional on its face."

He noted yesterday in his opinion that the Newport News School Board had conceded it had formulated no plan for compliance with the Supreme Court's desegregation decree. He pointed out that the board logically looked to the General Assembly for guidance and that the General Assembly had enacted legislation which prevented the board from complying with the high court's decree.

"I appreciate the fact that school boards and school superintendents are in an unenviable position," he said. Under State law, the schools will be closed if the boards comply with the Supreme Court ruling. And if they do not comply, they subject themselves to the process of contempt.

Since the board had made no attempt to desegregate the schools, Judge Hoffman said, there was nothing the court could do but restrain the defendants from refusing to admit to any school under their supervision any child qualified to enter such school.

He said, however, the court can provide for gradual desegregation if good faith is shown.

Not Insurmountable

In his remarks preliminary to the decision, Judge Hoffman said the problem in Newport News "is not an entirely insurmountable one."

Only one school would be affected to any considerable extent by an integragation order, he said. That is the Walter Reed Elementary School, now attended by 523 white children.

Judge Hoffman noted that the school is on the fringe of a rapidly changing population area now becoming predominantly Negro.

If the decision is suspended by action of an appellate court, the judge said, the effective date of integragation in Newport News would be deferred one year. Judge Hoffman said it would be unwise to shift pupils during a school term.

Mr. Almond and T. Justin Moore, sr., of Richmond, who presented closing arguments, had asked for more time to begin desegregation. Attorneys for the plaintiffs argued the school board had had ample time—almost three years since the Supreme Court's decision—to make a start toward desegration.

Fear Delinquency

During yesterday's hearing, five public officials told the judge an abrupt end of racial segregation in the schools would wreck the school system and increase juvenile delinquency.

City Manager Joseph C. Biggins testified that integration would present "serious problems of economic, social and moral aspects which would undoubtedly hurt the welfare of the entire city."

Other officials who testified were Philip W. Murray, school board chairman; R. O. Nelson, superintendent of schools; Mayor Robert B. Smith and Police Chief William F. Peach.

Mr. Nelson told the court that Newport News schools have 3,605 white pupils and 5,207 Negro pupils. He said in view of the feelings of the city's leadership, there could be "no quicker way to wreck the school system than to desegregate schools abruptly. Integration now, he said, would bring "chaotic conditions and morale problems."

Judge Hoffman asked if conditions would be better if integration were delayed for three years.

"Yes," Mr. Nelson said. "The people could accommodate themselves" by that time.

U.S. JUDGE SCORES VIRGINIA BIAS LAW

Cites Obstructive Legislation in Ordering Integration of Schools in Two Cities

Thurs. 2-14-57

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., Feb. 13—A Federal judge here has come up again with a direct challenge to Virginia's legislative defense of racial segregation in public schools by ordering Norfolk and Newport News to inaugurate mixed classes of whites and Negroes by Aug. 15.

Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman, who made his rulings yesterday and Monday, took sharp issue with the political leadership of the state. He scored the General Assembly, which in special session last September enacted laws freezing all pupils in present segregated classes, for passing "obstructive" legislation. He also has attacked the commonwealth's officialdom for "ab-

Judge Hoffman said that local school officials had endeavored to draft plans to conform with the Supreme Court's ruling outlawing segregation, but that the General Assembly had "put everything in reverse."

His latest criticism of Virginia's legislative defiance of the high tribunal was in keeping with his charge last month, in denying motions by state and local authorities for dismissal of the Norfolk and Newport News cases, that the Virginia pupil placement law was "unconstitutional on its face."

Consider Plans

In both cases, Judge Hoffman offered to modify his directive to the two cities if school board officials presented suitable plans for gradual integration.

His recommendation for gradual desegregation in Newport News would involve the first and eighth grades. In Norfolk he suggested the first, seventh and tenth grades.

In both cases, the judge emphasized that gradual compliance was all he wanted and was specifically what he would approve. He also conceded the possibility of a redistricting of school areas to minimize desegregation.

"There is no particular law which prevents reasonable reallocation of school areas for geographical purposes," he said.

In his renewed attack on the lawmakers of the state, Judge Hoffman charged that the "legislature has made whipping boys out the school boards and the division superintendents."

He said that if the General Assembly had not enacted its pupil-assignment plan in defiance of the Supreme Court mandate, the Norfolk school board, for example, "could have come in with a plan and had no trouble."

Judge Hoffman's ruling this week were the latest developments in suits against local school boards that were filed in Norfolk and Newport News in the spring of 1956.

The first test in the suits came last month when attorneys for the Norfolk School Board asked a dismissal of the suit against them.

On Jan. 11 Judge Hoffman ruled against the dismissal plea. In his Norfolk opinion yesterday, the Judge said, "The problem in Norfolk could be readily solved with a minimum of mixing of races if the local school board and its able superintendent were afforded any reasonable degree of cooperation from the General Assembly."

Can't Push Integration, Editor Dabney Warns

WASHINGTON, Feb. 26—Virginius Dabney, editor of the Richmond (Va.) Times-Dispatch, told 5,000 secondary school principals today the South cannot be forced into school integration.

He reported "absolutely no integration" in nine Southern states since the Supreme Court decision of three years ago. He warned these states would choose no schools rather than desegregate racially. He listed the states as Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

Dabney

Dabney urged the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which spearheads the integration movement, to "back up," "consolidate its gains" and refrain from doing "irreparable harm to the cause of Negro advancement and to interracial amity."

He further told the National Association of Secondary School Principals that the "capital of the Negro race" has moved from Atlanta to New York City.

This was the result of school integration, he said, and it left a fission between Negro and white leaders in the South. No longer do leaders of the two races sit down together to talk over problems, he said.

"Hardly any avenues of communication exist in most areas," said Dabney. "The NAACP leadership has committed all Negroes so completely to its drive for total integration that any white who dissents is stigmatized as an enemy of the Negro race."

Dabney assailed the school integration methods which he said are being used in New York City.

"COMPELLING THEM"

"They are transporting children all the way across town in New York, away from the neighborhood schools which they have been reaching conveniently on foot these many years, and compelling them to enroll with members of the opposite race," he said.

"All this is being done at great inconvenience and expense, on the theory that a modest degree of integration is not enough. We must have total and complete integration everywhere and at once, it would seem. The folly and absurdity of this strikes me as obvious."

Dabney said the one argument influencing most Southern whites against integration is that it might lead to "mongrelization." Regardless of Northern declaration that this is unlikely, Dabney added "any visitor to most of the countries of South and Central America with his eyes open would be likely to reach the opposite conclusion."

Virginia Appeals In School Fight

Tues. 2-12-57 P. 1-B

Washington, D.C.

By Jean White

Staff Reporter

Virginia appealed to the U. S. Supreme Court yesterday to reverse lower court decisions ordering Arlington and Charlottesville to desegregate their public schools by specific deadlines.

In separate appeals petitions, State Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond Jr. asked the High Court to review the recent decision of the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals.

On Dec. 31, the 3-judge Circuit Court upheld rulings by two Federal District Court judges, who had set down school desegregation dates for the two communities. Two of the deadlines have passed, with the orders stayed for appeals through the court hierarchy.

Arguments Listed

Almond's petitions to the Supreme Court raise essentially the same points the State mustered for its unsuccessful argument in the lower courts.

He argued that:

- A local school board, as an agency of the Commonwealth, can't be sued without the consent of the State.
- Since the Negro pupils in the cases have not applied for admission to another school or attempted to show they are "well situated" to attend another school, there is no proof they have been denied their rights because of race.
- Negroes seeking immediate admission to white schools have not exhausted their state administrative appeals.

On the third point, Almond did not use Virginia's new pupil assignment plan as a defense. The Arlington and Charlottesville cases entered the lower courts before the General Assembly enacted its anti-integration program. However, the placement law is part of the cases now before a Federal judge in Newport News and Norfolk.

If the Supreme Court refuses to review the orders, the lower court decisions will stand.

Both Deadlines Passed

Under a decision of Federal District Court Judge Albert V. Bryan, Arlington was to begin desegregating its elementary schools on Jan. 31 and its junior and senior high schools by next September. In Charlottesville, Judge John Paul ordered a start toward school desegregation in all grades as of last September. The appeals stayed these orders.

Observers see little chance that the Supreme Court, which handed down its momentous school segregation decision May 17, 1954, would reverse the lower courts or even grant the review.

But the foes of integration will be buying time and fighting a delaying action by exhausting all legal means to forestall school desegregation.

Attorneys for the Negro students in the Arlington and Charlottesville cases now have 30 days to file an answer in opposition to the State's request for a review by the Supreme Court. Once both sides are in, the nine justices then will consider both petitions and decide whether to deny the request or consent to review the cases.

EDITOR MISQUOTED IN SPEECH ON BIAS

Times 3-3-57

New York

Virginius Dabney's address on school integration at a session of the convention of the National Association of Secondary School Principals in Washington last Tuesday was inaccurately reported in The New York Times last Wednesday.

Mr. Dabney, editor of The Richmond Times-Dispatch in Virginia, corrected the misquotations in a letter to this newspaper.

Wed. 3-3-57

"The second paragraph of your account contains most of the inaccuracies," his letter said. "I am said by you to have 'warned that these [nine] states would choose no schools rather than desegregate.' You listed 'these states' as Virginia, North Carolina, Tennessee, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana.

"I nowhere said, or thought of saying, that all nine of these states would shut down their schools, rather than integrate their schools. On the contrary, I said twice (on the first and last pages of my manuscript) that 'several' of those states' would do this.

"You quote me as reporting 'absolutely no integration' in these nine Southern states, whereas I said, as part of the same sentence, that there was none 'except for the much-disputed entry of about a dozen Negroes into the Clinton, Tenn., high school.'

"Where I am quoted as saying that the 'capital of the Negro race' was moved from Atlanta to New York, you make me say that 'this was the result of integration.' I said nothing of the kind.

"What I did say was that the white leaders of the South were 'unable to deliver' the gains which the Southern Negro leaders were seeking, that this caused the latter to 'turn to their racial compatriots in the North' and that the 'capital' was then 'moved.'"

Va. Pupil Placement Law Confusing But Not Amusing

Journal and Guide

RICHMOND, Va. — Virginia's new Pupil Placement Law is confusing, but not in any way amusing.

The law actually represents an attempt by the state to forestall integration of schools by miles and miles of red tape.

Sat. 1-12-57

BUT THE LAW is already being aired in court and its fate will be known when decisions are handed down in the Norfolk and Newport News integration suits.

P. 20

The Placement law was not a part of the considerations in the Arlington and Charlottesville cases. In these cases, a federal Appeals Court this week ruled that the actions brought by parents in those cities were "not harsh or unreasonable but merely require that the (schools integration law be observed and discrimination on the ground of race be eliminated."

THE PLACEMENT law gives the state at least a 3 and a half month "stall" period when it is opposed.

Norfolk Va.

Any person objecting to the law would have to wait at least that long in order to get his case before the courts.

BEHIND IT ALL is the state's new Pupil Placement Board, which-as of Jan. 1 — had the power to assign all public school students throughout the state.

Under the Placement law parents or guardians who wish to send thier children to a public school must apply to the Pupil Placement Boards on forms or applications which will be distributed to local school boards and division superintendents.

FOR THE PRESENT, students will go to the same school they are now attending. Only those pupils transferring from one community to another, or those who graduate from a primary to a secondary school, must apply to the placement board.

If the parents or guardians are dissatisfied with the placement board's action in assigning their child the appeal procedure works this way:

BOTH PARENTS, if living, or the parent or guardian, must file a written protest with the placement board within 15 days of the child's assignment.

The board then must hold, or cause to be held, a hearing within 30 days after receiving the complaint. Each case must be considered separately.

THE BOARD must give its decision within 30 days after the hearing, and cite the reasons for its conclusions. If the parents are still not satisfied they may obtain a review of the board's decision by filing a written application for a review by the Governor. This must be submitted within 15 days after the board's decision.

The Governor will then set a hearing for the case. Within 15 days after he has received the petition he must give a decision, either enrolling the child in the school originally designated or in another school, whichever he thinks proper.

* * *

THE GOVERNOR'S decision must be in writing, and he must list the findings upon which his conclusions were based.

The parent, if still dissatisfied, may then obtain a judicial review by filing in his locality's Circuit Court a written petition within 15 days after the Governor's decision.

THE LAW says that not only parents, but "any interested person," may appeal to the Governor or to the courts. "Any interested person" may also testify or give evidence at the hearing outlined in the act.

An interested person presumably would mean any parent or guardian who has children attending the particular school involved. Hearings, therefore, could last for days.

Del. Robert Whitehead, anti-organization Democratic leader from Nelson County, said Saturday he wasn't surprised by Hoffman's ruling. He said it answered predictions by 28 opponents of the legislation in the General Assembly that "it would be thrown out by the courts."

Placement Board Says Job Goes On

Tues. 1-15-57

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 14 (AP) Virginia's pupil placement board today announced it will continue to function under provisions of legislation enacted last fall.

Washington D.C.

The 3-man board and its counsel issued a brief formal statement to the press shortly after conferring with Gov. Thomas B. Stanley. Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman last Friday ruled the pupil placement act was unconstitutional on its face.

In its statement today, the Board said Hoffman's opinion had come to the group's attention and added:

"Unless and until lawfully prevented, the Board intends, in what it considers it to be in the public interest, to carry out its duties and responsibilities under the pupil placement act, in strict accordance with its terms."

Meanwhile, the Board continued to study the approach it must take in carrying out the duties imposed upon it by the General Assembly. Today's meeting was scheduled before Hoffman's ruling.

Hoffman's views were contained in a ruling that denied motions to dismiss desegregation suits brought by Negro plaintiffs against Newport News and Norfolk school officials. Hoffman did not rule on the merits of the cases, which will be argued next month.

Va. pupil placement laws void

Afro-American Sat. 1-19-57 Baltimore Md.

NORFOLK, Va. — Virginia's new pupil placement law is "unconstitutional on its face," ruled U.S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman, Friday, in the first Federal court test of the litigation.

Judge Hoffman, who had previously ruled unconstitutional a plan to lease state parks, rather than integrate them under the law, was forthright in his denunciation of state attempts to maintain segregation in spite of the U.S. Supreme Court's rulings outlawing it.

In this latest instance, he issued a 12,000-word decision reviewing Virginia's actions since the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

THIS LEGISLATON, the judge said, in denying a state motion to dismiss desegregation suits against the school boards of Norfolk and Newport News, is "directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court."

The placement law provides that pupils should be assigned to schools by a three-member board. Such assignments could be appealed to the governor and to the state courts.

Although race is not mentioned in the law, the board must make assignments so as to keep "an efficient" system of schools. The word efficient is described elsewhere as meaning segregated schools.

* * *

THE LAW is part of an overall program, the key point of which is the withholding of state funds from integrated schools.

In holding the law unconstitutional, Judge Hoffman rebuked Governor Stanley for his consistent policy of advocating "no integration anywhere."

Said the judge:

"Manifestly, the governor of Virginia has suggested that there shall be no integration of races in the public schools of Virginia, irrespective of how slight it may be.

"The question remains: Has Virginia now enacted a constitutional act which is nondiscriminatory in nature and hence not in violation of the 14th Amendment of the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court?

"...I MUST answer this question in the negative as it is my firm conviction that the pupil placement plan is unconstitutional on its face.

"The pattern is plain. The legislature has adopted procedures to defeat the Supreme Court decision."

He declared that the plan "is directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court ...where it declared 'the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional' and 'all provisions of Federal, state and local law requiring or permitting such discrimination must yield to this principle.'"

THE DECISION by Judge Hoffman does not mean, he said, that colored pupils are automatically permitted to enter any school they choose.

Local school boards may pass upon individual applications, he said, and so long as the particular child is not barred from school solely because of race, "there is no inherent right of any child to attend any particular school in which children of another race are in attendance.

14d(1)

"But as long as the school boards maintain an announced policy refusing to consider the applications separately and take no steps toward removing the requirements of segregation in the schools, there appears nothing any court may do other than enjoin the violation of constitutional rights in the operation of schools by authorities and, in the event of continued violation, proceed by way of contempt."

JUDGE HOFFMAN'S ruling in this case held little surprise. After the state had argued its motion to dismiss the suits on Nov. 17, he declared: "If I had to rule on it today, I would throw it out the window."

The state cannot appeal Judge Hoffman's denial of the dismissed motion, but his decision indicates the outcome of the desegregation suits scheduled for trial Feb. 11.

Most state officials had no comment on Judge Hoffman's decision other than to admit it was no surprise. They pointed out however, that appeals procedures probably would keep Virginia schools segregated for at least another year.

THE DECISION has significance in the Charlottesville and Arlington cases. The U.S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals recently upheld the lower court decision ordering desegregation in those two communities, but did not rule on the pupil placement plan.

State officials who are planning an appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court had hoped to use the pupil placement law as a further defense in the Charlottesville and Arlington cases.

The Federal District judges in those cases need not follow Judge Hoffman's ruling, but observers feel they will be persuaded by it. If Judge Hoffman's ruling is sustained by an appeals court, the other District Judges would be bound by it.

Judge Hoffman Denies State Plea For Dismissal of Integration Suits

P. 1

By Robert E. Baker
Staff Reporter

Virginia's new pupil placement law was declared "unconstitutional on its face" yesterday in its first test in Federal courts.

United States District Judge Walter E. Hoffman said in Norfolk the legislation is "directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court."

In a 12,00-word decision which reviewed Virginia's actions since the Supreme Court's desegregation decision, Hoffman denied a State motion to dismiss desegregation suits against the school boards of Norfolk and Newport News.

What Law Provides

The placement law provides that pupils shall be assigned to schools by a State three-member board. Such assignments could be appealed to the Governor and to the State courts.

Race is not mentioned in the law, but the board must make assignments so as to keep an "efficient" system of schools. The word efficient is described elsewhere as meaning segregated schools. The law is part of an overall program, key point of which is the withholding of State school funds from integrated schools.

State and local authorities had argued that the pupil placement law, enacted by the General Assembly in September, afforded a course of appeal which Negroes should use before turning to Federal courts.

The Negroes had argued they were not compelled to try such appeals because they offered no actual relief.

The state cannot appeal Hoffman's denial of the dismissed motion, but his decision indicates the outcome of the desegregation suits scheduled for tril Feb. 11. The state will use the decision as a basis for appeal following the ultimate decision, if necessary, said Attorney Generl J. Lindsay Almond Jr.

Hoffman's decision held little surprise. After the state had argued its motion to dismiss the suits on Nov. 17, Hoffman had said: "If I had to rule on it today, I would throw it out the window."

Quotes Gov. Stanley

In throwing out the law yesterday, Hoffman reviewed the role of Gov. Thomas B. Stanley advocating "no integration anywhere." Said Hoffman:

"Manifestly, the Governor of Virginia has suggested that there shall be no integration of races in the public schools of Virginia, irrespective of how slight it may be.

"The question remains: Has Virginia now enacted a constitutional act which is non-discriminatory in nature and hence not in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court?

". . . I must answer this question in the negative as it is my firm conviction that the pupil placement plan is unconstitutional on its face."

Hoffman, former Republican leader and prominent Norfolk attorney, reviewed steps taken by a constitutional convention and the General Assembly aimed at keeping segregation, and said:

"The pattern is plain. The Legislature has adopted procedures to defeat the Supreme Court decision."

He said the pupil placement plan "is directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court . . . where it declared 'the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional' and 'all provisions of Federal State or local law requiring or permitting such discrimination must yield to this principle'."

No Automatic Entry

Hoffman stressed his decision did not automatically permit the Negroes involved to enter any school they choose. Local school boards may passs upon individual applications, he said, and so long as the particular child is not barred from school solely because of race, "there is no inherent right of any child to attend any particular school in which children of another race are in attendance."

He added: "But as long as the school boards maintain an announced policy refusing to consider the applications separately and take no steps removing the requirements of segregation in the schools, there appears nothing any court may do other than to enjoin the violation of constitutional rights in the operation of schools by authorities and, in the event of continued violation, proceed by way of contempt."

The decision has significance in the Charlottesville and Arlington cases. The U. S. Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals recently upheld lower court decisions ordering desegregation in those two communities, but did not rule on the pupil placement plan. State officials, who are planning an appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court, had hoped to use the pupil placement law as a further defense in the Arlington and Charlottesville cases.

The Federal District judges in those cases need not follow Hoffman's ruling, but observers feel they will be persuaded by it. If the Hofman ruling is sustained by the appeals court, the other District judges would be bound by it.

State Officials Silent

Most State officials had no comment on Hoffman's decision other than to say privately it was no surprise. But they pointed out appeals procedures probably would keep Virginia schools segregated for at least another year.

Opponents of State program, however, were more vocal, though also not surprised.

Del. John Webb of Fairfax said the decision justifies the stand of opponents during General Assembly debate that the program "was meaningless and would be held unconstitutional by the courts."

Alabama's Assignment Law And The Virginia Ruling

(From The Montgomery Advertiser)

The ruling of a Virginia federal judge, U. S. District Judge Walter E. Hoffman, that Virginia's pupil placement law is "unconstitutional on its face" casts a cloud over a similar law in Alabama — the pupil assignment law.

Alabama's law, the first major legislative effort to thwart forceful integration in state public schools, grants to local boards of education broad powers for assigning pupils to schools after consideration of a variety of factors, including intellectual capacity, of the child, social background, the possible psychological effects on him and other children, etc.

Although openly proposed as a way of defeating the Supreme Court's race-mixing order, the Alabama law makes no mention of race as a basis for assignment.

We have no legal understanding of the fine points of similarity between the Virginia and Alabama laws, but they seem basically the same. Judge Hoffman, considering the legislative intent behind the Virginia act said: "The pattern is plain. The legislature has adopted procedures to defeat" the Supreme Court decision.

Should the Hoffman ruling be upheld, Alabama's counterpart would seem mortally wounded. Still untested of course is the state's "freedom of choice" amendment and act, but if legislative intent is to be the basis for invalidation, this measure too would seem in doubt. The Alabama legislature which convenes in May would seem to have its work cut out, plugging the holes.

Pupil Assignment Plan Declared Unconstitutional

NORFOLK, Va. — United States District Judge Walter E. Hoffman Friday declared unconstitutional the Virginia pupil assignment plan designed by the Virginia General Assembly to keep public schools in the state rigidly segregated.

The legislation, Judge Hoffman said, is "directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court."

Judge Hoffman denied a state motion to dismiss desegregation suits against the school boards of Norfolk and Newport News.

The placement plan provides that pupils shall be assigned to schools by a state three-member board. Such assignments could be appealed to the Governor and the state courts.

The board is required to make assignments so as to keep an "efficient" system of schools. The word efficient is described in the law as meaning segregated schools.

The law is part of an overall program aimed at keeping public schools in Virginia segregated. The key point of the plan is the withholding of state school funds from integrated schools.

GEN. ASSEMBLY

State and local authorities had argued that the pupil assignment law, enacted by the General Assembly in September, would keep colored people out of the Federal courts on questions of racial segregation in the public schools by requiring them first to exhaust their state administrative remedies in a squirrel-cage procedure.

Attorneys for the colored children and their parents in the two cases contended they were not compelled to try such appeals because they offered no relief.

In deciding the case, Judge Hoffman reviewed the role of Governor Thomas B. Stanley in advocating "no integration anywhere." Said Judge Hoffman:

"Manifestly the Governor of Virginia has suggested that there shall be no integration of races in the public schools of Virginia, irrespective of how slight it may be.

"The question remains: Has Virginia now enacted a constitutional act which is non-discriminatory in nature and hence not in violation of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court?

". . . I must answer this question in the negative as it is my firm conviction that the pupil placement plan is unconstitutional on its face."

Judge Hoffman, former Republican leader and prominent Norfolk attorney, reviewed steps taken by a constitutional convention and the General Assembly aimed at keeping segregation and said:

"The pattern is plain. The legislature has adopted procedures to defeat the Supreme Court decision."

He said the pupil placement plan "is directly in the teeth of the language of the Supreme Court . . . where it declared the fundamental principle that racial discrimination in public education is unconstitutional and 'all provisions of Federal, state or local law requiring or permitting such discrimination must yield to this principle'."

Judge Hoffman said his decision did not automatically permit the colored children involved to enter any school they choose. Local school boards may pass upon individual applications, he said, and so long as a particular child is not barred from school solely because of color, "there is no inherent right of any particular child to attend any particular school in which children of another race are in attendance."

Attorneys for the two school boards had asked that the anti-segregation suits be dismissed on the ground that the program offered the colored plaintiffs administrative remedies they should seek before going to the Federal courts.

Judge Hoffman's opinion did not decide the cases which will be heard Feb. 11-13.

Judge Hoffman was born in Jersey City, N. J., 46 years ago. He attended the University of Pennsylvania, where he played football and attended law schools at the College of William and Mary and Washington and Lee University.

He was one of the first Virginia Republicans to back President Eisenhower. He was named a Federal judge in 1954 with the support of Republican and Democratic leaders.

The plaintiffs in the two cases are represented by Spottswood W. Robinson, III, and Oliver W. Hill, of Richmond, and other counsel for the NAACP.

Judge Orders Segregation In Virginia Area Ended

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Sun. 7-28-57

ALEXANDRIA, Va., July 27 (AP) —U.S. District Judge Albert V. Bryan today ordered that segregation of public schools in Arlington County, Va., be abolished, beginning in September.

He also rejected a request by the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People that his original desegregation order be amended to specify that Arlington students need not use the state's new pupil placement law.

Effect of the ruling is to leave intact, with minor changes, the injunction he granted July 31, 1956, restraining the Arlington School Board from denying students admission because of race.

Virginia Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. earlier had asked Bryan to withhold enforcement of the Arlington decree until there is a Supreme Court ruling on the placement law.

Bryan ruled, however, the right to an injunction has already been established in the Arlington case.

"Consideration of administrative remedies (such as the placement law) will not again be reached unless and until petition is made to enforce the injunction," he said.

"Plainly, therefore, commencement of the restraint made in the decree should not be postponed to a determination of the validity of the administrative remedy."

If and when there are complaints of violations of his original injunction against the school board, Judge Bryan said "the court will then inquire if the complainant has first submitted, or has adequate means of submitting, his grievance for correction administratively."

At that time, he said, the court "will make such further order as is appropriate. In this way, specificity and precision will be given to each complaint, it will be individualized, and it will be appraised in its own peculiar environment, of course in the light, too, of the regulations and precedents then at hand."

In rejecting the NAACP request to say that students need not use the placement law, Judge Bryan said "the sufficiency of the act has not been previously an issue in this suit and is now advanced prematurely."

One minor change made by Judge Bryan in his original decree updated specified times for desegregation of Arlington County schools. Where he originally ordered an end to segregation in elementary schools by last February and secondary schools by this September, the revision now makes his edict effective in both levels this coming September.

Attorneys argued the case today after NAACP lawyers filed a written motion asking that Negro children be admitted to Arlington County white schools in the September term of school.

In 1956 Bryan ordered that Arlington's elementary schools be integrated as of last February and that the junior and senior high schools be integrated in September.

His ruling was upheld by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals. The Supreme Court declined to review the case, which had the effect of upholding the circuit and district courts.

McKeldin Asks Clearer School Responsibility

Post + Times Herald Washington, D.C.

WILLIAMSBURG, Va., June 24 (AP)—Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin of Maryland called today for a clear definition of the role to be played in public education by each unit of government—local, state and Federal.

Dec. 6-25-57

He sugested this breakdown:

Local governments should be responsible for primary and secondary schooling.

The state should concentrate on college and university education.

And the Federal Government should assist in financing and coordinating "the great research projects of national and international interest."

McKeldin gave his views in a prepared speech during a round-table discussion on education at the National Governors' Conference which began here today.

Delay Granted Charlottesville In School Case

Desegregaton to Await Ruling By High Court on Pupil Placement

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 26 (Spl.)—Federal Judge John Paul agreed today to delay desegregation of Charlottesville schools until the United States Supreme Court rules on the validity of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act.

But at the same time, Judge Paul enjoined school authorities from requiring parents to file applications through the state's pupil placement machinery.

"No pupil white or colored," he directed, can be denied admission to Charlottesville schools because of failure to sign applications for the state Pupil Placement Board.

Judge Paul announced his decision after a closed conference in his chambers here with counsel for the city and state and with attorneys for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP wanted an order to desegregate schools this September.

Arlington Looks On

Sitting in as observers at today's hearing were attorneys representing both sides in a parallel action involving Arlington schools.

They will go before Federal Judge Albert V. Bryan in Fifth District Federal Court in Alexandria at 10 a.m. Saturday to argue a NAACP motion for an order directing full desegregation of Arlington schools this September. Here as observers were James H. Simmonds, counsel for the Arlington School Boards, and Edwin C. Brown, attorney for Negro children seeking admission to white schools.

If the United States Supreme Court holds the Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional, Judge Paul said he will require desegregation in Charlottesville schools with the start of the following school semester.

This means Virginia probably will not face a desegregation showdown before next February at the earliest. The High Court is now in recess and won't sit until October, a month after the start of school.

Nearly a year ago Judge Paul handed down a decree ordering Charlottesville schools desegregated by September, 1956.

The order was stayed during appeals through to the Supreme Court, which upheld Judge Paul.

Pupil Placement Act

During the appeal route, however, Virginia's General Assembly passed the Pupil Placement Act—a main prop in Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's program to preserve segregated schools. The act took away assignment powers from local school officials and made them powerless to comply with integregation orders.

The Pupil Placement Act was not at stake in the original Arlington and Charlottesville cases.

But it has twice been declared unconstitutional itself. An appeal is now before the Supreme Court.

The State Supreme Court of Appeals has before it an Appeal in the case of a Fairfax County mother whose two sons were expelled from school in April because she refused to fill out the placement forms.

Theo T. DeFebio has challenged the constitutionality of the act and asked that her sons be reinstated.

Almond Says G.O.P. Pupil Segregation Plan Won't Work

Republicans to Act Today At Convention on School Issue

Sat. 7-6-57

By a Star Staff Correspondent

ROANOKE, Va., July 6.—Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, jr., today declared that segregated schools cannot be preserved with pupil assignment legislation which Republicans plan to advocate in the gubernatorial election this fall.

The attorney general, who is expected to emerge from the primary as the Democratic nominee for Governor, issued a statement in Richmond as the State G. O. P. convention here was ready to adopt a platform indorsing pupil assignment.

It was the first time Mr. Almond had commented publicly on pupil assignment, and his comments obviously were directed at Republican State Senator Ted Dalton, who was due to become his party's nominee for Governor later today. Senator Dalton repeatedly has advocated a pupil assignment plan similar to North Carolina's and calls it the best method to keep white schools white.

Sees People Misled

Mr. Almond said, "Anyone who professes to have a solution to the problem will be misleading the people of Virginia. I know of no position more inconsistent with reality than to assert that an assignment plan will preserve our system of separate schools."

He said it was "utterly misleading" to tell people that North Carolina's assignment plan has been tried out and tested in the courts. In litigation that went all the way to the Supreme Court, judges refused to hold the North Carolina plan unconstitutional on its face. But North Carolina laws may be subjected to further tests if individual students feel assignments are unjust or based on race.

When asked if he had a specific plan to preserve segregation, Mr. Almond said he would have something to say about that later.

Mr. Almond said his remarks applied to local or State administered pupil assignment—"neither one can preserve segregation."

Favors Pupil Assignment

The Resolutions Committee at the Republican convention was ready to recommend pupil assignment as part of the party platform which comes up for adoption today. By a vote of 6-4, the committee informally decided last night that the platform should call for an end to Gov. Stanley's "cut-off the funds, close the schools program" and the substitution of a local pupil assignment program "similar to the one approved by the people of Virginia as a part of the Gray Commission recommendation and similar to the one which has withstood the tests to date in the State of North Carolina."

The four dissenting committee members, who wanted a stiffer line of resistence against intergration, indicated they would try to get support for their views before the full convention today.

William Moss of Fairfax County, representing the Tenth District, moved to incorporate the pupil assignment plank in the platform.

"I believe pupil assignment is advocated by a majority of the people of Virginia," said Edwin G. Shaeffer of the Fifth District. "This massive resistance plan of the Democrats is going to fail. You can condemn the Supreme Court all you want to, but it is the law."

See Bright Future

In a speech prepared for delivery today, Representative Broyhill, Republican of the Tenth District, forecast a bright future for the G.O.P. in the South. He said Southern States were beginning to recognize that the Republican Party "now stands for the principles which Virginia and her sister States south of the Mason and Dixon Line cherish and hold close to their hearts."

Senator Carlson, Republican of Kansas, told a $10-a-plate G.O.P. dinner last night that Virginia can elect four or five Republican congressmen "within a reasonably short length of time if we have the will to carry forward an aggressive campaign. It seems to me the greatest contribution which Republicans can make to the future success of the party in this State is the election of a Republican governor in 1957."

Conviction Of Negroes On School Issue Upset

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Jan. 1-22-57

Parents Balked At Sending Children to Inferior School

RICHMOND, Va., Jan. 21 (AP) — The State Supreme Court ruled today that a group of King William County Negro parents could not be punished for failure to send their children to an inferior segregated school.

The seven-man tribunal overturned a lower, Circuit Court decision which convicted the parents of violating the compulsory attendance law.

The high court said it has long been an established principle of law that the refusal to provide equal educational opportunities and advtanges to members of one race constitutes a violation of the United States Constitution.

The case developed in 1952 when the Beverly Allen School for Negroes was closed at West Point and the pupils were transferred to the Hamilton Holmes High School 18 miles away in King William County.

Parents of some of the pupils balked at the arrangement and refused to send their children to Holmes. They petitioned for admission to the West Point White School, but the move was rejected.

When the parents kept their children out of school, authorities brought suit in the Circuit Court and the parents were convicted of disregarding the compulsory attendance law.

In overturning the lower court, the Supreme Court said the requirement that the children be sent to a school of "materially poorer facilities and educational advantages on penalty of prosecution" was an unlawful application of the attendance law and a denial of the constitutional guarantee for equal protection of the law. The opinion added:

"It has long been settled law that the refusal of a state agency to afford members of one race solely because of their race educational facilities and advantages substantially equal to those afforded persons of any other race is a denial of the equal protection of the law, being violative of the 14th Amendment."

The court reaffirmed the constitutionality of the school attendance law, but added:

"Here, however, the section has been unconstitutionally applied. Application of a criminal statue so that it brings about or results in inequality of treatment to the two races is not justified."

Virginia Must Choose

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Jan. 1-27-57

The significance of Senator Ted Dalton's decision to accept the Republican nomination for Governor of Virginia is that it will give voters of the Old Dominion a chance to save their public schools. It is generally taken for granted that Mr. Dalton's willingness to run is equivalent to his nomination at the GOP State convention now in session at Roanoke. His capture of 45 per cent of the popular vote when he ran four years ago makes him the strongest candidate his party could name, and his leadership toward moderation and common sense in connection with the school issue makes his nomination almost imperative.

Senator Dalton joined the issue in his statement announcing his availability. He decided affirmatively, he said, because he believes it his duty "to fight for the 800,000 school children of Virginia against the cut-off-the-funds school program of the Democratic leadership." The Byrd organization, which is expected to nominate Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, is committed to letting the public school system go down the drain in preference to any compromise on segregation. In these circumstances the campaign can scarcely be a typical contest between the Democratic and Republican Parties. Rather, it will be a fight to determine the future of education in Virginia.

Mr. Dalton has made plain that he is not an "integrationist." His preference is for separate schools for white and Negro children, but he is not willing to see the public schools destroyed in order to cling to the carcass of a dead policy. He recognizes that desegregation is now required by the law of the land and that Virginia must move toward giving effect to that law. Instead of fighting to the last ditch against the Supreme Court's anti-segregation decisions, he favors a locally administered pupil-assignment plan that would meet the Court's requirements.

As we understand Mr. Dalton's attitude toward the schools, it resembles Lincoln's toward the Union. He would save the schools segregated or he would save them integrated, but in any event he insists that they must be saved. This is a rational attitude which any citizen can understand, and if the Democratic Party in Virginia persists in taking the extremist view it is difficult to believe that the people will give it a mandate to liquidate public education.

Considering Mr. Dalton's courageous stand on the school issue, it is most unfortunate that he has signed the report of the Virginia Senate's Committee on Courts of Justice calling on other states to join the Old Dominion's bankrupt gesture for "interposition." The report contends that the states did not surrender their right to maintain segregated schools when they created the Federal Government and that "interposition" to defeat the Supreme Court's rulings in the school cases is therefore justified. This naive disregard of our constitutional history, especially the Fourteenth Amendment, gives a fairyland quality to the great debate that is going on in the South.

Mr. Dalton's identification with this report tends to cloud the very issue that he has been trying to clarify in regard to Virginia's public schools. His explanation cannot be said to have lifted the confusion caused by his vote. But he has rendered a great service to the people of Virginia in defining the gravity of the decision they must now make as to the future of their schools.

Court Upholds Negro Parents In School Case

Evening Star Washington, D.C. Jan. 21-57

RICHMOND, Jan. 21 (AP). — The State Supreme Court ruled today that a group of King William County Negro parents could not be punished for failure to send their children to an inferior segregated school.

The seven-man tribunal overturned a lower, circuit court decision which convicted the parents of violating the compulsory attendance law.

The high court said it has long been an established principle of law that the refusal to provide equal educational opportunities and advantages to members of one race constitutes a violation of the United States constitution.

The case developed in 1952 when the Beverly Allen School for Negroes was closed at West Point and the pupils were transferred to the Hamilton Holmes High School 18 miles away in King William County.

Balked at Arrangement

Parents of some of the pupils balked at the arrangement and refused to send their children to Holmes. They petitioned for admission to the West Point white school, but the move was rejected.

When the parents kept their children out of school, authorities brought suit in the circuit court and the parent were convicted of disregarding the compulsory attendance law.

In overturning the lower court, the Supreme Court said the requirement that the children be sent to a school of "materially poorer facilities and educational advantages on penalty of prosecution" was an unlawful application of the attendance law and a denial of the constitutional guarantee for equal protection of the law.

Law Called Settled

The opinion added:

"It has long been settled law that the refusal of a State agency to afford members of one race solely because of their race educational facilities and advantages substantially equal to those afforded persons of any other race is a denial of the equal protection of the law, being violative of the 14th amendment."

The court reaffirmed the constitutionality of the school attendance law, but added:

"Here, however, the section has been unconstitutionally applied. Application of a criminal statute so that it brings about or results in inequality of treatment to the two races is not justified."

The high court had the case under consideration for more than a year.

On February 5, 1953, the King William Circuit Court convicted James Dobbins of failing to send a child to school, fined him $50 and sentenced him to jail for 30 days.

Negroes Lose Virginia Ruling

Post-Herald Washington, D.C. Jan. 7-27-57

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 26 (AP) — Federal Judge John Paul today delayed start of desegregation in Charlottesville's public schools pending a final ruling on Virginia's pupil placement law.

At the same time he restrained Charlottesville school officials from requiring any pupil to apply for placement as a requirement for attending school.

The court's action obviously pleased State Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., his special assistant, Henry Wickham, and former Gov. John S. Battle, counsel for the defendant school officials. Plainly disappointed were Spottswood W. Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, who had argued vainly to have the Negro children admitted to white schools this Fall.

The effect of today's action denying Robinson's motion asking that the Negro pupils be admitted to white schools this Fall is that Charlottesville's schools will remain segregated at least until the January, 1958, semester.

Byrd Renews Integration Fight

Star P. 1

Washington, D.C.

Assails Court On School Issue

NORFOLK, Va., May 10 (AP).—Senator Byrd, Democrat of Virginia, says he hopes "massive resistance throughout the South" will persuade the Supreme Court to "see the error of its ways" and to revise its decision outlawing school segregation.

"This would be in keeping with the freedoms of our great constitutional democracy," Virginia's senior senator told the annual banquet meeting of the Hampton Roads Maritime Association here last night.

Senator Byrd singled out for special criticism Federal Judge Walter Hoffman, who has ruled Virginia's new pupil placement law unconstitutional. He said Judge Hoffman's comments during the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation hearings were "an exhibition which does a disservice to the entire judicial system."

Senator Byrd said Virginia, one of the Southern States which has chosen a course of "massive resistance," reserves to itself the right to defy the Supreme Court, "so long as we do so without violence or attempt to overthrow the Government."

And he indicated it is of tremendous importance that Virginia hold the line against desegregation since the State has become "the first battleground in the fight against mixing the races in public schools."

Senator Byrd said "the first onslaught" of the Federal Government and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has fallen on Virginia "because they think our communities are divided."

He said he believes "integration cannot be enforced in a majority of Virginia communities. . . . I do not believe that it is favored in any of them."

In one of his most vigorous speeches yet on the segregation issue, Senator Byrd sharply attacked Judge Hoffman. He charged that the judge in statements from the bench at a preliminary hearing of the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation suits last November, displayed "arrogance and prejudice" and made "bombastic and political statements."

Senator Byrd cited specifically Judge Hoffman's statement from the bench that he (Hoffman) was inclined to "throw the whole case out of the window" and that "the integration problem will never be resolved in Virginia until we have a different political leadership."

The latter remark, Senator Byrd said, "evidently had reference to the coming campaign when the effort will be made to elect a Republican governor of Virginia."

Senator Byrd said Judge Hoffman "Must have known that he was dealing with a very explosive subject and that such a display of arrogance and prejudice from the bench could not fail to cause bitter resentment and inflame public opinion . . . to decide before hearing arguments and make bombastic and political statements from the bench is not the way to conduct judicial procedure."

Senator Byrd said he had been induced not to oppose Hoffman, a Republican, when Hoffman's name was presented to the Senate for confirmation as a Federal judge. But he said that if he had known "what I know now I would have fought his confirmation as long as I could stand on my feet."

Almond Seeks to Avoid 'Chaos' of Desegregation

Star, Thurs. 5-23-57
Washington, D.C.

RICHMOND, May 23 (Special).—Virginia's Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, Jr., declared yesterday that integration has created a "deplorable situation" in Washington schools and promised that his State would make every effort "to save our public school system from such a chaotic condition." P.21-A

Asked to elaborate on a speech he made here Tuesday night, the State's top legal officer said Virginia would not submit to the operation of a public school system "which in the final analysis would be no more than a mockery of the process of education and an appalling waste of public funds."

He was asked if his comments meant he would prefer to see Virginia close public schools rather than accept any degree of integration.

"I do not care to elaborate," he replied.

Mr. Almond, is backed by the Byrd organization for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination. If elected, he would have authority to step in and close public schools where integration occurs. This is part of the legislative program Virginia adopted last fall to preserve segregated schools. The present Governor, Thomas B. Stanley has made it clear that he would close schools or classrooms where races are mixed.

Mr. Almond said he told the Richmond audience Tuesday night he had "incontrovertable evidence at hand" that integration has worked a deplorable situation in the schools in Washington.

District problems of discipline, racial feeling, in the disparity between the mental levels of the children and "in the monumental increase of offenses bordering on moral turpitude certainly are not conclusive to the promotion of the educational process," he declared.

In response to a question, Mr. Almond said the evidence on which he based his comments came both from the Davis committee report on District schools and from individuals in the District with whom he had talked personally.

Virginia Ban Put On Pupils Ignoring Law

Thurs. 5-23-57
Montgomery, Ala.

RICHMOND, Va., May 22 (AP)—The Virginia pupil placement boards has ruled that beginning with the next school term, no child will be admitted to any state public school until requirements of the pupil placement act have been met.

The act is Virginia's answer to the U.S. Supreme Court segregation decision.

For the present term, however, the board told local school authorities the 15 days allowed for the completion of placement applications could be extended "for a brief additional time in order to secure compliance with the law" where circumstances justified.

This seemed to indicate that 300 Richmond children whose parents have not returned placement applications probably would be allowed to complete the school term, which ends June 12.

FIND OUT WHY

In its meeting here yesterday, the board directed Richmond school authorities to find out why the 300 applications have not been returned. H. I. Willett, superintendent of Richmond Public schools, said he did not know at present how many of the cases involved willful refusal nor did he know whether this could be determined by the end of the year.

The board also said it had received a flat refusal from the parents of a Norfolk student to sign the application.

Norfolk school authorities said the parents of three Negro children have declined to sign the forms.

Placement DeFebio Case To Get Test In High Court

Star-Times Herald
Washington, D.C.
June 6-11-57
P. 7-8

RICHMOND, June 10 (Spl.) The State Supreme Court today agreed to review a test case in which a Fairfax County woman challenged the constitutionality of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act.

Mrs. DeFebio

The Justices indicated that they would not rule on the issue before their September term in Staunton.

Attorneys for Theo T. DeFebio said this would handicap her efforts to get her two sons back in school by the start of the September term. But the lawyers, C. Douglas Adams Jr., and Albert I. Kassabian asked for an extension of time to the end of August for completing their briefs. This request made it impossible for the court to act sooner on their petition.

Defendants to Answer

Assistant Attorney General Robert D. McIlwaine III told the justices that answers to Mrs. DeFebio's mandamus petition would be filed within 10 days on behalf of respondents. These include the Fairfax County School Board, the State Board of Education and the State Superintendent of Public Instruction.

Kassabian told reporters the Placement Board members were not named respondents to the petition because he considers the Board an unconstitutional entity.

Mrs. DeFebio's boys, Nicky, 9, and Teddy, 14, were dropped from the Fairfax County Schools in April after she refused to sign Placement Board application forms for them.

Court Race

Today's action puts Virginia's highest court in something of a race with the Federal courts to pass on the constitutionality of the Placement Act.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Fourth Circuit hears oral arguments in Asheville, N. C., Tuesday on an appeal from an earlier decision by Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman, of Norfolk, that the Placement Act is unconstitutional on its face.

The Circuit Court is expected to rule on this issue before the end of summer.

Ultimateley, the question is expected to be appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States from either the Virginia Supreme Court or from the Federal appellate court.

Delay Possible

If the Supreme Court of the United States takes its usual summer recess, it may not be able to pass on the matter until after schools open in September.

At least four Virginia localities are counting on the provisions of the Placement Act to protect them against possible contempt citations next fall. School officials in Arlington, Charlottesville, Newport News and Norfolk all face court orders to desegregate their schools by the start of the September term.

Counsel for the Negro parents involved in these suits have indicated that they will seek contempt action to enforce the orders unless the defendants comply.

VIRGINIA SCHOOL LAWS ARE CALLED 'DISADVANTAGE'

News + Leader
Richmond, Va.
Wed. 6-12-57

Federal Judge Says They Put Negro Child to 'Tremendous Disadvantage'

ASHEVILLE June 11 (AP) — Chief Judge John J. Parker said Virginia school laws put a Negro child at a "tremendous disadvantage" as he closed hearings today on two school integration cases.

Parker headed the three-judge U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals hearing of arguments concerning federal court integration orders in the schools of Norfolk and Newport News, Va. Sitting with the Charlotte jurist were Judges Simon E. Sobolof of Baltimore, Md., and Clement F. Haynsworth of Greenville, S. C.

Attorneys for the school boards and the Negroes seeking admission to white schools concentrated their arguments on two of the state's new school laws—the pupil placement act and the law which cuts off state funds to integrated schools.

At one point during the hearing, Judge Parker asked:

"If you say the (state-wide) assignment board can place pupils, then say that to place a Negro in a white school the school will get no funds, aren't you in effect telling the board not to place Negroes in white schools?"

"We don't think so, your honor," replied T. Justin Moore Sr., attorney for the Newport News School Board.

The court heard both cases together since attorneys for both sides agreed that the issues were identical:

1. Is the pupil placement act constitutional?

Court to Hear Va. Segregation Problems

2. Should a three-judge court hear the case?

3. Did U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk "abuse his discretion" last February in ordering the schools to drop racial bars this fall?

The appellate court will hand down its ruling on the cases later.

"The real question," said Judge Parker, "is whether this case is controlled by the Charlottesville (Va.) case of the Warlich case."

Dist. Judge John Paul ruled last summer, before the school laws were passed, that Negro plaintiffs had no administrative relief and ordered integration of Charlottesville schools.

The Warlich case concerned a group of Old Fort, N. C. Negro students who sought to enter a white school there rather than drive several miles to another town to attend classes. A federal court ruled that the students had not exhausted their administrative relief outlined in North Carolina's pupil assignment law.

Moore said the Virginia placement law was "complete in itself." He added, "the standards (for determining pupil assignment) are set out more clearly than in the North Carolina statute and far more clearly than in the South Carolina statute."

However, Spottswood W. Robinson III, National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People lawyer, contended that the assignment act should be considered in its "conjunctive relation" with the fund cut-off provision. In that respect, he said, it "does not afford an adequate relief."

Robinson told the court:

"The Legislature has made it impossible for the placement board to ever assign a student to a non-segregated school. . . The statute has it (the board) in a strait jacket."

On this same point, Judge Parker remarked:

"If you assume that the pupil placement act is constitutional, can it be said to furnish an adequate remedy if other laws prevent adequate relief?"

However, Judge Parker told Robinson, "There isn't any doubt that the Supreme Court has held we ought not to hold state statutes unconstitutional until the state courts interpret the statutes."

He added, "If you seek injunctive relief then the state Legislature affords administrative relief, the federal court is not going to enjoin state officials until you have exhausted administrative relief."

W. R. C. Cocke, appearing for the Norfolk School Board, said:

"It seems to me that under several decisions of the Supreme Court, several in the 4th Circuit and one in the 5th Circuit, it was mandatory that Judge Hoffman remit interpretation of Chapter 70 (placement act) to a state court for determination of validity. . .

"Unfortunately, Judge Hoffman appeared preoccupied with other aspects of oral argument and paid no attention to that point."

Oliver W. Hill of Richmond, Va., attorney for the Negroes, outlined the actions of the Virginia Legislate, governor and special commission since the May, 1954, Supreme Court school integration decision.

"It doesn't take any imagination to see. . . (that all this) is to maintain segregated schools," Hill said.

Virginia Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr. concluded the arguments. He said the Supreme Court of Appeals of Virginia has ordered hearings on a Fairfax County, Va., case concerning the school laws. "I see no escape from the proposition that the court would be called upon in that hearing to pass on the constitutionality of these school laws," he told the court.

"If a (Negro) child applies to Newport News for admission to a white school, the effect of the statutes would be to cut off state aid," Judge Parker said. "Wouldn't that affect the placement board?"

"Its impact operates on all children alike," Almond replied.

"I'm suggesting that this statute puts the child at a tremendous disadvantage," Judge Parker concluded.

ASHEVILLE, June 10 (AP) — Two Virginia cities, faced with the prospect of no public schools this fall, take their segregation problems to the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals here tomorrow.

Norfolk and Newport News, neighboring cities in tidewater Virginia, appealed U. S. Distirct Court rulings of last February which knocked down racial barriers in their public schools.

The ruling by Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman ordered previously white schools to admit Negro pupils but it also activated a new Virginia segregation law designed to counter just such a ruling.

The law cut off state funds for schools of the two cities and closed the schools as state agencies. However, it provided Gov. Thomas B. Stanley with the opportunity to intervene in the schools' closing without spelling out which directions his intervention may take.

This law and another, the Pupil Placement Act, figured prominently in briefs filed by attorneys for the three-judge court's consideration tomorrow.

The placement act established a three-man state board to rule on all transfers or advances of pupils from one school to another. By legal definition, the board considers such factors as health and welfare, aptitudes and "the sociology, psychological and like intangible social-scientific factors."

Judge Hoffman reviewed these laws in his opinion and declared, "The pattern is plain. The Legislature has adopted procedures to defeat" the U.S. Supreme Court's school desegregation decision of May, 1954.

Race Suit Hearing Ends With Only 5 on Stand

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., May 16 (AP). — The Boatwright Legislative Committee investigating racial litigation has wound up a one-day hearing here after questioning less than one-third the scheduled number of witnesses because "the information (it) was seeking had been obtained."

"There was no point in holding the rest of the witnesses all afternoon," said John B. Boatwrgiht jr., committee secretary and son of the chairman, when he was asked why the legislative group questioned only five of the 16 witnesses who had been subpoenaed to appear yesterday.

State Senator Earl A. Fitzpatrick of Roanoke said certain witnesses were chosen to testify because "if you know that certain people have certain information in their possession that you want, they're going to be the witnesses you would call. The committee knows what it's trying to develop and it knows who can give that information."

Called "One-Sided"

This brought a reply from Oliver W. Hill, Richmond attorney representing Negro parents in the Charlottesville school desegregation case, that the committee is conducting a "one-sided hearing."

"The questions aren't fair in that the committee is getting people with no experience in this type of thing and asking leading questions," said Mr. Hill. "Nobody has an opportunity to examine the witnesses to see if they understand the purport of what they are saying."

All five witnesses were plaintiffs last year in the Charlottesville case. The committee, set up by the General Assembly last fall, was investigating whether the case was stirred up and financed by persons not directly involved.

Three of the witnesses who testified at yesterday's closed session said they did not know they were signing an authorization to bring a law suit against the city school board for school desegregation.

Reporters asked another witness, George R. Ferguson, president of the Charlottesville branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, how attorneys representing Negro parents were paid.

Mr. Ferguson said no bill for the legal counsel had been received.

Law Faces Challenge

Mr. Hill said a Virginia law passed last year prohibits an organization from financially sponsoring any desegregation case. The law is being challenged in Federal Court, he said. If it should be upheld, he added, counsel would have to collect directly from the plaintiffs.

In testimony before the committee, Mr. Hill answered questions about his authorization to bring the case in the name of the plaintiffs. He said he furnished the committee photostats of some of the signed authorizations and promised to send others after returning to his Richmond office.

Thomson Committee To Release Names

FARMVILLE, Va., May 16 (AP). —The Thomson committee was to hear testimony here today from some 20 witnesses in the second day of closed hearings on racial activities.

Delegate James M. Thomson of Alexandria, committee chairman, said a statement would be released at the conclusion of today's hearing. He said it would contain the names of the 40-odd persons subpoenaed.

22 Witnesses Heard

The committee took testimony from 22 Negro witnesses yesterday, some of whom were plaintiffs in the original Prince Edward County school segregation case. This was one of the five cases which led to the United States Supreme Court's 1954 decision outlawing public school segregation.

Mr. Thomson declined to identify any of yesterday's witnesses, nor would he say along what lines they had been quizzed. Two of the witnesses said they had been asked about their connection with the NAACP.

The two, Willie Redd and Fred Reid, said the committee also questioned them about circumstances surrounding the original Prince Edward suit.

The Thomson committee was one of two legislative investigating groups set up by the special General Assembly session last fall to probe racial activities and organizations. The other is the Boatwright committee.

Virginia Board Plans to Continue Assigning Pupils

RICHMOND, Jan. 15 (Special). —Virginia's Pupil Placement Board yesterday declared its determination to stay in business "unless and until" lawfully prevented.

That was the three-man board's answer to Friday's ruling by Federal Judge Walter E. Hoffman declaring Virginia's pupil placement law "unconstitutional on its face."

The three-man board met with its attorney, A. B. Scott of Richmond, conferred briefly with Gov. Stanley and then issued this statement:

"Last Friday's opinion of United States District Judge Hoffman in the Newport News and Norfolk cases has come to the attention of the Pupil Placement Board.

"Unless and until lawfully prevented, the board intends, in what it considers to be in the public interest, to carry out its duties and responsibilities under the Pupil Placement Act in strict accordance with its terms."

Asked whether the three men had agreed on a chairman for the newly appointed board, Andrew A. Farley, Dannville newspaper executive, said they did not plan to name one.

"If you're going to hop on one of us, you've got to hop on all of us," Mr. Farley said.

The act of creating the placement board as another link in the chain designed to preserve Virginia's segregated schools was passed at the extra session of the General Assembly last fall.

Under the law, the board is empowered to assign all incoming public school pupils to specific schools for a number of reasons exclusive of race.

Other members of the board are Hugh V. White, Nasemond County school superintendent, and Beverley H. Randolph, jr., Richmond attorney. They were appointed by Gov. Stanley.

School Tests Reveal "Cause And Effect"

Journal & Guide p. 8

Norfolk, Va.

THERE IS not much that can be done about "water that has gone over the dam," but in the light of some of the school tests that are being made now, it may be well to try to focus the minds of school administrators, law-makers and others upon the realities. These are being ignored to a large extent by the testers, the administrators, and the analysts who are emphasizing the results of the tests.

Oct 5-20-57

A Virginian-Pilot staff analyst doing a series of articles on the 1954-55 survey of Norfolk schools, pointed out that the scores for white sixth and eighth graders were higher than those for colored pupils tested in the same grades.

14 d (1) Va

The writer then quoted DR. HERMAN M. WILLIAMS, assistant superintendent, in charge of curriculum and instruction in Norfolk Public Schools, as attributing "the IQ differences between the white and Negro pupils to the generally poorer cultural and environmental conditions that prevail in Negro homes."

The factor mentioned by DR. WILLIAMS does play a large part in the results shown. It is economic, basically. And for future citizenship training, it might be of interest to say here that the mothers and fathers in these poorer homes were educated in schools that were inferior to those in which the parents of the white boys and girls were educated. They could not afford the cultural devices, nor absorb the degree of culture that is derived from superior advantages. That, of course is water over the dam.

Economic Problem

THE "cultural lag" that is so much discussed now had its beginning over 50 years ago when a dual system of public schools was set up in Virginia and in other Southern States. One system was for white youths and the other for Negro youths. The white schools were invariably better schools in every way as to facilities, curriculum and teaching apparatus, as will be shown by the record. All one has to do is to scan through the reports of school superintendents, legislative appropriations, and other documents, especially those showing the difference in the per capita expenditure for white children and for colored children. Not only were the differences found in classroom time and physical facilities, but they were present in curriculum in iindividual schools.

While conditions have greatly improved in Norfolk during the past ten years so that in elementary schools practical equality in facilities exist to a large degree, the lower IQ and often lower achievement scores reflected in the colored schools arise from a set of circumstances:

1. The low income range of the colored family due to custom and to discrimination in employment and wages, and a lack of training unobtainable for better skills.

2. Necessity for both parents to work in order to provide food, clothing and shelter for the family, leaving unsupervised their children in their most impressionable years.

3. The (until recent years) poorer facilities for Negro schools and the city-wide lack of sufficient classroom space, which required the first and second and sometimes the third and fourth grade children to attend classes part-time. Usually from 8:30 a.m. to 12 noon, when another class would take over the room. To some extent this was true in the white schools, but we believe the record will show that it was largely a Negro school problem.

4. If heredity means anything, and many people emphasized lately that it does in this educational problem, the children of this generation are handicapped by the disadvantages which their parents and grandparents had to undergo as to their schooling, work opportunities and ability to learn and to earn. A higher cultural level could not have been erected upon a low economic level imposed by law and custom.

"Education For Negroes"

ONE tragic aspect of the present integration agitation, for and against, is the charge that is leveled against the Negro children that they are a grade or a grade and a half behind the white children in IQ and achievement ratings. What is being used to retain total segregation are the unmistakable effects of enforced segregation severely designed to produce these effects, as a long-range plan to prevent equalization of opportunity, and maintained for a half century.

This is true largely because it was decided as a South-wide policy over 50 years ago, to shape a special pattern of education for Negroes.

Results Of Limited Training

THE SCHOOLS are now turning out exactly the Negro product in general that the dual system was planned 50 years ago to turn out, indefinitely.

No one in the educational system who wishes to be honest about the matter will deny that the predominant policy has been "to educate Negroes for the places they will be restricted to in life," according to a plan. The feeling prevailed that Negroes were not going to be able to engage in certain occupations; to work at certain trades, enter certain professions or businesses, or to figure in such technology as mechanical, civil, chemical or other branches of engineering, under existing and continuing law and custom.

An example of that policy came to the front when Norfolk's Booker Washington High School was completed in the middle 1920s.

The local school board had decided to enlarge the scope of the "industrial" training afforded Negro youths in the communtiy.

Accordingly, rooms for teaching electrical work trades, plumbing, carpentry, bricklaying, sheet metal working and auto-mechanics were provided for in the building.

However, certain trade unions which did not then, and do not now, admit Negroes to membership, objected, and the teaching of electrical trades, plumbing and journeyman carpentry, sheet metal working, was never started.

Teaching of bricklaying and woodworking with tools along with elementary auto-mechanics remained.

The teaching of bricklaying trades was abandoned a few years ago. So, not only the Norfolk school board, but school boards all over the state, decided that the broadening of the Negro youth's industrial opportunities was impossible, because in their opinion, they would be training youths for jobs which they would not be able to get on account of law and custom.

Consequently, they fell back upon the total plan of education for Negroes. This has resulted mainly in high school courses that prepared a boy or girl to enter a liberal arts college (if he or she was lucky). A student's chances of getting a high school preparation for college sciences were poor because the high schools had no adequate science laboratory equipment. This handicap to Negroes taking advantages of engineering opportunities exists to this day.

About these surveys and what they show, one thing should be remembered, and that was stated recently by DR. A. G. MACKLIN, of Virginia State College, in the following words: "There are no statistics on individual brains and capacities, and the intelligence tests usually discussed do not test native capacity. Rather they test what has been learned, and no one should be expected to have learned a great deal when they have been deprived of the opportunity to learn what is being demanded on a test."

Virginia Loses School Plea

Supreme Court Won't Review Ban on Segregation

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON, Mar. 25.—The Supreme Court today dealt a blow to Virginia's policy of "massive resistance" to racial integration in its public schools.

With a minimum of words, the court rejected, 8-0, Virginia's appeals from orders of lower Federal courts enjoining enforcement of racial segregation in Charlottesville and Arlington County.

Treating the appeals as routinely is possible, the court grouped them with twenty-three others in its list of orders and merely said as to all of them: "The petitions for writs of certiorari in these cases are severally denied."

Charlottesville, in the central part of the state, is the seat of the University of Virginia. Arlington County, just across the Potomac from Washington, is populated heavily by government workers and services personnel.

The court emphasized again its policy of giving lower courts wide discretion in bringing about desegregation "with all deliberate speed," as ordered in May, 1955.

It did so by refusing to review orders of lower courts denying immediate admission of Negro children in Old Fort, N. C., to a white school.

Attorney General J. Lindsay Almond, now a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Governor of Virginia, carried the Charlottesville and Arlington appeals to the Supreme Court.

In both cases, the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in Richmond affirmed orders of district judges directing the ending of segregation.

Judge Albert V. Bryan ordered Arlington elementary schools desegregated as of last Jan. 31 and high school by next September. Judge John Paul ordered Charlottesville schools desegregated as of last September. Both these orders have been held in abeyance pending the exhaustion of appeals procedures.

Virginia now has twenty-five days in which to petition the Supreme Court to reconsider its refusal today to review the two cases. Ultimately, the cases will have to go back to the district judges for them to set new deadlines.

Mr. Almond questioned, among other things, the power of a Federal district court to enjoin a local school board, an agency of Virginia, without the state's consent to be sued. He also contended the Negro pupils had not exhausted state administrative remedies before going to Federal courts, and said Judges Bryan and Paul abused their discretion.

Virginia's political leaders, headed by Democratic Sen. Harry F. Byrd, have laid down a policy which they call "massive resistance."

In the Old Fort, N. C., case, counsel for Negro pupils appealed to the Supreme Court after the Court of Appeals said parents of the children had not used all administrative remedies provided by the North Carolina pupil enrollment act.

the decree expressly stated that local rules as to assignment to classes, so long as such rules are not based on race or color, are to be observed.

Virginia Told: Wipe Out Jim-Crow Schools!

By ALICE A. DUNNIGAN

WASHINGTON (ANP) — The state of Virginia must take steps to wipe segregation from its public schools, according to the ruling of the United States Supreme Court.

By refusing to review cases filed by the school boards of Charlottesville and Arlington County, Va., the high court left in effect desegregation orders issued by the Virginia Court of Appeals last December.

The district court had ordered Charlottesville's Board of Education to make a reasonable start toward complying with the Supreme Court's desegregation decision by September, 1956.

Group Says Problem Is State Duty

Delegates Vote Against Federal Aid For Schools

WASHINGTON, D. C. —The Daughters of the American Revolution, true to form, expressed opposition to civil rights legislation for Negroes in a resolution adopted last week here at their five-day meeting. It was the 65th annual Continental Congress of the organization.

Following the line of Dixiecrats who are spearheading the fight in Congress against President Eisenhower's civil rights program, the DAR said it was up to the states to preserve civil liberties. While the DAR was explaining its stand against federal action on civil rights, the states in the South were in the midst of a fight to curtail civil liberties in the states for Negroes.

AMONG other resolutions approved by the DAR delegates with only a few votes against them were:

1. Opposing federal aid for school legislation because the DAR felt no state had shown a need for the aid.

2. OPPOSING changes in the nation's basic immigration law. The resolution said amendments such as those advocated by President Eisenhower would "open the floodgates, undermine the national origins quota system, and remove the principal security safeguards of that act."

3. Opposing the preaching of "communism in churches." The Daughters identified this as "the increasing propaganda in the churches for the United Nations, World Government, the destruction of our immigration laws, the release of Communists from jail, opposition to military training."

4. FAVORING new laws requiring teachers, professors and school administrators to take loyalty oaths.

5. Opposing the use of American fighting forces in any United Nations emergency force.

6. FAVOR cutting the budget more and reducing taxes.

7. Favor returning to the states more of the powers taken from them by the Federal government.

8. Urging that the United States withdraw from the United Nations if Red China is made a member, and another opposing the registration of firearms. The 40 votes against these resolutions were the highest number of "No" votes.

Smoot Clarifies Integration Stand

Albert A. Smoot, who seeks the Democratic nomination for Alexandria's General Assembly seat, last night reiterated charges that incumbent James M. Thomson has distorted his (Smoot's) position on the school issue.

Smoot told a meeting of precinct chairmen that Thomson supporters "say I believe one thing; the next day they say I am for something entirely different—and then they accuse me of not letting the voters know where I stand."

"To set the record straight," Smoot again explained that he is for a moderate pupil placement plan, locally administered, to meet the Supreme Court decision banning school segregation. "I am absolutely opposed to the program passed by the last session of the General Assembly and sponsored and defended by my opponent," he declared.

Pupil Placement Board Keeps Ban on De Febios

By MARY DOU WERNER
Star Staff Correspondent

RICHMOND, May 1.—The Virginia Pupil Placement Board yesterday refused to readmit the DeFebio brothers to Fairfax County schools without placement applications, but agreed to let Mrs. Theo T. DeFebio sign applications for her sons "under protest" if she chooses to do so.

In a statement issued at the end of an executive session with attorneys for Mrs. DeFebio, the board said that it would act on applications signed "under protest" without prejudice to either the Fairfax County mother or her children.

The statement also said that by signing the application under such conditions she would not be waiving "any legal or Constitution right to which she or her children are entitled."

Nicky DeFebio, 9, and his 14-year-old brother Teddy were dropped from Fairfax County schools because their mother refused to sign Virginia's new placement applications. She said she objected to the applications because she considered them part of a scheme to thwart the Supreme Court's school desegregation decision.

They were put out of school under a regulation issued by the placement board March 15, specifying that parents of all children entering Virginia schools must fill out the application within 15 days of receiving them or be dismissed.

Attorneys Douglas Adams, jr., and Albert J. Kassabian said after yesterday's session with the placement board that they would discuss the board's action with Mrs. DeFebio today, but could not predict whether or not she would be willing to sign the application under the specified terms.

The attorneys said they tried to persuade the board to let the brothers return to school until there is final adjudication of the Norfolk and Newport News desegregation cases, in which the placement act has been ruled unconstitutional. An appeal is pending in those cases before the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, and the ruling is not binding on State courts until it has reached the Supreme Court.

Board members said the DeFebio case was the only one which had come to their attention so far where a parent had refused to sign the placement applications within the specified time.

A group of Negro parents in Richmond has announced plans to make another test of the placement law.

Virginia's Segregation Laws Get Vital Legal Test Tuesday

News & Courier

By CHARLES WEST

ASHEVILLE, N.C., June 8 (AP)—Virginia's new hold-the-line segregation laws get vital legal tests here next Tuesday as Norfolk and Newport News appeal federal court school integration orders.

The cases will be heard by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals.

The court's decision could mean closing of public schools in the two Virginia cities. Three points are at issue:

(1) The constitutionality of the Virginia school segregation laws, especially the Pupil Placement Act.

(2) Whether U.S. Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk abused his discretion in ordering the schools to drop color barriers this fall.

(3) Whether the three-judge appeals court should review the decisions—a technical issue.

The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) brought the suits in April and May, 1956, to admit Negroes to white schools of the two cities.

Judge Hoffman last February ordered the schools to begin desegregation this fall.

A month before his desegregation orders, Judge Hoffman called the Pupil Placement Act "unconstitutional on its face" and denied motions to dismiss the suits.

However, his ruling did not touch other phases of the state's new segregation laws — withholding of state funds from integrated schools, automatic closing of schools in which integration takes place until the governor intervenes, and state operation of schools on an "efficient" (defined by law as segregated) basis.

The placement act keeps pupils in their present schools and establishes three-man local boards to handle transfers or advancements of pupils.

The act directs the boards to consider health, welfare, aptitudes, availability of facilities and "the sociology, psychological and like intangible social-scientific factors as will prevent as nearly as possible a condition of socio-economic class consciousness among the pupils."

Attorneys for the school boards, in briefs filed with the appeals court last month, declared:

"Courts cannot force 99 per cent of the white people to do what they are convinced is wrong; there are not marshals enough nor jails enough to accomplish that result.

"All that will emerge is a generation of damaged children of both races who have received inferior schooling and become imbued with bitterness."

On the question of legality of the placement act, the school attorneys argued:

"The district court in this case arbitrarily set aside a Virginia statute just two weeks after its effective date, before any substantial action was taken pursuant to it and in the absence of any knowledge of the method of its operation in practice."

The school attorneys claimed that Judge Hoffman abused his discretion by ordering integration with "intemperate speed," thereby going beyond the appeals court's implementing order of the U.S. Supreme Court desegregation decision of May, 1954.

Attorneys for the Negro plaintiffs countered that the state has set up a series of delays to integration "and if, and as long as, any court will listen to this siren song, the chant will continue until doomsday.

"In the meantime, with the passing of each school session, the rights of thousands of Negro school children are lost forever."

CIRCUIT COURT also will hear the Greensboro (NC), municipal golf course integration case. See Page 7-A.

With those words Chief Judge John J. Parker closed hearings Tuesday on school integration suits involving officials of the Norfolk and Newport News, Va., School Boards and the state's pupil-placement act.

JUDGE PARKER'S statement came at the very end of the hearings after Virginia's attorney general, J. Lindsay Almond, had concluded defense arguments by asking the court to delay judgement in the case.

Mr. Almond, in his bid for delay, pointed out to the court that the Supreme Court of Appeals has ordered hearings on a Fairfax County case involving the school laws.

"I see no escape from the proposition that the (Virginia Supreme) court would be called upon in that (Fairfax County) hearing to pass on the constitutionality of these school laws," the Virginia attorney general told the court.

IT WAS then that Judge Parker asked Mr Almond: "If a (colored) child applies to Newport News for admission to a white school, the effect of the statutes would be to cut off state aid. Wouldn't that affect the placement board?"

"Its impact operates on all children alike," Mr. Almond replied.

"I'm suggesting that this statute puts the (colored) child at a tremendous disadvantage," Judge Parker said as he closed the hearing.

Judge Parker headed the three - judge Fourth U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals hearing arguments concerning Federal court integration orders in the schools of Norfolk and Newport News.

Sitting on the court with the Charlotte jurist were Judges Simon E. Sobeloff of Baltimore and Clement F. Haynsworth of Greenville, S.C.

AT ONE point during the hearing, Judge Parker asked lawyers for the state:

"If you say the (statewide) assignment board can place pupils, then say that to place a colored child in a white school the school will get no funds, aren't you in effect telling the board not to place colored pupils in white schools?"

"We don't think so, your honor," was the reply of T. Justin Moore Sr., attorney for the Newport News School Board.

Attorneys for both sides centered their arguments around two of the state's new school laws—the pupil placement act and the statute which cuts off state funds to any school that becomes integrated.

* * *

THE COURT heard both the Norfolk and Newport News cases together after attorneys for both sides agreed to stipulations that the issues in both cases were identical. They were:

1. Is the pupil placement act unconstitutional?

2. Should a three - judge court hear the case?

3. Did U.S. District Court Judge Walter E. Hoffman "abuse his discretion" last February in ordering the schools

THE APPELLATE court is expected to hand down its decision within the next few weeks. And, according to Judge Parker, "The real question is whether this case is controlled by the Charlottesville, Va.,) case or the Warlich case."

District Court Judge John Paul ruled last summer, before the school laws had been passed, that the colored plaintiffs in the case had no administrative relief and ordered integration of the Charlottesville schools.

In the Warlich case, a Federal District Court ruled that a group of Old Fort pupils who sought to enter a white school there rather than commute miles to another school had not exhausted their administrative remedies.

The court ruled that they would be required to comply with provisions outlined in North Carolina's pupil assignment law, which differs radically from that of Virginia.

VIRGINIA'S assignment law was described as being "complete in itself," that "the standards for determining assignment are set out more clearly than in the North Carolina statute and far more clearly than in the South Carolina statute."

Spottswood W. Robinson 3rd, NAACP lawyer, countered that the Virginia assignment act should be considered in its "conjunctive relation" with the fund cutoff provision.

"In that respect," Mr. Robinson said, the Virginia pupil assignment law "does not afford adequate relief."

Mr. Robinson told the court: "The Legislature (Virginia) has made it impossible for the placement board to ever assign a student to a nonsegregated school. . . . The statute has it (the placement board) in a strait jacket.

JUDGE PARKER then turned to defense attorneys and asked:

"If you assume that the pupil placement act is constitutional, can it be said to furnish adequate remedy if other laws prevent adequate relief?"

After outlining the actions of the Virginia Legislature, the governor, the attorney general and special commissions since the May, 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing public school segregation, Oliver W. Hill of Richmond asserted:

"It doesn't take any imagination to see, (that all this is designed to maintain segregated schools in Virginia.

Judge Delays School Mixing In Virginia

Montgomery, Ala. Sat. 7-27-57

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 26 (AP)—A federal judge today ruled out desegregation in Charlottesville public schools for the semester starting in September until the Supreme Court decides the constitutionality of Virginia's Pupil Placement Act.

At the same time Judge John Paul said "no pupil white or colored" could be denied admission to schools in Charlottesville because of failure to sign the pupil placement applications.

Paul announced his decision after a conference with counsel for the city and state and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. The NAACP attorneys sought to have Judge Paul order desegregation in the city schools with the start of the September term.

The Pupil Placement Act — a main prop in Gov. Thomas B. Stanley's legislative barrier against any mixing of the races in public schools—has been declared unconstitutional by a trial judge in Newport News and Norfolk school desegregation cases. This decision was upheld by the U.S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals and it is from this opinion that the state is carrying the matter to the U.S. high court.

Judge Paul said his desegregation order—originally made to become effective last September and then stayed during the course of losing appeals—would become effective with the first semester after the Supreme Court rules.

Two Integration Cases at End of Line

Sun. 6-23-57

By Benjamin Muse

A SHOWDOWN IN VIRGINIA on compliance with the Supreme Court decision against segregation in public schools has been predicted repeatedly during the past two years, but nothing has happened except appeals, postponements and seemingly interminable litigation.

Muse

In Prince Edward County, where the crisis was first expected, the federal district court has declined to order desegregation for the present, and in that extremely difficult situation no other action has been taken. The Newport News and Norfolk cases, in which desegregation was ordered, were heard on appeal recently by the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, sitting at Asheville, N. C. The decision in those two cases is not expected in time to be effective at the opening of school in September.

BUT TWO CASES appear to have gone all the way of litigation and delay. The school boards of Arlington County and Charlottesville next September may be faced with the hard question of obedience to Federal court orders at the risk of reprisals by the state, or disobedience at the risk of contempt citations.

Gov. Stanley has urged these school boards to "use every means of persuasion that they can muster" to prevent Negroes from seeking admission to existing white schools.

However, if persuasion fails to hold the no-integration line, he has declared his intention of invoking the state laws enacted last September to check integration, including the withholding of State funds, operation of the schools by the State and, ultimately, if necessary, the closing of public schools with provision for tuition grants for private schooling.

Charlottesville, where the population is 18.2 per cent Negro, is thoroughly aroused over the prospect. The people of Charlottesville are now probably more acutely conscious of the segregation problem than any similar group in Virginia.

THEY HAVE BEEN EXHORTED on both sides of the question. The city has been visited by John Kaspar and Asa Carter, also by Superintendent Omer Carmichael of the Louisville, Ky., schools and other advocates of compliance with the court's ruling. It has been the most conspicuous center of activity by the Virginia Council on Human Relations, and it has been saturated with propaganda by the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberties.

The Council, the Defenders organization and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People each has its largest membership in proportion to population in Charlottesville. Even the Seaboard White Citizens Council has a foothold there.

"We've made the same plans we've always made to prepare for the coming year," says Ferndall R. Ellis, superintendent of Charlottesville schools. But Ellis and his associates have given a lot of quiet thought to the problem during the past year, and they know the possibility of being forced to comply with the court's mandate is not to be ruled out.

PLANNING FOR public school integration is something like a crime in Virginia nowadays, but the Charlottesville school authorities, like those in other sections, have plans, even if not on paper, to effect compliance, when it becomes necessary, with a minimum of disturbance of the status quo.

Charlottesville stands to lose $296,589 in State funds if integration is undertaken. Replacement of this sum locally would require a 70-cent increase in the tax rate. If the matter comes to that, it is being suggested, the city will attempt still to collect the money on the ground that the act is unconstitutional.

The oft-predicted taxpayers' strike might also materialize.

At any rate, there will be an uproar which might well have a bearing on the coming gubernatorial campaign, in which the cut-off-the-funds act and other phases of "massive resistance" are likely to be under attack.

"The balance of sentiment here will tip toward acceptance of a limited degree of integration, if that becomes the alternative to abandonment of education as a public function," recently said Colgate W. Darden Jr., president of the University of Virginia.

Meanwhile, however, the Defenders already are planning a rally, scheduled tentatively for Aug. 26, to make any degree of integration as difficult as possible.

Court Stalls School Plan In Virginia

Sun. 7-14-57

Montgomery, Ala.

Verdict Throws Out Placement Program; State Readies Appeal

RICHMOND, Va., July 13 (AP)—Virginia lost another major court battle today in its "massive resistance" approach to the Supreme Court's ruling against segregated public schools.

The state's 1956 Pupil Placement Act—designed to maintain racially separate schools—was thrown out by the U. S. 4th Circuit Court of Appeals in an opinion handed down here.

The law set up a three-man board appointed by the governor and gave it all powers of pupil assignment formerly held by local school boards. It reassigned all pupils to schools they were not attending and gave the state power to make future assignments—occasioned by promotion, transfer—for a variety of reasons other than race.

NO ADEQUATE REMEDY

But the appellate court, in upholding Dist. Judge Walter E. Hoffman in Norfolk and Newport News cases, said:

"This statute furnishes no adequate remedy to plaintiffs (Negro parents and school children) because of the fixed and definite policy of the school authorities" to maintain segregation.

The court pointed to the existing Appropriation Act which provides that all state funds shall be cut off from elementary or high schools of a local school division in which one elementary or high school in that division admits a Negro child.

REMEDIES EXHAUSTED

Because the Placement Act provided for a system of appeals from the state board to the governor and the state courts, lawyers for the state and the defendant school boards had argued the cases should be dismissed or proceedings stayed until such administrative remedies had been exhausted.

Appeal to the U. S. Supreme Court definitely will be made, attorneys for the defense said today. Meanwhile, they already have asked the circuit court to stay its mandate to the lower court until an appeal is perfected.

Meanwhile, Judge Hoffman will start his order for Norfolk and Newport News schools to be integrated by this September pending a decision by the Supreme Court was a question that couldn't be answered immediately.

Advertiser P. 2

Alabama Atty. Gen. John Patterson said he could give no "off the cuff" opinion on how the ruling might relate to a school placement law passed by the State Legislature in 1955. Pointing out that the ruling came from a different circuit court, he added, however that "We will have a copy of the ruling within a week or two, and will certainly study it closely to determine how any part might affect any section of our own law."

STAND UP IN COURT

But both Sen. Albert Boutwell of Birmingham and Sen. Sam Engelhardt of Shorter, co-sponsors of the Alabama School Placement Act in the Senate in 1955, expressed the belief it will stand up in court.

Said Boutwell, who is chairman of a joint coordinating committee working on segregation problems, declared:

"I prefer not to comment on the decision of the U.S. Fourth Court of Appeals wherein they ruled the Virginia School Placement Act invalid, until I have studied the full text of the opinion.

SUBSTANTIALLY DIFFERENT

"The Alabama Placement Act was drafted by able members of the Alabama Bar Assn. It is substantially different from the Virginia Act.

"Amendments to the Alabama act are now in the hands of 14 members of the joint legislative coordinating committee of the legislature.

"The Alabama Placement Act as now written is entirely consistent with the opinion of the U.S. Supreme Court rendered in May of 1954. The amendment now being considered, I believe, will make the bill more workable. I do not see how any court would be justified in declaring the Alabama School Placement Act invalid."

Engelhardt pointed out that a major difference is the provision for a special placement board in the Virginia act, while the Alabama measure gives full placement authority and the right to hear appeals to school boards involved.

He added that he considers the Alabama act, which North Carolina copied and passed into law, "much stronger" than the Virginia measure.

Fluvanna County Negro School Set

Times-Dispatch P. 20

Sun. 7-21-57

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., July 26 (Special).—Construction of a consolidated Negro elementary school for Fluvanna County apparently will begin early next month in spite of the uncertain status of funds, according to the English Construction Co. of Altavista.

The company has been awarded a contract to build the school for $519,150 and the firm indicates it will start construction in August as originally planned.

Fluvanna County School Supt. J. P. Snead said he did not know of the company's plans to proceed with construction and that he did not know how the School Board will handle payments.

The funds apparently are tied up at least until September 4 when the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals will convene. The Board of Supervisors in Fluvanna has ordered the county treasurer to refuse to pay warrants drawn against the fund by the School Board.

The School Board is seeking a writ of mandamus from the court to compel the treasurer to honor warrants against $750,000 in school construction funds.

Both boards have claimed control of the funds.

Integration For Schools Is Delayed

Times-Union Sat. 7-27-57

Jacksonville, Fla.

HARRISONBURG, Va., July 26 (AP)—Federal Judge John Paul today delayed start of desegregation in Charlottesville's public schools pending a final ruling on Virginia's pupil placement law.

At the same time, he restrained Charlottesville school officials from requiring any pupil to apply for placement as a requirement for attending school.

P. 5

The court's action obviously pleased State Atty. Gen. J. Lindsay Almond Jr., his special assistant, Henry Wickham, and former Gov. John S. Battle, counsel for the defendant school officials. Plainly disappointed were Spottswood W. Robinson III and Oliver W. Hill, who had argued vainly to have the Negro children admitted to white schools this fall.

At Richmond, Gov. Stanley told newsmen he was "very pleased the court is staying his order until the validity of the pupil placement act is decided."

The effect of today's action denying Robinson's motion asking that the Negro pupils be admitted to white schools this fall is that Charlottesville's schools will remain segregated at least until the January, 1958, semester.

NAACP Lawyer Says Thomson Unit Biased

Post + Herald Sat. 5-18-57
Washington, D.C.

FARMVILLE, Va., May 17 (AP) An attorney has charged the Thomson Committee with failing fairly to develop all the circumstances surrounding the 1951 Prince Edward County segregation case. P. 19-A

S. W. Tucker of Emporia said after the committee ended a 2-day hearing here yesterday that it "had already conceived its opinions and called witnesses to bear it out and avoided any who might have refuted it." Times

Tucker was a National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) counsel at the hearings.

In a statement after the hearing yesterday, the Committee chairman, Del. James M. Thomson of Alexandria, said testimony "indicated there could have been violations of the canons of professional legal ethmics since some witnesses testified that they had no idea of paying court costs of attorneys."

He said that "six years after the suit was instigated, some witnesses don't recognize themselves as plaintiffs in that suit."

Informed of Tucker's charge today, Thompson denied it.

He said witnesses were excuse who had been subpenaed "because of a matter of time." He said the uncalled witnesses were excused when the committee decided to adjourn at 5 p. m.

"As I recall," Thomson said, "the witnesses were called in alphabetical order."

The Prince Edward suit was one of five which led to the Supreme Court's May 17, 1954, decision declaring public school segregation unconstitutional.

Thomson said the hearing, held in secrecy to "protect the interests of witnesses, both those for and against integration," was to determine "how plaintiffs got into the 1951 suit brought against the school Board and how the suit came to be brought."

In all, 48 witnesses were subpenaed but only 36 testified. The remaining 12 were excused.

The Thomson Committee—officially the General Assembly's Committee on Law Reform and Racial Activities—was one of two set up by the special legislative session last fall to probe racial matters. One of its duties is to seen whether legal ethics were violated in the bringing of integration suits.

School Suit 'Delay' Hit By Counsel For Negroes

Speed Urged In Effecting Desegregation in Tidewater Area

RICHMOND, Va., May 30 (AP)—Virginia Federal courts are being subjected to a "siren song" of delay in effecting desegregated schools, counsel for Negro plaintiffs in the Norfolk and Newport News school cases said today.

The attorneys' contention was contained in briefs filed in the case with the United States 4th Circuit Court of Appeals now sitting in Asheville, N. C. A copy of the briefs was released here.

The attorneys urged that Norfolk Federal District Judge Walter E. Hoffman be upheld in his ruling that the State's Pupil Placement Act is unconstitutional on its face.

The appellate court will hear arguments June 11 at Asheville on Hoffman's ruling.

Charge Abuse of Discretion

Counsel for the two school boards earlier had argued that Hoffman abused his discretion in ordering desegregation in schools in the two cities this fall.

But counsel for the Negroes argued today:

"The Commonwealth, through its attorney general, has been an active participant in all the litigation relating to segregation in the public schools of Virginia, and with varying phraseology, the argument advanced on behalf of defendant school officials to the respective courts has been:

"Deny the complaining Negro children the relief to which they are entitled and wait for the Gray Commission to report, or wait for the special session of the General Assembly of 1955, or wait for the plebiscite on a constitutional convention or wait for the regular session of the Legislature in 1956, or wait for the constitutional convention of 1956 or wait for the extra session of the General Assembly of 1956 and now they say wait for the regular session of 1958, and if, as long as any court will listen to this siren song, the chant will continue until doomsday.

"In the meantime, with the passing of each school session, the rights of thousands of Negro school children are lost forever."

Constitutionality at Issue

At issue in the arguments next month is Hoffman's ruling that the placement act is unconstitutional and his order requiring the desegregation of schools in both cities.

Under the terms of the Placement Act, school childlen are "frozen" in their respective schools. All new pupils and transfers must be approved by a three-member placement board named by the Governor. Locality officials are deprived of their power of assignments.

The Placement Law is one of a series passed in a special session of the General Assembly aimed at preserving segregated schools.

Council for the school officials contended that Hoffman had tried to read into the Placement Act implications from other legislation passed at the same time but not under challenge.

Smoot-Thomson Race Turns Into Debate Over School Integration Issue

Post + Times Herald P. 1-2
Mon. 6-10-57
Washington, D.C.

By Mechlin Moore
Staff Reporter

Alexandria's Democratic primary campaign for the House of Delegates has turned into a debate over the Byrd-Stanley plan for massive resistance to racial integration of Virginia schools.

Incumbent James M. Thomson and candidate Albert A. Smoot have faced each other on the same platform four times in recent weeks. The debates have been clear-cut and somtimes stormy. Audience reaction has been heated.

Thomson insisted that the package of laws passed last year in Richmond will NOT lead to closing public schools. Smoot disagreed.

Both candidates have chosen to stand or fall on this question. Other issues have been injected into the campaign, but they are sidelights.

Each has felt called upon to defend his Virginia heritage against charges that he does not truly speak for the Old Dominion. Thomson, 32, is an Alexandria attorney who studied law at the University of Virginia. He was first elected to the General Assembly two years ago. Smoot, 53, a native Alexandrian, is president of W. A. Smoot and Co. lumber dealers. He is a former member of the Alexandria City Council.

Thomson has accused Smoot of being an integrationist. Smoot has called Thomson a reactionary. Each has denied the other's charges.

The campaign is in midstream, and statewide attention has focused on Alexandria, once thought to be Northern Virginia's last stronghold of conservatism. Here, in their own words as assembled from recent speeches, are the candidates' views on segregation:

Thomson

The most important single issue of today which affects us all is segregation. It is no secret that I have and will work to preserve segregated public education.

Thomson

I have opposed the invasion of the NAACP and the long-haired radical groups with which it is associated. I have supported segregation for two reasons:

First, because the U. S. Supreme Court's decision is plainly wrong. The decision is as wrong as if the Court said we only have the right of free speech on Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays. It is your duty and mine as citizens to oppose laws and decisions which are illegal, and if we fail to do so, we will lose our rights as individuals; our state will no longer be sovereign and we and our children will be controlled by a virtual police state of big Government, without the right to trial in many cases.

Second, I oppose the mixing of the races because it is contrary to the laws of nature. Our black and white citizens have never co-mingled on a social level. Based on that practice, the black and white peoples have been able to live in peace and harmony.

There are those who will tell you that we should simply adopt a local assignment plan. This group contemplates that under the local assignment bill some integration will have to take place. But these persons hasten to add that we'll only let a few Negroes in the white schools or a few whites in Negro schools. This is a false doctrine and we know that those who advocate it know it to be false . . .

There is no plan now nor has there ever been a plan to close the schools of this State, or of Alexandria . . .

I am for segregation and I am for keeping our public schools open. Two nights my opponent said: "We could not keep our public schools open and segregated." I believe we can. Give me your confidence and I will at least try.

Smoot

I am irrevocably dedicated to the maintenance of public schools. When I am elected your delegate to Richmond, I promise that I shall do everything in my power to see that the public school system for Alexandria is preserved.

Smoot

This I propose to do by the enactment of a local Pupil Assignment Plan. Such a plan would:

This I propose to do by the enactment of a local Pupil Assignment Plan. Such a plan would:

Leave all present students in the schools they now attend; assign new pupils on a basis of the welfare, safety and interest of the pupils, the schools and the community; and vest the power of assignment in the local school boards.

This plan must be administered in good faith. It is the most conservative and moderate solution to the problem because it is within the law and keeps our public school system intact. . .

In this campaign anyone who does not think as my opponent thinks is immediately branded an integrationist. I am for keeping the public schools open; and if that means a contained, moderate form of integration then I am for a contained, moderate form of integration . . .

Thompson supported and voted for the fund cut-off bill. This bill provides that if one colored child is admitted to an elementary school in Alexandria, then all of the elementary schools lose all State aid . . .

Thomson was a chief patron of the pupil placement law which gives to a three-man board in Richmond the power of placement over more than 600,000 Virginia school children including our own . . .

I appeal to you, the liberals, the conservatives, and the great unnumbered mass of moderates, to join and support me in my crusade to restore statesmanship to Virginia and Virginia to the leadership of statesmen.

State's compulsory school attendance law.

In Asheville, N. C., on Tuesday, the State will attempt to convince the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals to overthrow a lower court decision which declared the Pupil Placement Act unconstitutional on its face and also ordered integration to begin in Norfolk and Newport News by September.

Virginia's legal experts figure they have little chance to overthrow the desegregation orders or the September date because those are a matter of discretion by the lower court judge—Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk. Showing abuse of discretion by a judge is extremely difficult.

But they will hit hardest at Hoffman's ruling invalidating the Pupil Placement Act last January, only two weeks after it became effective.

The State's main argument is that, for a law to be declared unconstitutional on its face, there must be no conceivable set of circumstances under tion orders for Charlottesville and Arlington. But the Pupil Placement Act was not at stake in those cases. When the September term comes, the Arlington and Charlottesville officials are expected to tell the Federal courts they no longer have control ovr assignmnts, and thus over desegregation. The state hopes hat the judges then will wait until the constitutionality of the Pupil Placement Act is finally settled by the United States Supreme Court before enfircing their desegregation orders.

That means Virginia probably will not face the desegregation showdown before the February school term in 1958—right in the middle of the regular session of the General Assembly.

Court should be governed by its own ruling in an earlier Old Fort, N. C., case. Then, the Court held that a group of Negroes seeking entrance to a white school had not exhausted their administrative remedies as outlined in North Carolina's pupil placement act.

Moore devoted considerable time to explaining Virginia's fund cutoff provision. Judge Parker asked, "Doesn't that effectively close the schools?"

Moore replied that "local funds" could be used and that the city or county affected either could "reduce the offering curriculum of the schools or increase taxes."

Another test of the Placement Act is to take place in the Virginia Supreme Court, where a constitutionality suit brought by Theo. T. De Febio of Fairfax County is pending. (Judge Parker said his Court "will want to wait" until the Virginia Court rules before making its own decision if contitutionality of the Placement Act is "the deciding factor."

dered the schools to begin desegregation this fall.

A month before his desegregation orders, Hoffman called the Pupil Placement Act "unconstitutional on its face" and denied motions to dismiss the suits.

However, his ruling did not touch other phases of the state's new segregation laws—withholding of state funds from integrated schools, automatic closing of schools in which integration takes place until the governor intervenes, and state operation of schools on an "efficient" (defined by law as segregated) basis.

The placement act keeps pupils in their present schools and establishes three-man local boards to handle transfers or advancements of pupils.

The act directs the boards to consider health, welfare, aptitudes, availability of facilities and "the sociology, psychological and like intangible social-scientific factors as will prevent as nearly as possible a condition of socio-economic class consciousness among the pupils."

Placement Law

Virginia's "massive resistance" program runs into some more massive litigation this week. The Pupil Placement Act is scheduled to be hauled into both State and Federal courts.

Washington

In Richmond today, attorneys for Theo DeFebio will ask the State Supreme Court of Appeals to order the reinstatement of her two sons in Fairfax public schools.

The boys, Nicky, 9, and Teddy, 14, were expelled by Fairfax school officials in April upon the advice of the State Pupil Placement Board, after Mrs. DeFebio refused to fill out application forms required by the Board.

She said she wanted no part of any scheme to evade the United States Supreme Court's school desegregation decision. In her appeal to the State Supreme Court, however, the issue is not desegregation itself.

Norfolk Ruling

Through her attorneys, she claims the Pupil Placement Act violates both the State and Federal Constitutions. By expelling his sons, she maintains, Fairfax school officials also are forcing them to violate the which it could be held constitutional.

The Pupil Placement Act removed pupil assignment powers from local school officials and concentrated them in a three-member State board. Race is not mentioned as a basis for pupil assignment, but the Pupil Placement Board is obligated by state policy and by the current Appropriations Act to keep the schools segregated. The Appropriations Act also provides that, if any mixing of the races occurs in a school, State funds wil be cut off from a schoos of the same grades in that locality.

But the withdrawal of State funds need not mean the closing of schools, the attorneys will argue. Norfolk gets only 23 per cent of its school funds from the State, they will point out, and likely would keep its schools open. Thus, integration could occur and the Pupil Placement Act is not unconstitutional on its face, they will conclude.

To Highest Court

No matter who wins the Appeals Court decision in Asheville, there is bound to be an appeal to the United States Supreme Court, which probably won't rule on it until October, after the summer vacation.

Meantime, the Supreme Court has upheld desegrega-

Judge Queries Effect of State Placement Law

Parker Suggests Other School Acts Make Applications By Negroes Futile

Wed. 6-12-57

ASHEVILLE, N. C., June 11 (AP)—The chief of a three-judge Federal appeals court today asked attorneys for two Virginia city school boards if the effect of their state laws isn't to "tell school boards not to place Negroes" in white schools.

P. 1-B

Judge John J. Parker, Chief Judge of the United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals, hearing appeals from school integration orders in Norfolk and Newport News, Va., posed this as the central question:

"If you say the Pupil Placement Board can assign pupils to schools, then say that to place a Negro in a white school will automatically cut off that school's funds, aren't you in effect telling the Board not to place Negroes in white schools?"

Newport News attorney T. Justin Moore Sr., answered, "If the Placement Board denied entrance (to a Negro pupil) where by every other consideration he was entitled to attend a white school, then we don't question the fact that the Board misinterpreted the law."

The cases test Virginia laws which give a three-member State Board power of assigning pupils and which cut off state financial support for integrated public schools.

Parker's question came as Moore argued that the Appeals

Issues on Segregation Involved

ASHEVILLE, N. C., June 8 (AP)—Virginia's new hold-the-line segregation laws will get vital legal tests Tuesday in appeals of Norfolk and Newport News from federal court school integration orders.

The cases will be heard by the U. S. Fourth Circuit court of appeals.

The court's decision could mean closing of public schools in the two Virginia cities. Three points are at issue:

(1) The constitutionality of the Virginia school segregation laws, especially the Pupil Placement Act.

(2) Whether U. S. district Judge Walter E. Hoffman of Norfolk abused his discretion in ordering the schools to drop color barriers this fall.

(3) Whether the three-judge appeals court should review the decisions—a technical issue.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP) brought the suits in 1956 to admit Negroes to white schools of the two cities.

Integration at Work!

Courier Oct. 6-28-57

School integration in the state of West Virginia is paying off. In one county, Kanawha, the chemical center and site of the state capital, school officials noted savings of $250,000 this year.

• Other West Virginia counties indicated that considerable amounts of money have been saved by eliminating separate school facilities for Negro and white children.

• The teacher shortage also has been eased by consolidating classes and using Negro teachers in the desegregated program.

• As the school year came to a close, county superintendents and board members said they were satisfied with results of the first year of full desegregation.

• In extra-curricular activities, Negro and white pupils are elected to class offices, they work together on the school newspapers and they show their skills on the same football, baseball and basketball teams. Only at social events is segregation still in evidence, and this is said to be by choice.

Troopers Escort Negroes Back to W. Virginia School

MATOAKA, W.VA., Oct. 2 (AP)—Four of Matoaka High School's 10 Negro pupils returned to classes without incident today. The anti-integration outbursts of the two previous days appeared to be all but over.

The four arrived in a special school bus and were escorted to the door by state troopers. There was no loitering of white pupils to cause a commotion on the street, for police herded pupils into the building as soon as they arrived.

Many of the white pupils were escorted to school by their parents. Principal Ralph Bird said he was not readmitting those who took part in the demonstrations yesterday and Monday until he had conferred with them and their parents.

Matoaka High was integrated last year. Similar demonstrations and a temporary boycott of classes took place at that time.

400 in Parade Hit Integration

WELCH, W. Va., Sept. 27 (AP)—Approximately 400 Welch High School students cut classes and staged a parade today in protest of racial integration. Most of them returned after a two-hour absence and a special assembly called by Principal E. W. Richardson.

The students marched through the business section carrying signs which read: "We Support Little Rock" and "We Don't Want Integration."

Eight Negroes are among the 1000 enrolled at the school. State, county and city police were present at the school to prevent any disorder. None was reported.

Richardson told the special assembly that the parade did not express the sentiment of the entire student body and that it was instigated by a few ring leaders.

At Blueneid, also in southern West Virginia, classes proceeded without incident today. Yesterday about 75 white students at Beaver High School staged a protest parade against integration, marching along a street near the school carrying a sign that read, "In Sympathy with Little Rock." Ten Negro students are registered at Beaver High.

SCHOOL BIAS ENDS IN A BORDER CITY

New York Times

Charleston, W. Va., Adjusting Well, Although Prejudice Remains in Homes

Wed. 5-15-57

This is the second of several articles on the integration of Negro and white students and teachers in public schools in accordance with the Supreme Court's decision.

By BENJAMIN FINE

Special to The New York Times.

CHARLESTON, W. Va., May 9—The mother of a fourth grade pupil at Mercer elementary school stormed into the principal's office on the opening day of school last fall.

"What is this I hear about a Negro going to teach my boy?" she demanded.

Mrs. Bessie H. Stewart, the principal, explained that by order of the Board of Education, integration was now the school policy.

"I can't take it," the woman shouted. "I'm from Mississippi. My husband was born in Tennessee. If my child has a Negro teacher I'll take him out and send him to a private school."

"Please," the principal asked, "try the new teacher. Give her a chance."

A week later, the Mississippi-born woman came to Mrs. Stewart and said, quietly:

"Mrs. Stewart, I was wrong. Jimmie loves his teacher. I guess I'll let him remain at Mercer for the rest of the year."

Integration in Effect

When integration was put into effect in Kanawha County last fall, the school officials and community leaders had their fingers crossed. In the fall of 1955, mixed classes were ordered for the first, second and seventh grades. Last September, the entire school system from kindergarten through high school became integrated.

At first there were grumblings, [illegible] that expressed by the mother from Mississippi. The superintendent, Dr. L. K. Lovenstein, had several anonymous telephone calls, threatening violence. The police were alerted but they were not needed.

Charleston, the state capital, is part of Kanawha County, in the heart of the West Virginia mountains. About 57,000 pupils, 3,000 of them Negroes, are enrolled. Only 129 of the 1,961 teachers are Negro.

Charleston and the entire county had always had a segregated system of educaation. When the decision to integrate was taken, Dr. Lovenstein and the board members called upon the parent-teachers associations, the citizen groups, and the press to help smooth the way.

"We couldn't have received better cooperation," said Herbert M. Beddow, president of the board of education. "Everyone agreed that integration must be made to succeed without violence."

Times

It has Negro and white children are found in every part of the county. Negro teachers have been assigned to all-white schools, even to communities where Negroes are not permitted to live. Eighteen all-Negro schools been abandoned. Three were merged with white ones. The district lines of eight schools were changed to permit Negroes to attend.

P. 19-C

System Saves $250,000

School officials estimate that the immediate saving this year will be $250,000 out of a budget of $11,000,000. The economies will become even greater in the years ahead, they predict.

There is no indication that the educational standards have been lowered. Dr. Lovenstein points to the high standards of Negro instruction—the small pupil-teacher ratio and the corps of adequately trained Negro teachers—as reasons why the Negro children kept pace with the academic achievements of their white classmates while they were in a segregated system.

To some parents, acceptance of Negro teachers in mixed classes came hard. While visiting a friend, Mr. Beddow was taken to task for assigning a Negro teacher to the fourth grade. The father spoke harshly against Negro teachers in general and this one in particular.

Wed. 5-15-57

His 10-year-old daughter, overhearing the conversation, broke into the room.

"You're talking about my teacher," she said to her father indignantly. "She's the best teacher I've ever had."

"The father hushed up fast," Mr. Beddows said. "He's for integration now."

Operating Smoothly

As the first full year of an integrated program draws to a close, the pupils and teachers agree that the program has operated smoothly.

"I'd like to have my teacher again next year," Billy, 9, said of his Negro instructor.

"I like being here with my white friends," Tom, 10, who was in an all-Negro class a year ago, added happily. "My teacher is real nice."

He doesn't even refer to the fact that she is white—the first white teacher he has ever had.

On the elementary level, almost without exception, Negro children and white ones play and study together. As was found in Wilmington, Del., the youngsters here are "color-blind." They make no distinction between races in the classroom or on the play yards.

A fourth-grade teacher, Mrs. Maude Bennett, has eighteen white and ten Negro pupils in her class. She has been a teacher for thirty-two years, and this is the first time she has taught an integrated class.

"I can't see any difference at all," Mrs. Bennett said. "The colored and white children do just about the same work. In the spelling bees, sometimes a white child will come out ahead, sometimes a Negro."

The class officers were called to order by Mrs. Bennett. They gathered around her desk to decide how best to keep the room clean.

The president, James Randall, who wants to be a pilot, is a Negro, as is the assistant secretary, Jane Clayton, a future teacher. The vice president, Linda Stillwell, and the secretary of the class, Margaret Moses, are white.

Chosen for Ability

This situation is common throughout the school system. Negroes are elected to student offices, they are on the athletic teams, they work for the student newspapers and join the dramatic clubs. But, the students are quick to say, the Negro pupils are chosen on the basis of ability, not color.

"We love Jimmy Randall," his classmates said. "He's a good president."

The townspeople have come to accept this school integration. Recently about 100 elementary children marched through the streets to attend a concert in the center of the city. Quite by accident, the informal procession was led by a third grade Negro boy and a third grade white girl. Hand-in-hand they marched down the street at the head of the procession.

"I wondered what the people were staring at," a school official said. "Then suddenly I realized. We are so used to seeing Negro and white children playing together in schools that we just don't notice it anymore. For the citizens, however, it must have been a novelty."

Most Teachers White

Because the great majority of teachers and pupils are white, most of the youngsters are taught by white teachers. For the first time, these teachers find Negro children in their classrooms.

Jean Ferguson, a third grade teacher with thirty-five years' experience, is typical of many. Until this year she had taught all-white classes. Now she has a class of thirteen Negroes and thirteen whites.

"It was difficult to get used to it at first," she said, "It's made my work more difficult and more challenging.

"But I haven't found any real difference in intelligence between the two races. There are slow and fast readers among both the Negroes and the white children."

The Negro parents come to the P. T. A. meetings, Miss Ferguson said, in the same proportion as the white parents. They cooperate with her whenever special problems arise, she said.

"I don't mind teaching a mixed class now," she added. I'll probably get another one next fall. I certainly won't ask for an all-white class."

Transfers Possible

Parents who do not want their children to attend mixed classes or who object to Negro teachers may ask for a transfer. However, if the class to which they wish their child transferred has more than thirty pupils, the child will not be admitted. Also, they have to pay transportation costs of $4 a month on the elementary level, $12 on the high school.

"We have had mighty few requests for transfers," Dr. Lovenstein said. "Our parents seem to accept things as they are."

Negro Teacher Assigned

Sometimes a Negro teacher is placed in an all-white school. Mrs. Stella Meiner at the Chandler School is an example. She has forty-one fourth-grade pupils, and they are "crazy" about her, in their own words. "She's a good teacher," the children said.

"My mother says," a long-haired girl of 9 remarked, "that Mrs. Meiner is the nicest teacher she ever met."

Mrs. Meiner always had taught Negro children. Now she teaches only white children. The educational standards are similar, however, he said.

"I don't find any differences at all, she said. "They are all such lovely children."

Dr. Lovenstein explained her appointment:

"There was a vacancy at the school and Mrs. Meiner had the necessary qualifications, so we gave her the job."

Another Is Appointed

A similar situation exists at the Clendenin Junior High School, twenty miles from Charleston. No Negro had ever taught in this school of 864 children and twenty-seven teachers. Moreover no Negro had ever lived in Clendenin, a mining and farming community.

A Negro teacher, Arned Brown, was brought in last September to teach art and history. He is accepted by the community, students and teachers. For the first time in Clendenin, seven students have won art prizes in national competitions.

The students sing the praises of Mr. Brown.

"He is the best teacher I've ever had," is the typical comment of the 254 students whom he teaches.

"We have forgotten that he's colored," Debbie Karr, the senior class president, said. "When he first came here, I was prejudiced. I didn't like Negroes. Well, I've certainly changed my mind now. I think they're as good as we are."

Bias Begins Outside

However, integration stops in the classroom or on the athletic field; it is not carried over into the home. When a colored student at the Thomas Jefferson High School came to a party given by one of his classmates, he was asked to leave.

"Please don't take this as a personal affront," the mother of the boy giving the party said. "We just aren't used to having Negroes at our parties. Maybe when integration is farther along we'll be able to invite you."

"I got a phone call from a boy in my class," said Mary Bowditch, 14, a high school freshman. "Mother didn't like it when she learned he was colored. When he called again she wouldn't let me talk to him. But really he only wanted to carry on a pleasant conversation."

At the school dances the Negro and white pupils are not allowed to exchange dances.

"The community is not ready to go that far," said the dean of girls at the Seonewall Jackson High School.

"We'll have to takt integration step by step," said Mrs. John C. Norman, a Negro teacher active in community affairs. "You can't hold the dawn back indefinitely."

Ala. A&M Wins Stock Contest

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 4-13-57

NORMAL, Ala. — Top team honors in livestock judging competition and second place individual honors were taken by Alabama A and M college contestants April 1 and 2 when participants from a six-state area vied in the Southeastern regional livestock judging contest at Normal.

The Alabama A and M team, consisting of four active members and one alternate, racked up a total of 1,447 points to 1,350 for the runner-up South Carolina State college team, and scored 373 points to 394 for Fort Valley State college of Fort Valley, Ga., for runner-up position in individual effort.

A year ago at Southern university, Baton Rouge, La., the South Carolina State team nosed out the Alabama A and M squad by a score of 1,361 points to 1,289.

Individual scoring honors this year were taken by Olan Faulk who beat out Thornton Stanley by 21 points.

In addition to Stanley, the Alabama A and M team consisted of Prince Preyer, Eddie Player, and Ervin Romine, with Booker T. Booker Jr. serving as alternate.

Coach of the winning team was W. E. Booker of the A and M college staff, assisted by W. Q. Scott, county agent, and P. L. Ashford, assistant county agent. J. B. Epps was coach of the runner-up South Carolina State College team.

Other colleges participating in the competition and their team scores were: Fort Valley State college and Florida A and M university of Tallahassee, tied with 1,336 points each; Southern university of Baton Rouge, 1,302 points; A and T. college of Greensboro, N. C., 1,244 points; and Tuskegee institute, 1,195 points.

The judging embraced six areas, consisting of poultry, dairy, swine, beef, sheep, and steers. Winners in these areas and their points were South Carolina State, poultry, 326 and sheep, 156; A and T, beef, 325; Florida A and M, swine, 318 and dairy, 274; Alabama A and M, steers, 183.

Folsom Names 3 Educators To Study Body

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. Sun. 9-13-57

Gov. James E. Folsom yesterday named three educators—one a Negro college president—to the Lackey-Edwards Educational Study Commission.

Named by the governor as his appointees to the board were Dr. David Mullins, executive vice president of Alabama Polytechnic Institute, Auburn; Mrs. George Yarbrough of Wedowee, wife of Sen. George Yarbrough and a teacher in the public schools there, and Dr. J. F. Drake, president of Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College, Normal, a Negro college.

P. 12B

The appointments completed the membership of the 21-man group which is to make a study of school needs in the state. The legislature has appropriated $50,000 for the study, which is to be completed before the next legislative session.

MEMBERS ELECTED

Four members of the State Senate and five members of the House of Representatives already had been elected by their colleagues to serve on the study commission. Also already named were nine laymen elected by legislators from each of the state's congressional districts.

The appointment of Mrs. Yarbrough came as an obvious token of appreciation on the governor's part for Sen. Yarbrough's work for education in the Senate. In fact, administration forces pushed the nomination of Yarbrough for election to the body from that house, but failed to have him elected.

Yarbrough, an independent in the Senate, permitted final approval of the study group by amending a bill setting it up to provide for three educator-members.

POCKET VETOED

The Lackey-Edwards bill, which set up the commission, first passed both houses of the Legislature in 1955, but was pocket vetoed by Gov. Folsom. In its original form, it provided that no representatives from education could serve.

In the filibustering Senate two weeks ago, Yarbrough won his amendment, then permitted the bill to pass without objections. The bill provided that while the governor could name three educators, he could name none who holds elective office.

Nine lay members of the commission elected by the Legislature last week are Clifton B. Gilmore of Grove Hill, Thomas D. Russell of Alexander City, Hayse Tucker of Tuscaloosa, Hugh Comer of Sylacauga, Earl Pippin of Montgomery, H. B. Larkin of Elba, Howell Heflin of Tuscumbia, G. T. Walker of Kennedy and Mervyn H. Sterne of Birmingham.

The House elected Reps. Hugh Kaul of Jefferson, Hugh Merrill of Calhoun, Joe Dawkins of Montgomery, Virgis Ashworth of Bibb and McDowell Lee of Barbour to the group.

Chosen as the Senate members were Sens. Joe Smith of Russell, Herman Vann of Madison, E. O. Eddins of Marengo and Bart Cantrell of Colbert.

2 Departments At API Lose Accreditation

Advertiser

AUBURN, Ala., Nov. 30 (AP)—The Engineers' Council for Professional Development has notified Alabama Polytechnic Institute that accreditation has been temporarily withdrawn for the curricula in electrical and mechanical engineering.

The action came at the Council's recent annual meeting following an inspection last April.

The Council in its report to API President Ralph B. Draughon gave these reasons

1. Faculty teaching load in these departments are considered excessive.

2. Faculty salaries are too low in the judgement of the council.

The accrediting agency said these weaknesses have existed since 1949.

It was charged that "the situation with regard to the faculty has not only failed to improve in the past eight years, but has changed, if at all, for the worse.

"It is on this basis that the curricula . . . are judged to be below minimum standards," the report said.

The Engineers' Council added that the increasing competition from industry and other better-financed colleges, coupled with the failure to receive sufficient funds, has made it impossible for Auburn to raise salaries sufficiently or to increase the size of the faculty in proportion to the growing enrollment.

It noted an enrollment increase in the Auburn School of Engineering from 1,255 in 1951 to 3,249 in 1957.

Advertiser

The report referred to previous warnings of the impending action against Auburn as given by school administrators.

"President Draughon and other administrative officials have jeopardy in a number of important areas of the institution.

"Following the action of the 1957 legislative session, which granted a small increase in the appropriation to the institution, salaries were increased considerably; however, they are still too low and no funds were provided to employ additional teachers," the report added.

"It is hoped that sufficient funds will be made available in the near future to enable college officials to correct this situation," the Council said.

College Group To Continue Study Of Important Books

14e(1)

Advertiser Sun. 9-29-57

One year ago, October last, some 36 or more individuals from Alabama State college and the college community assembled in the George Washington Trenholm Library for the expressed immediate purpose of becoming more closely acquainted with the Great Books Foundation movement; and the subsequent purpose of forming a first year course discussion group with a sustained participating membership of 15 to 20.

This first meeting was the culmination of a series of concerted efforts in planning and making proper contacts on the part of the college administration and the library in extending the services of the library to the college and the community.

Particular library personalities, whose efforts brought into fruition —"Great Books" at Alabama State, were Miss Frances Pollard, the initiator of the idea and who likewise had shared participation in the movement with a group in Cleveland, Ohio, and Miss Ollie L. Brown, College Librarian.

FIRST MEETING

The first meeting of the group, as well as the two meetings which followed, was under the supervision of Tom Harris, then the Regional Director of "The Great Books Foundation" with assistance from Miss Pollard. Mrs. Harris explained the Great Books Foundation movement from the point of view of its objectives and then later explained the "Rules of the Game."

As indicated by the director as well as the literature, The Great Books program has the basic objective of universal, free, liberal education—"through keeping alive the common heritage of thought, sensibility and faith which finds expression in the great books of our tradition," and moreover, which finds implementation through reading and discussion from which one may get a richer and deeper comprehension of what the good life can be and from which he can get help in leading the good life for self; for the community and for the nation.

NUCLEUS OF GROUP

Out of the two interest acquaintance discussion meetings, at which time the discussions were centered in issues and ideas from "The Declaration of Independence" and Mortimer Adler's "Adult Education." Twenty-two members of the initial group became more or less the nucleus of the first year course discussion group for "Great Books."

Excluding several other staff members of the library who were automatically a part of the program, the group of 22 included: Dr. Reva W. Allman, Dr. W. E. Anderson, L. R. Ballou, Beverly Booth, Miss Ollie L. Brown, Mrs. Mary F. Burks, Dr. V. E. Daniel, Dr. and Mrs. F. A. De Costa, John Jones, Dr. A. L. Lacey, Dr. W. D. Pettus, J. E. Pierce, Dr. L. D. Reddick, Mrs. Thelma A. Rice, President H. C. Trenholm, Dr. and Mrs. H. L. Van Dyke, Mrs. Elmer Reynolds, who served as secretary, Miss Frances Pollard and Mrs. George W. Jones, who were the discussion leaders.

Among the significant features of the behavior of the discussion group was the consistent application to human problems skills in reading better, talking better and thinking better. Adherence to 'The Rules of the Game" contributed immeasureably to implementation of that significant feature. Meeting for a two-hour period twice each month, prompted by provocative questions from the leaders, the group discussed the "Great Books" in terms of the issues raised in them, and now what others said about them, and the authors' ideas, which were considered seriously in a vein of free agreement or disagreements based on reasons as well as in terms of a third level—of what the author has to say to us right now in this day.

THE GREAT BOOKS

Within the 16 meetings for the year from Oct. 20, 1956 through May 1957 the first year course was completed. "Great Books" included in the course were: "Declaration of Independence," Plato: "Apology; Crito," Sophocles: "Antigone," Aristotle: "Politics," book 1, Plutarch: "Lycurgus and Numa," "The Gospel according to St. Mathew," Epitetus: "Discourses," selections, Machiavelli: "The Prince," Shakespeare: "Macbeth," "The Federalists," Selections, "Constitution of the United States," Tocqueville: "Democracy in America," Selections Marx and Engels: "Communist Manifesto," Thoreau: "Civil Disobedience; "Walden," Selections, and Tolstoy: "The Death of Ivan Ilych."

For this 1957-58 year, the initial meeting of the group for the second year course was held Wednesday evening, last with a group of twelve. The discussion centered in Ecclesiastes." Other "Great Books" for this second year course will include: Homer: "The Odyssey," Spohocles: "Oedipus Rex;" "Oedipus at Colonus;" Plato: "Meno," Aristotle: "Ethics," Selections, Lucretius: 'Of the Nature of Things," Books I-III, St. Augustine: 'Confessions," Books I-VIII, Shakespeare: "Hamlet," Descartes: "Discourse on Method," Hobbes: "Leviathan," Selections, Pascal: "Pensees," Selections, Swift: "Gullivers Travels," Rousseau: "On the Origin of Inequality," Kant: "Perpetual Peace," Mill: "On Liberty" and Mark Twain: "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn."

In attendance at the first meeting were: Leonard R. Bellow, Beverly Booth, Dr. Ralph Bryson, Mrs. Mary F. Burks, Dr. V. E. Daniel, Father Dubose, J. E. Pierce, Dr. W. D. Pettus, Dr. L. D. Reddick, Mrs. Thalms A. Rice, Mrs. Jo-Ann Robinson, and Miss Frances M. Pollard, discussion leader. The group regreted very much the absence of Miss Ollie L. Brown whose absence was due to her indisposition for several days.

There are plans under way for implementing a first year course of "Great Books" for students.

Negro Educators Meet Here

Advertiser 8/10/61

More than 300 Negro school principals and supervisors are in Montgomery for a conference on educational leadership which is being held in Tullibody Auditorium at Alabama State College.

A public program will be held at 8 p.m. today in the auditorium, at which Dr. Hilliard Bowen, area superintendent of schools in Atlanta, will be the speaker.

Dr. Bowen, who holds the Ph. D. degree in education from Ohio State University, has held positions in colleges in Georgia, Oklahoma, and Tennessee.

Sessions will continue through Wednesday afternoon. Nine small work groups compose the core of the conference, whose theme is "Educational Leadership For Instructional Improvement."

Dr. Robert E. Cummins of Auburn, field representative of the Southern Education Foundation, was the keynote speaker at the opening session yesterday afternoon. Dr. J. C. Blair, director of the division of secondary education of the State Department of Education, is the general conference coordinator, assisted by Dr. H. Councill Trenholm and Dr Robert C. Hatch.

Founders' Day To Be Marked At Alabama State College

Sun. 2-3-57

Observance of Founders' Day and Negro History Week will high light activities on the campus of Alabama State College this month.

Founders' Day will be staged Saturday at 7:30 p.m. in Tullibody Auditorium and will cap 57 years of the college's tribute to William Burns Paterson who served Alabama State for 37 years in its formative stages.

After preparatory assembly programs Tuesday and Thursday of this week, laboratory school students will make their customary pilgrimage to Oakwood Cemetery to place wreaths on the graves of Paterson, John William Beverly, George Washington Trenholm and Mary Frances Terrell.

Founders' Day began in 1901 when Miss Terrell sponsored a sixth-grade classroom program on the birthday of Paterson who was born in Tullibody, Scotland, Feb. 9, 1849. Program that night will be "The Paterson Years at Montgomery."

NOTED SPEAKER

Negro History Week will begin Sunday at 4 p.m. with an address by Dr. Lorenzo J. Green of Lincoln University in Missouri and a member of the board of directors of the Assn. for the Study of Negro Life and History. Dr. Greene will speak at the State College branch in Mobile the following day.

Assembly programs Feb. 12 and Feb. 14 will honor the birthdays of Abraham Lincoln and Frederick Douglass.

1957 will mark the end of 73 years in Montgomery by Alabama College. The college was reestablished here in 1887 as the Alabama Colored Peoples University after 13 preceding years in Marion.

In 1889 the school was designated the State Normal School for Colored Teachers and Students. It was during the last nine years at Marion and the first 28 years of the school's existence in Montgomery that Paterson made his outstanding contributions to the field of Negro education.

Founders' Day Observance Slated At State College

Advertiser Mon. 2-4-57
Montgomery, Ala.

Founder's Day and Negro History Week are the two special February observances for which programs are now announced by Alabama State Colleye.

The Founder's Day observance will be staged on Saturday night, Feb. 9, at 7:30 in Tullibody Auditorium. There will be the preparatory assembly programs on Tuesday and Thursday of this week. There will also be the customary pilgrimage of Laboratory School students to Lakewood Cemetery to place wreaths on the graves of the late William Burns Paterson, the late John William Beverly, the late George Washington Trenholm and the late Mary Frances Terrell.

The Negro History Week observances will begin with a public occasion at Tullibody Auditorium on Sunday afternoon, Feb. 10, at 4 p.m. Dr. Lorenzo J. Greene of Lincoln University, Missouri, who is both a distinguished scholar and a member of the board of directors of the Assn. for the Study of Negro Life and History, will make the address. Dr. Greene will also speak at the Alabama State Branch College at Mobile on Monday, Feb. 11. The assembly program on Feb. 12 will feature the birthday tribute to Abraham Lincoln. The assembly program on Feb. 14 will feature the birthday anniversary tribute to Fredrick Douglass.

This 1957 Founder's Day program will be the 57th Founder's Day observance. It was back in 1901 that the late Miss Mary Frances Terrell sponsored a sixth-grade classroom program on the birthday of the late William Burns Paterson who had been born in Tullibody, Scotland, on Feb. 9, 1849 and who was to serve "State Normal" for 37 formative and crucial years (1878-1915). This surprise tribute was so gratefully received that it was continued each year. For the past 40 years, since the death of Paterson in 1915, this birthdate of Feb. 9 has become the occasion for program observances at the college and by various alumni chapters.

This year of 1957 has added "anniversary significance." Seventy years in Montgomery are being completed this year. The now Alabama State College had been reestablished in Montgomery in 1887 as The Alabama Colored Peoples University after a preceding 13 years at Marion. There was still to be a third establishment date of 1889 for The State Normal School for Colored Teachers and Students. After nine years at Marion (beginning in 1878), the revered William Burns Paterson was to make a most momentous contribution during the subsequent 28 years (1887-1915) at Montgomery.

The program feature for Saturday night will be a documentary presentation of "The Paterson Years at Montgomery." Graduates and students and teachers in the days of Paterson will be the honored guests. The customary Founder's Day contributions will be received . . . the first contribution of $50 from the Alumni Chapter at Columbus, Ga., having been received on Friday.

There is appeal for community-wide participation in this special series of programs which Alabama State College will present.

Jack And Jill Club Gives Check To State College

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala.
Mon. 2-18-57

The 1957 celebration of Alabama State College's Founder's Day will go down in the history of the Montgomery chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Incorporated as a momentous occasion. It was at this celebration that the chapter made a contribution to President H. C. Trenholm for the college's continued progress. Miss Dorothy Ann Duncan made the presentation speech and Stephen Elmore presented the check for $100 to President Trenholm.

Realizing that Alabama State College fills a very definite need to the community, the Jack and Jill chapter could not pass up the opportunity to give to the college to aid in its continued effort to improve its facilities. It is a well known fact that the college could never have attained its height without the outstanding leadership of President Trenholm.

Through his untiring efforts, Alabama State College has grown at a tremendous rate and this has been done through the generosity of its students, alumni, friends and the Montgomery community. And so, the Montgomery chapter of Jack and Jill of America, Incorporated is proud to be numbered among those who have contributed to the college's growth, and wishes for the continued success of its eminent president.

MONTGOMERY, Ala. — "You can't go home again to the places that you left four years ago, because those places are no longer the same. You can't go home again because you are no longer the same.

"On the other hand, you must go home . . .because the answer to our trials and tribulations lies not in flight to some imaginary utopia in the North, but in having more and more trained people, colored and white, remain in the South and make the contributions that their skill, courage and faith in democracy enable them to make."

THIS WAS the challenge of the commencement address delivered at Alabama State College in Montgomery on May 13 (and the Mobile branch on May 14) by Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of Hampton Institute.

"We have waited for full freedom to come to us as a gift from the benevolent hands of those who were our friends, and as a reward for our patience from those who were our oppressors.

"BUT IN the end, we had to get it ourselves," and he praised the non-violent, courageous leadership of the Rev. Martin Luther King and the ready and willing NAACP.

Dr. Moron concluded his address by admonishing the graduates that it was their responsibility to "strive for the full implementation of all the rights which the Constitution guarantees to all citizens of the United States."

COLLEGE PRACTICE TEACHERS TO PRESENT PLAY

Alabama Journal Montgomery, Ala. May 4-25-57 p. 4-B

Education 463 Class, Directed Teaching, under the direction of S. W. Walker, supervisor, will present an educational drama entitled "Sammy's Dilemma" on Tuesday, March 26, at Trilibody Auditorium, 7:30 p.m. It concerns reasons why adolescents become desolate and quit school. Sammy, a 15-year-old boy, has become a victim of ridicule and sarcasm by his classmates because of his family, background, and socio-economic status. These two factors play a great part in causing Sammy to withdraw from all social and school activities and consequently becomes a social recluse.

He has without doubt innate ability to excel but he refuses to respond. Evidence of his problems comes out in the devastating and disgusting scenes where his daddy, a drunkard, reveals to the public just what conditions exist in his home. A solution to these problems is sought through the aid of school authorities—guidance counselors, teachers, P.T.A., and other social organizations emulating in the community and school. The public is invited.

Arson Blamed in $300,000 Fire At Albany College for Negroes

ALBANY, Ga., Sept. 27 (AP)—A $300,000 pre-dawn fire was deliberately set at the Albany State College for Negroes Friday, officers reported.

But whether the arsonists more likely were white or Negro, investigators did not agree.

Varying reports placed a blond white man in a red-checked shirt and three 17 or 18-year-old white youths — all unidentified — suspiciously at the scene between 3 and 4 a.m.

But a city fireman declared that three men he saw running from a flaming building were Negroes.

Wiped out was the $250,000 brick one-story Hazard Training School, attended by some 250 elementary pupils and used by the college to train young Negro teachers. Arrangements were made to continue the practice school at other buildings of the two-million-dollar college plant.

While the training school burned down, flames spewed up at nearby Caroline Hall, combination auditorium and administration building.

Damage there was placed at between $25,000 and $50,000 by W. H. Dennis, Negro president of the state-supported coeducational school of some 450 enrollment.

City detective W. M. Harris said the auditorium stage directly underneath the curtains had been doused with an inflammable liquid, probably gasoline, and that the fire obviously was incendiary.

"There was no question about that," said Harris. "It definitely was set."

Meanwhile, Gov. Griffin issued the following statement:

"We have had no violence in Georgia as yet. I am informed that there has been no violence of any kind in Albany or Dougherty County and race relations in that section have been most harmonious.

"The burning of a building at the state Negro college, if the fire was set by irresponsible hands, is certainly regrettable. Nothing has been gained and the act is one which will cost the taxpayers of Georgia.

"I have been informed by local law enforcement agencies in Albany and Dougherty County that investigation is being made now and action will be taken as in all other cases of arson.

"Since local law enforcement officers are on the job, I will not send state forces for investigation in Albany unless requested to do so. I am further informed by Mr. James Gray, editor of The Albany Herald, that the school will be rebuilt immediately."

Running down the red-checked shirt lead, Dougherty County police quickly picked up a suspect wearing a similar garment. But the firemen declared he was not the man and he was released.

Harris quoted fireman E. W. Peterson as saying three slicker-clad men he saw hurriedly leaving flaming Caroline Hall definitely were Negroes. Observers noted, however, that Peterson was some distance from the scene and the light at the early hour was not too good.

Another fireman, who asked that he not be identified, was quoted as saying three white youths talked with him soon after the firemen arrived about 3:15 a.m. They left, he added, and he saw them going toward Caroline Hall a few minutes before it flamed up.

Dennis said he understood that white youths were seen fleeing the burning building. He emphasized that he regarded the fire as an act of vandalism and was unwilling to attach any racial significance to it.

Harris said that the identity of the white youths would be checked out and they would be asked to explain their presence at the early-morning blaze.

The fire was found to be just outside the city limits and the burden of the investigation fell on the forces of Sheriff D. C. Campbell and county police chief Jimmy Palmer. City officers and fire investigators cooperated.

Campbell assigned two deputies full-time to the inquiry.

The practice school pupils and new college students already had begun classes for the new school year. Upperclassmen began arriving yesterday and registered today.

NEGRO COLLEGE IS SET ON FIRE; LOSS $300,000

Differ Whether Vandals White or Negro

Albany, Ga., Sept. 27 (AP)—Fire attributed to vandals did damage estimated at neraly $300,000 to the Albany State College for Negroes early today. Albany is in south Georgia, about 70 miles north of the Florida state line.

Firemen, police, and school officials agreed that two or three persons were seen running from a building which flared up while the flames were destroying another. They differed whether the persons were white or Negro.

There seemed little doubt that the fire was incendiary. "There was no question about that," said Detective W. M. Harris. "It definitely was set."

Teachers' School Destroyed

Wiped out was the one-story Hazard Training school, attended by some 250 Negro pupils and used by the college to train Negro teachers. It was valued by W. H. Dennis, president of the college, at $250,000.

While it was going up in flames, fire broke out in nearby Caroline hall, housing the college auditorium and administration offices. Dennis said damage there was between $25,000 and $50,000.

Dennis, who also attributed the fire to vandals, said he understood white youths were seen fleeing Caroline hall. But Harris asserted that E. W. Peterson, a fireman, had a good look at the fleeing figures and they were Negroes.

Doused with Gasoline

The detective said there were white youths at the scene, but they apparently were spectators, attracted by the early morning blaze. They stopped and talked with firemen and newsmen, he related, adding that this was something that guilty persons would not be likely to do.

However, Harris said, officers intended to check out the identity of the white persons and ask them how they came to be at the fire, first reported around 2 a. m.

The fire in the auditorium and administration building started at the front of the stage just below the curtains. Harris said there was indisputable evidence that the stage had been doused with an inflammable liquid, probably gasoline.

The blaze flamed up also in the corridor of the east wing of this structure, but the detective said it apparently spewed out from the auditorium.

Dennis said that while none of the other buildings of the college plant, valued at 2 million dollars, actually was damaged, all were threatened seriously.

Dennis said the fire appeared to him simply as an act of vandalism. He was unwilling, he said, to attach any racial significance to it.

Two Buildings Burn; Vandalism Suspected

ALBANY, Ga. — (SNS) — Two fires, one attributed to arson, destroyed an estimated $350,000 in property Friday at Albany State College.

The blazes broke out within a two-hour period early Friday and completely ravaged a school laboratory and caused considerable damage to an auditorium.

The fire, which completely destroyed hazard Training School and heavily damaged Caroline Hall, the Administration Building, was believed due to the work of a vandal using a chemical explosive. Albany fire officials launched an investigation to discover the cause.

According to President William Dennis, the Hazard School fire was discovered around 2:30 o'clock Friday morning. The blaze spread rapidly.

While this fire was being brought under control, some of the crowd of spectators at the scene noticed smoke oozing from Caroline Hall further down the street. Firemen quickly brought this blaze under control after damage was done the auditorium stage, organ and piano, as well as portraits of founder Dr. J. W. Holley and benefactor Miss Caroline Hazard.

Two partial walls to the front of the razed Hazard school building were left standing, while some 350 elementary pupils were left without training facilities. However, authorities said arrangements for their schooling would be made by the first of next week. Hazard was the model teaching demonstration facility of Albany State College.

Officials Friday said they were at a loss to explain a motive for the suspected arson They reported no racial conflicts.

The honorable Judge Johnson is married to the former Miss Elizabeth Dennis of Brunswick, Georgia who is sister to President W. H. Dennis, Jr. of Albany State College.

Vandals Blamed in Fire at Georgia Negro College

Burned ruins of Hazard Training School at State College for Negroes in Albany, Ga.

ALBANY, Ga., Sept. 26 (AP) —Fire attributed to vandals did damage estimated at nearly $300,000 to the Albany State College for Negroes early today. 400

Firemen, police and school officials agreed that two or three persons had been seen running from a building that flared up while the flames were destroying another.

"There was no question about it," said W. M. Harris, city detective. "It definitely was set."

Wiped out was the one-story Hazard Training School, attended by some 250 Negro pupils and used by the college to train Negro teachers. It was valued by W. H. Dennis, president of the college, at $250,000.

While it was going up in flames about 2 P. M., fire broke out in near-by Caroline Hall, housing the college auditorium and administration offices. Mr. Dennis said damage there was between $25,000 and $50,000.

Mr. Dennis, who attributed the fire to vandals, said he understood white youths were seen fleeing Caroline Hall.

But Mr. Harris declared that a fireman had a good look at the fleeing figures and said they were Negroes.

Albany is about seventy miles north of the Florida state line. Enrollment last year ranged between 425 and 450.

rium and administration building —flamed up. P.T.A. Wed. 10-2-57

It was around Caroline Hall that suspicious figures were reported. Some of the firemen said they thought they saw white persons; others Negroes. None was identified by name.

Fire Inspector D. M. Arrington said he was inclined to feel that anyone seen might well have been a spectator. He pointed out that the night was rainy, visibility was poor and, from the distance, it would have been difficult to identify by race, let alone name.

One theory now advanced is that lights were left burning in Caroline Hall, an old building, and a short-circuit ignited the curtains of the auditorium stage. Fire also broke out in the corridor of a wing of this building but an investigator said this seemed to have come from the auditorium blaze.

A city detective said the day of the fire that there was indisputable evidence that the stage had been doused with an inflammable liquid. Later investigators said, however, that they had been unable to substantitate this statement and it would have to be regarded at the ti mebeing as only the detective's opinion.

Both the investigators and President W. H. Dennis Jr. of the college emphasized that there was no indication that racialism was involved. They agreed that if it should be proved that the buildings were set, it would be an act of vandals and not of racial agitators.

Dennis estimated that about $250,000 would be required to replace the destroyed building and repair the damaged one. He earlier had placed the damage at upward of $300,000.

Arson Suspected In Fire At Georgia Negro College

ALBANY, Ga., Oct. 1 (AP)—Investigators today began to question whether arson was involved in an early morning fire that destroyed one building and damaged another at Albany State College for Negroes. Advertiser

Fire Chief E. E. Moody said that an intensive inquiry so far had uncovered no positive evidence of incendiarism in Friday's blaze, although firemen had reported seeing figures running from the damaged building. Montgomery

ALBANY, Ga. — For the second time within 12 months, fires have ravaged buildings on a Negro college campus in the Deep South. A $300,000 blaze consumed one building and damaged another last week on the campus of Albany State College. 142(1)

• Police are in the midst of "investigating" the blaze which they attributed to "vandalism."

The early morning fire razed the one-story Hazard Training School which not only houses 250 Negro elementary school pupils but is also used by the college for the training of teachers.

PRESIDENT W. H. DENNIS said that it would cost a quarter of a million dollars to replace the nine-room structure. While the school burned, another fire broke out about 200 yards away in Caroline Hall, which houses the college auditorium and offices. The damage here was limited to around $50,000.

• The Albany State fire was somewhat reminiscent of the tragic blaze which destroyed the historic chapel of Tuskegee Institute in neighboring Alabama. As in the case of the Albany fires, the destruction of the Tuskegee edifice was blamed on arson.

Firemen gave conflicting reports concerning the Albany blaze. One said that he had seen three white men running from the vicinity of the fires, but another claimed that the three fast-moving figures were those of Negroes.

W. M. Harris, a detective for the city of Albany, stated flatly that there was indisputable evidence that the Caroline Hall stage had been doused with an inflammable liquid which was probably gasoline.

DENNIS SAID that the flames had seriously endangered the entire campus whose buildings are collectively valued at around $2,000,000.

• The sleuth took note of the fact that some white youths were spectators at the 2 A. M. fire. However, added Dennis, police were going to check the identity of these spectators and ask them how they happened to be at the scene that early in the morning.

Pupils from the razed school are expected to be absorbed into the city's other elementary schools.

Vandals Blamed; Trio Seen Running Away From Building

By the Associated Press.

ALBANY, Ga., Sept. 27.—Fire attributed to vandals did damage estimated at nearly $300,000 to the Albany State College for Negroes early today. 142 (1)

Firemen, police and school officials agreed that two or three persons were seen running from a building which flared up while the flames were destroying another. They differed whether the persons were white or Negro.

There seemed little doubt that the fire was incendiary.

'Definitely Set.'

"There was no question about that," said City Detective W. M. Harris. "It definitely was set."

Wiped out was the one-story Hazard Training School, attended by some 250 Negroes and use to train Negro teachers. It was valued by W. H. Dennis, president of the college, at $250,000.

While it was going up in flames, fire broke out in nearby Caroline Hall, housing the college auditorium and administration offices. Mr. Dennis said damage there was between $25,000 and $50,000.

Vandals Blamed.

Mr. Dennis, who attributed the fire to vandals, said he understood white youths were seen fleeing Caroline Hall.

But Detective Harris declared that Fireman E. W. Peterson had a good look at the fleeing figures and they were Negroes.

Albany is in south Georgia about 70 miles north of the Florida line.

The detective said there were white youths at the scene but they apparently were spectators. They talked with firemen and newsmen, he related, adding that this was something that guilty persons would not be likely to do.

Alcorn College Resumes Classes

Daily World Dec. 3-12-57
Atlanta Ga. P.1 14e(1)

BY THADDEUS T. STOKES

ALCORN, Miss. — Dr. J. D. Boyd, who replaced recently retired President J. R. Otis of Alcorn College, reported Monday afternoon, that classes had resumed at the strike-strickened institution however he flatly refused to say what percentage of the students had returned.

Boyd told this reporter during a telephone conversation that he had just arrived on the campus over the weekend and he didn't know what was what." He went on to explain that all of the 585 students at the co-ed school had not discontinued class attendance during the week long strike.

Another source reported that none of the matriculating students appeared for clesses. Ex-Pres. Otis said there were about 20 students off the campus when he left sometime Saturday. About 150 student-teachers appeared Saturday for their regular three-hour Saturday course.

Dr. Boyd also told the Atlanta Daily World, Monday that "I am not president of Alcorn. Because I am still president of Utica college," which is also an all-Negro college in Mississippi. Explaining further, he said "I am here to see if I can get this institution back into smooth operation."

On further questioning he did admit that he expected to become president at the college.

He said he did not know Prof. Clennon King, the 36-year old history instructor who is accused of instigating the student strike after he reportedly wrote some critical articles about National Association for the Advancement of Colored People which were published in a local daily newspaper.

King, reportedly a native of Albany, Ga., is also accused of saying there should be more Negroes of the "Uncle Tom Type."

Dr. Boyd said he had not seen King since he arrived on the campus nor did he "particularly want to see him."

Prof. King last Friday, is reported to have conditionally offered his resignation "if the students will return to school."

The new acting president said he did not want to parade the school's affair through the columns of newspapers. "Not that I don't respect the press, but this is something we will have to settle first after which I would be glad to issue a news release."

Meanwhile, Boyd denied a new charge, contained in a mimeographed statement mailed from Clarksdale, Miss., that he had been instructed by the college board to deny re - admission to members of the student council.

Boyd picked out three names on the list as those of students who have been re-admitted—Bettye June Williams, Mason Ford and Geraldine E. Brown, the latter a junior from Clarksdale. He said Ruth Singleton, another council member named, is expected back.

Alcorn Revolt

Interview P.6-a
Chat. 3-16-57

ALCORN, Miss., March 15 (AP)—Prof. Clennon King has asked to be relieved for a while of his teaching duties at Alcorn A&M College, President J. D. Boyd said today.

The history professor, whose writings set off a student boycott which almost closed the state-owned Negro college last week, will be given an opportunity "to rest," Boyd said.

"But he's still a member of the faculty and subject to recall when he is needed," added Boyd, successor to the ousted Dr. J. R. Otis as A&M president.

Boyd also said the school, most of whose 561 students signed "final withdrawal" slips last week in protest to King's pro-segregation writings, is "about back to normal." He has said yesterday about 300 of the students had returned to classes.

Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the all-white State College Board, said in Jackson he had not been advised of King's request for temporary relief from duties.

"I do know that Prof. King has said he would like to visit his parents in Albany, Ga., for some rest and relaxation," said Dr. Jobe. "That dosen't require a formal release, of course, and. . . he's still on call."

STUDENTS OUSTED BY NEGRO COLLEGE

They Defied Order to Return to Classes—President and Teacher Also Dismissed

Sun. 3-10-57

JACKSON, Miss., March 9 (UP)—The state officially expelled today all students who had defied orders to return to classes at Alcorn A. and M. College for Negroes.

The State College Board also dismissed Dr. J. R. Otis, Alcorn's president, saying that the student revolt had had his acquiescence "if not the consent and approval." He was replaced by J. D. Boyd, who had been scheduled to take over Dr. Otis' job April 1.

Prof. Clennon King, labeled an "Uncle Tom" by the students for his articles in a Jackson newspaper attacking the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and urging Negroes to bide their time in obtaining equal rights, said tonight he, too, had been dismissed.

The history teacher said at his Hazlehurst, Miss., home that Mr. Boyd had recommended the move on replacing Dr. Otis as school president and the board had agreed.

Professor King said he would not protest his dismissal but questioned: "Is it possible for a Negro to question the N. A. A. C. P. and escape being destroyed?"

It was reported earlier that Professor King had been retained in his post.

All 570 students on the campus defied the college board's ultimatum to return to class yesterday and end a three-day boycott in protest against Professor King's writings.

Students Misunderstood

NASHVILLE, Tenn., March 9 (AP)—Professor King said today he did not believe the boycott was spontaneous.

In a telephone interview with The Nashville Tennessean, Professor King said the students demanding his resignation had misunderstood him.

"Most of them never read the articles [in The Jackson State-Times] and saw nothing more than a headline or two," he said.

"They misunderstood what I was doing and they thought I was doing something for personal gain."

Why did they misunderstand?

"A lot of people who weren't students saw to that. It started with teachers here and then the N. A. A. C. P. moved in from Jackson—they've been looking for an opportunity, for something to happen, and move in and spread confusion.

"If they succeed, then there will be a real crisis. Mississippi is the crux. What happened in Clinton, Tenn., would be infinitesimal."

He continued:

"And I'm not an Uncle Tom either—that's the last thing I'd be. But if any Negro raises any question about the N. A. A. C. P.—and it's like any organization and the President of the United States, it's not perfect—they slap the 'Uncle Tom' tag on him. * * *

"I could never be a traitor. * * * What I was trying to say was that it's not just one race in America that needs to learn tolerance—but all of us, Negroes included. We aren't getting the best of deals, but we seem to take the attitude we are spotless little lambs,

In a telegram sent from here yesterday to the president of Alcorn's Student Council, the N. A. A. C. P. praised the "spirit of the students in opposing the views expressed" by Professor King. But the message deplored "any pressure which denies him free speech on integration."

Student Leader Insulting On Phone, Says Boyd

ALCORN, Miss., March 14.—(AP)—President J. D. Boyd of Alcorn A&M said Tuesday enrollment at the all-Negro college has risen to about 300, but the leader of last week's student boycott has been turned away.

He referred to Ernest McEwen of Oxford, Miss., student council president who presided over the mass meetings last week which almost closed the school. Boyd said McEwen telephoned him and was insulting.

"It is my belief that his behavior is not representative of the student group that elected him." Boyd said.

McEwen, 25-year-old father of three, said at Oxford that he merely called Boyd in hopes of arranging a conference on the possibility of being readmitted but that Boyd told him he need not pursue the subject further.

At Mound Bayou, Miss., President Theodore Trammell of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership announced Thursday "a nationwide drive" to raise $100,000 "to assist students who were ousted from Alcorn A&M."

"Nine of the nation's leading newspapers have agreed to spearhead the drive in their localities," Trammell said. He did not identify the newspapers.

"The plan calls for paying the difference in the cost of attending private colleges and the state-owned colleges where the student desires to further his education," Trammell said. Students expelled from any state school are not eligible to enter another state school until they have cleared the expulsion.

(The Council said donors are being asked to send their contributions to the Tri-State Bank in Memphis in the name of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership. The bank said the organization has an account at the institution and the bank will credit any contributions to the account.)

McEwen said he understood at least six members of the student council have been turned down. Boyd denied this, saying only three or four students have been rejected and it was "on the basis of their individual attitudes and actions, the same basis being applied in all readmission applications."

"Several of the council members are back in classes, a fact which my records here will substantiate," Boyd said.

NOT SURPRISED

King cries, Otis fired, Boyd hired

(Another Story Page 2)

JACKSON, Miss.—Early Sunday morning, in the deserted waiting room of the Municipal Airport here I saw a mature man shed bitter tears of remorse.

He tried to speak, but his voice cracked, his lips trembled, he could not control his left hand, as though to hide his discomfiture; he hid his face and cried.

Such was the appearance of Clennon King, professor of history at Alcorn A. and M. College, when I met him about 2 a.m., as he attempted to "catch a plane North."

CONFUSED TO THE point of being incoherent, the Georgia-born teacher, who literally lit the fuse which blew up Alcorn College, said:

"All this week, I have been just like a water spigot."

Reference was to the controversy set off by the series of race relations articles which he wrote for a local daily newspaper.

The trouble climaxed, Saturday with the state college board firing the institution's president, Dr. J. R. Otis, and ordering the official dismissal of the bulk of 561 striking students.

Simultaneously, H. G. Carpenter, president of the all-white state college board, announced the appointment of Dr. John Dewey Boyd as president of Alcorn.

DR. BOYD WHO prior to the appointment, was president of Utica Institute for six years, some months ago issued a public statement in support of school segregation.

Afro-American Sat. 3-16-57

The college board's meeting was attended by Gov. J. P. Coleman, who last Thursday praised the King series of articles during his weekly radio broadcast. Also present was State Attorney General Joseph Patterson.

Waiting outside the closed meeting were Dr. Otis and Dr. Boyd, both of whom had been summoned to be present. Following the meeting, Dr. Boyd was called into the room and officially informed of his appointment.

The ouster of Dr. Otis was announced at a subsequent press conference.

Asked to comment, Dr. Otis, who is known to have withstood pressure to publicly indorse racial segregation in public schools, simply said: "I am not surprised."

His resignation was to become effective on April, 1, anyway, due to "health reasons," he said.

ALLUDING TO Dr. Boyd, the board's ouster resolution stated:

". . . The board finds that the faculty and administration of Alcorn A. and M. College has wholly failed and . . . the students, or some of them, have taken over, by and with the acquiescence, if not the consent and approval of the president of the college . . ."

Although prior to his firing, Dr. Otis recommended the dismissal of Mr. King, the controversial history teacher still is, officially, a member of the faculty.

The professor said Saturday night that he had been dismissed, but board officials quickly denied it.

Board president Carpenter said King's status was not discussed at the two-hour meeting. "The status of Professor King was left to Dr. Boyd," Carpenter said.

SOURCES CLOSE TO the college say the students' action steammed not so much from resentment of King's articles as from a desire to appoint Dr. Otis.

Students felt, it is said, he was pressured into resigning because of his position on the issue of school integregation.

One of the student leaders says there would have been a strike on April 7 when Dr. Boyd took over the administration, even if the King series has not been published.

I have it on good authority that similar student action is brewing in other state supported institutions.

585 chant "let's go" in Miss.

Afro-American Sat. 3-16-57

By SAMUEL HOSKINS

Baltimore, Md.

ALCORN, Miss. — Chanting "This place is dead, let's go home," 585 students packed their bags and deserted the campus Thursday, closing Alcorn A. and M. College here for the first time in its 74-year old history.

P. 2

The departure of the booing students climaxed a dramatic chain of events which began Tuesday with the hanging of a history professor, Clennon King, in effigy and the dismissal of the school's president, Dr. J. R. Otis by Governor Coleman.

No classes had been held since Wednesday morning when student demands that Professor King either resign or be fired were made upon the school's administration.

Students accused Dr. King of getting the school into a controversial situation" by writing a series of articles, published in the Jackson State Times, criticizing the NAACP and several colored leaders.

THE SCHOOL, the oldest land grand institution in the nation, was ordered closed by Dr. T. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the board of trustees of the State Institutions of Higher Learning, after students refused to return to classes

Earlier Friday, Gov. J. P. Coleman revealed that Dr. J. R. Otis, president of the college, had been fired. No explanation was given.

Prior to Governor Coleman's disclosure, the erstwhile president pleaded vainly with the students to return to classes. He also said he was recommending that King be discharged.

MEANWHILE, Mrs. Clennon King was quoted as saying her husband was en route to Jackson to submit his resignation to Otis, but he wouldn't let him.

Dr. Otis also was quoted as saying that King had asked him for a letter requesting his (King) resignation, but he told King "he had done enough to be discharged" and thereby refused the request.

IN AN ATTEMPT to get confirmation of reports, the AFRO talked a hurried three minutes with Dr. Otis Friday afternoon, prior to his firing and closing of the school.

He readily admitted that the students were still boycotting the classrooms, but denied that Clennon King was hanged in effigy with a shaky hush-hush "no, no, no."

Otis explained that they were trying to persuade the students to return to class by "negotiation," but added he had "no idea" when the students would return to class.

* * *

"THEN YOU and the students are not close to an agreement," he was asked.

A stuttering "well . . . uh . . ." was oscilated into the receiver and then a more assured voice cracked:

"I'm not making anymore statements over the phone. You'll have to rely on what you get from the Associated Press and other papers!"

He further declined to comment on whether there would be any punitive action taken against students, if and when, they returned to classes.

* * *

PRIOR TO closing of the college and firing of Dr. Otis, H. G. Carpenter, president of the State College Board, was quoted by reporters at Rolling Fork as saying:

"We wouldn't entertain any complaints at all until they went back to classes. White students or colored students neither are capable of running a school."

All demonstrations by students were reportedly conducted in an orderly manner.

A deadlock between students and school authorities, however, resulted in the closing of the college.

Students maintained they would boycott classes until King resigned or was fired and school officials would not hear any complaints until students went back to classes.

A MIXTURE of cheers and boos greeting a warning that the board would close the school if students failed to return at a meeting Thursday night. They left the meeting singing and shouting "Let's go home."

Among placards carried by students during the orderly protest demonstration, included a sign reading "King vs. King," believed referring to the teacher and the Rev. Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala.

Last reports from the campus disclosed that quite a number of long distance phone calls, most of them collect, were being made from campus dormitories.

Students revealed at the dinning hall that they had packed their bags and were ready to go

THE UPRISING at the little college 75 miles southwest of Jackson, is the scene of the second such rebellion by students against college officials in as many weeks.

Some 140 members of the Mississippi Vocational College student body instituted a strike in demand for greater student government.

They paraded around campus chanting: "No student government, no classes" and "no movies, no classes." Also requested were fewer restrictions on social activities and more facilities.

D. E. R. Jobe of the board of trustees said a joint student-faculty committee had been studying the students' demand before the protest was initiated.

A SIMILAR demonstration was squashed quickly at Tennessee State A. and I. University in Nashville Tuesday after a campus guard whacked a senior across the heard.

Det. 3-9-57

ALCORN, Miss., March 8 — Students of Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College, an 86-year-old land grant school for Negroes, announced its "death" today and prepared to go home.

Some of the 585 students cried and others sang as they trooped from the rickety old chapel where Prof. Clennon King, whose dismissal or designation they had demanded as a condition for staying, made a half-hour plea for "understanding." Professor King did not resign.

The students said that they had objected to a series of articles written by Professor King, a Professor of History. The articles, which began appearing in The Jackson State Times last Sunday, criticized the National Assocaition for the Advancement of Colored People.

The State Times' associate editor, Robert Webb, said that the paper would continue to print Professor King's articles. Mr. Webb also denied that anyone on his paper had told the college dean that the newspaper did not want to be in a position of having any part in a situation that might close the school.

Order Students to Return

It was not clear whether the students would have a college even if they decided not to leave. The State College Board yesterday had ordered the students to return to classes or find their school closed. However, no time limit was set.

P. 34

The board announced it would meet in Jackson tomorrow at 9:30 A. M. to discuss the situation.

New York, N.Y.

Students in Professor King's classes began boycotting his lectures Monday, a day after the first article appeared. Wednesday, the rest of the coeducational school decided to stay away from all classes.

Ernest McEwen, student council president, said the students did not object to Professor King's views but the fact that he involved himself and Alcorn A. and M. in a controversial situation.

After today's mass meeting in the chapel, Professor King put his family and some belongings in a car and left the campus.

In a sense, his departure, although he did not resign or receive dismissal notice, meant that students had won a major point. But they still had the school board announcement that school would be closed if they stayed away.

The board had said they would not discuss Professor King's status until the students returned.

President is Ousted

Dr. J. R. Otis, the president of Alcorn A. and M., agreed with his students and recommended the dismissal of Prof. King. The board instead announced the dismissal of Dr. Otis, who several months ago said he would resign for health reasons. No reason was announced for the dismissal of Dr. Otis.

At the chapel meeting, Professor King, handkerchief in hand and almost weeping, pleaded with the students to take a ballot on their feelings about his status. He said they were being influenced by mass psychology.

"I'm a Negro just like you are. I sit in a Jim Crow car just like you do," he said. "I don't enjoy people dishonoring me and disrespecting me any more than you do."

Professor King also said his life had been threatened by students.

"They have said I may lose my life if I do not leave the campus by tonight. I have been told it might happen at this meeting," he said.

Mr. McEwen got up to deny this.

"Not a single student intends physical harm or any violence," the 25-year-old student and father of three children told Professor King.

Students and Dr. Otis had expected Professor King would resign at the chapel meeting. Although many students had made out their withdrawal slips, it was expected they would return if Professor King announced his resignation.

But instead of resigning, Professor King urged the students to read his articles closely. He said the articles showed that Negroes had prejudices like anyone else.

But the plea of the professor, who came to Alcorn from Albany, Ga., six months ago, went unheeded.

"As far as students are concerned," Mr. McEwen of Oxford said, "the institution is dead."

Clennon King's Status Still Uncertain At College

DISMISSAL IS DENIED

Memphis, Tenn.

By The Associated Press

ALCORN, Miss., March 10.—Alcorn A&M College will open under a new administration Monday but apparently without the history professor who caused a campuswide student walkout at the all-Negro school.

The new college president, Prof. J. D. Boyd, plans to accept applications for admission Monday. He succeeds Dr. J. R. Otis, who was fired by the all-white college board.

P. 15

King's Status Uncertain

But the status of Prof. Clennon King remained uncertain.

An announcement by the board Saturday did not mention the 36-year-old Negro professor whose recent newspaper articles about the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were blamed by students as causing the controversy that led to the boycott.

Prof. King's articles criticized the NAACP for having done nothing locally for Southern Negroes.

Prof. King, at Hazlehurst, said he would not be at Alcorn Monday. He said Prof. Boyd had fired him, effective Monday morning.

(The United Press, however, reported Prof. King said at Nashville Sunday he plans to turn in his resignation "for the good of the school." The professor, in Nashville for a conference with a newsman, said students who considered him a traitor to the Negro race misunderstood his articles.)

Firing Is Denied

Both Prof Boyd and H. G. Carpenter, president of the state college board, denied Prof. King had been fired.

"I have not hired or fired any teacher, nor have I dismissed or accepted any students," Prof. Boyd said. "I'm not in a position to hire or fire until I've officially assumed the responsibility."

Alcorn Boycott Climax Of Month's Buildup

ALCORN, Miss., March 10.—(UP)—The student walkout at Alcorn A&M College last week was more than a protest over the controversial writings of one of the professors. Neither was it a revolt inspirtd by "subversive forces" as some white people suspect.

A number of sources close to Alcorn analyzed the boycott as the climax of a fatalistic attitude that's been building up for months.

'Spiritual Thing'

"The students seemed to be in a trance all week," an instructor said, "and you couldn't get next to them with compromise. It was a spiritual thing."

A white man couldn't really understand, it was implied.

At Alcorn, you can walk over a hill from the campus and feel as if you are a thousand miles from civilization. The air is pure and clean. It would be a wonderful place for a SPA. But it's come to be a little impractical for a four-year college.

Experts on higher education have recommended on at least two occasions that Alcorn be abolished and consolidated with Jackson State and-or Mississippi cision, which did not help mo-Vovational. After much inderale at the school, it was decided to leave Alcorn be, at least for the time being.

Neglected By Officials

But there has been a feeling among alumni that Alcorn has been neglected by officials who wanted to make Jackson State and Itta Bena showplaces of Negro education. Both are easily accessible and are shown to tourists as examples of what the state is doing for her Negroes.

Dr. J. R. Otis, Alcorn president for eight years, was popular with the students but he has been at odds with the college board two years. He recently turned in his resignation effective next month, and Gov. J. P. Coleman announced it amounted to a dismissal.

The school was running a deficit. At the first of the current school year the athletic department was far short of funds. And some of the dormitories could not get the supplies they needed. All these things contributed to the "attitude" at the college. Few people knew it because Alcorn is so far away from things.

ALCORN, Miss. — Dr. J. D. Boyd, new president of Alcorn A and M college, arrived on the campus Monday morning to take over the office of Dr. J. R. Otis, who was fired Saturday in the wake of a student walkout.

A member of state college board said Prof. Clennon King, whose anti-NAACP remarks touched off the student strike "had not been fired" and is subject to recall.

Boyd said students will be readmitted only by agreeing to abide by orders of the board and promising not to strike. He said they could reenter "on terms of the college and not their own."

There was no indication of the number of students returning to the campus.

Meanwhile, the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership has launched a campaign for $100,000 to aid students who might not be able to return to Alcorn or attend other state colleges.

Approximately 300 of the students were on scholarships. They can enroll in one of the state's three private Negro colleges, Mississippi Industrial, Tougaloo college or Rust college.

The school was hit by a 100 per cent walkout last week by students protesting the writings of 36-year-old history professor Clennon King.

WANTS "UNCLE TOMS"

He criticized the NAACP and declared there should be more Negroes of the "Uncle Tom" type.

King, himself a Negro, offered to resign if the students would return to school. He was turned down and still is a member of the faculty.

In the articles, King, a history teacher, accused the NAACP of destroying race relations in the South. In one of them, he summed up his opinion of the organization by saying:

"Perhaps the NAACP is the National Association for the Agitation of Colored People after all." Otis, prior to the meeting, issued a statement which said:

". . . The students insisted that their grievances against Prof. King did not result directly from the point of view which he expressed in the newspaper articles, but from their resentment of his drawing the school into this highly controversial (segregation) issue. The student protest was intensified when it was learned that Prof. King had written letters which were published in the official paper of the (Jackson) White Citizens Council . . ."

Governor Says 570 Strikers May Not Enter State School

ALCORN, Miss. — (ANP) — Alcorn A. and M. college, closed a week ago following a crippling boycott by students protesting criticism of the NAACP by a history professor, reopened Monday under a new president.

Also gone from the campus was Prof. Clennon King, the history instructor, who stirred the students ire by writing a series of articles for the pro-segregation Jackson State Times criticizing the tactics of the NAACP, Congressman Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) and other Negro leaders. King accused the Negroes of "acting like white people" and said they had not acted in a way beneficial to their race.

In the week-long boycott that followed King's criticism, the students staged peaceful demonstrations and hanged the professor in effigy.

Both the new president, J. D. Boyd, and H. G. Carpenter, president of the all-white state college board, which had ordered the closing of the school, denied King had been fired. But King said at his home in Hazelhurst he didn't plan to return to the campus because Boyd had fired him.

The board of trustees dismissed President J. R. Otis charging that he had let the students take control of the school.

Mississippi Gov. James B. Coleman said that the student strike was "wholly unjustified." He added that the 570 striking students would be barred forever from attending a state-supported school in Mississippi.

The students went out on strike in protest to the attitude and writings of a history professor who said there should be more Negroes of the "Uncle Tom" type.

This was in reference to the humble and servile "Uncle Tom" character created by Novelist Harriet Beecher Stowe, a staunch abolitionist of the 19th century.

Professor King, 36, made a dramatic last minute appeal to the students to return to their classes by offering to make a conditional resignation from Alcorn.

King addressed the students of the 86-year-old school and said he would quit if the students would re-read his articles and then vote on whether he should leave or stay. He added:

"In that way you will be cool headed and not ruled by mob psychology."

Students rejected his appeal and the Alcorn school was closed Saturday on an order by H. G. Carpenter, chairman of the board of trustees, who had announced that the students would have to end their strike by Friday or the college would close its doors.

Gov. Coleman said the strike was "wholly unjustified." He added that the school would be reopened this summer with a different student body and that none of the striking students can ever enroll in a state-supported school again.

King's criticisms of the NAACP, which appeared in the Jackson Daily News recently, caused all 534 students at the college to boycott classes since Tuesday. The students insisted that they would not return to classes until King was dismissed. Some 90 students later indicated they wanted to return to classes.

In the articles, King, a history teacher, accused the NAACP of destroying race relations in the South. In one of them, he summed up his opinion of the organization by saying:

"Perhaps the NAACP is the National Association for the Agitation (CQ) of Colored People after all." Otis, prior to the meeting, issued a statement which said:

". . . The students insisted that their grievances against Prof. King did not result directly from the point of view which he expressed in the newspaper articles, but from their resentment of his drawing the school into this highly controversial (segregation) issue. The student protest was intensified when it was learned that Prof. King had written letters which were published in the official paper of the (Jackson) white citizens council . . ."

King denied that he had written any letters for the Citizens Council and blamed "other teachers" at the college for instigating the student strike. He said:

"They (the teachers) are destroying what they say they want to build up. They want other people to be tolerant while they themselves are not."

ALCORN, Miss., March 12.—An estimated 100 of the 469 students who boycotted Alcorn A. and M. College for Negroes in protest of anti-NAACP newspaper articles by a faculty member, have been readmitted since a new president took charge Monday.

Tues. 3-13-57

President J. D. Boyd said Tuesday he expects many of the students who were expelled by the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning for the strike will return.

President Boyd is considering the student requests for readmission on an individual basis. They are required to agree to abide by college rules.

The students walked off the campus last week end in protest to articles published in a Jackson newspaper and written by Prof. Clennon King. They objected to his injection of the Negro college in the racial controversy and implication of his articles that the students agreed with his criticism of the NAACP.

Prof. King has left the campus and is at Hazlehurst where he is pastor of Wesley Chapel Methodist Church.

Chairman Harry Carpenter of the college said Prof. King has not been fired "and is as much a member of the faculty as any other professor." He is subject to call "for duties" by President Boyd, but is not expected to return for some time—if then.

President Boyd said, "Each student seeking readmission will be considered individually and will be reinstated if I feel like it is justified."

"I haven't talked to a student who has not shown a good spirit," he said.

The students are being readmitted on "probation." Its lifting will be determined by the college board.

In addition to those processed, an additional 75 students have remained on the campus and were not involved in the revolt.

New President Named; to Determine Expulsions

Sun. 3-10-57

By W. F. MINOR

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., March 9—The state college board decided Saturday to continue the operation of Alcorn A&M college but summarily discharged Dr. J. R. Otis as president.

A campuswide strike of students this week, the board said in a sharp denunciation of Otis' administration, took place because the faculty at Alcorn has "wholly failed."

In Otis' place, the board immediately put Prof. J. D. Boyd, who had been elected at the board's February meeting to succeed Otis in April.

The board said that students who have "defied" orders of the college board to return to classes "are hereby expelled" from the college and were ordered to "remove themselves from the campus immediately."

489 of 561 Students Leave

Out of the 561 students enrolled in the college when the strike began in protest to Prof. Clennon King, a history professor who attacked the NAACP, a total of 489 had picked up the remainder of their board payments and withdrawn Saturday.

The job of determining which students will be expelled will be turned over to the new president of the college, the board said.

But the board specifically declared Saturday after a three-hour meeting that the college is open.

"The school is open and will stay open if there is just one student," H. C. Carpenter, Rolling Fork, president of the college body, said Saturday.

King Not Discussed

Prof. King, whose series of prosegregation stories in the State-Times, Jackson afternoon paper, this week provoked the campuswide strike, was not discussed by the board, Carpenter said.

"He is still on the faculty," Carpenter said after the meeting.

But Prof. Boyd, the new president who was outside the board meeting Saturday and was called before it, told reporters he felt King's actions had "destroyed his effectiveness" and he planned to release him.

Boyd told a reporter he would go to Alcorn with the understanding of the board that he had a "free hand" at the institution.

Dr. Otis, who was also outside the board meeting room Saturday, was not called by the board to explain his side of the controversy.

Otis Not Surprised

He said he was "not surprised" at his dismissal immediately by the board.

He said that at least eight senior agriculture students had returned to their classes Friday afternoon. All faculty members have remained on the campus, he said.

The board's statement said that with the "acquiescence" of Otis and his faculty, some of the students had "taken over" the institution.

Because of the defiance of the students to a directive of the board committee which told them to return to their classes before their grievances would be heard, the board said it was taking "administrative authority" to do what is "necessary to operate" the college.

The college and its facilities will be continued in operation "for those students who have not been expelled," the board said, and regular summer and fall sessions for 1957 will be held in due course.

Boycott Shuts Alcorn Doors; College's Future Is In Doubt

By The Associated Press

ALCORN, Miss., March 8.—Students of Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College, an 86-year-old land grant school for Negroes, announced its "death" Friday and prepared to go home.

Some of the 585 students cried and others sang as they trooped from the rickety old chapel where Prof. Clennon King—whose dismissal or resignation they demanded as a condition for staying—made a half-hour plea for "understanding." King did not resign.

The students said they objected to a series of articles written by King, a Negro professor of history. The articles, which began appearing in the Jackson State Times last Sunday, criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored people.

Articles To Conitnue

The State Times' associate editor, Robert Webb, said the newspaper would continue to print King's articles.

It was not clear whether the students would have a college even if they decided not to leave. The state college board Thursday had ordered the students to return to classes or find their school closed. No time limit, however, was set.

The board announced it would meet in Jackson Saturday at 9:30 a.m. to discuss the situation.

Students in King's classes began boycotting his lectures Monday, a day after the first article appeared. Wednesday, the rest of the co-educational school decided to stay away from all classes.

Ernest McEwen, student council president, said the students did not object to King's views but the fact that he involved himself and Alcorn A & M in a controversial situation.

Professor Leaves Campus

In a sense, King's departure—although he did not resign or receive dismissal notice — meant the students had won a major point. But they still had the school board announcement that school would be closed if they stayed away.

The board had said it would not discuss King's status until the students returned.

Dr. J. R. Otis, the Negro president of Alcorn A&M, agreed with his students and recommended the dismissal of King. The board instead announced the dismissal of Otis, who several months ago said he would resign for health reasons.

No reason was announced for the dismissal of Otis.

At the chapel meeting, King, handkerchief in hand and almost weeping, pleaded with the students to take a ballot on their feelings about this status. He said they were being influenced by mass psychology.

Threats On Life Claimed

"I'm a Negro just like you are. I sit in a Jim Crow car just like you do," he said. "I don't enjoy people dishonoring me and disrespecting me any more than you do."

King also said his life had been threatened by students.

"They have said I may lose my life if I do not leave the campus by tonight. I have been told it might happen at this meeting."

McEwen, student council president, got up to deny this.

"Not a single student intends physical harm or any violence," the 25-year-old student and father of three children told King.

Students and Otis had expected King would resign at the chapel meeting. Although many students had made out their withdrawal slips, it was expected they would return if King announced his resignation.

But instead of resigning, King urged the students to read his articles closely. He said the articles showed Negroes have prejudices like anyone else.

Plea Goes Unheeded

But the plea of the professor, who came to Alcorn from Albany, Ga., six months ago, went unheeded.

"As far as students are concerned," McEwen, of Oxford, said, "the institution is dead."

Students gathered about the post office, filling out change of address cards. They exchanged autographed pictures. They discussed plans to enter different schools.

High on the list of new schools discussed was Tougaloo of Jackson, a Christian Church college for Negroes. But many of the students were scholarship students at Alcorn and it was not sure they could afford to go elsewhere.

Alcorn A & M College is on Highway 61 about halfway between Natchez and Vicksburg.

Negro College's Future To Be Decided Today

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 8.—The future of 86-year-old Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical College for Negroes will be determined here Saturday.

The decision will be made by the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning at a called meeting following refusal of students to return to classes as a condition to consideration of their "grievances." The meeting will be closed to the public and press.

It's Closed Officially

Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the college board, in announcing the meeting said the college in Southwest Mississippi "closed officially as of noon Friday."

Dr. J. R. Otis, dismissed as president by the board, has been asked to attend the meeting, along with Prof. J. D. Boyd of Utica, his successor.

Dr. Otis is scheduled to give an official report as to whether any student attended classes Friday after the board ultimatum as a condition to considering their complaints.

The board is not expected to close the college "for good" when it meets Saturday. Action looking to reopening it at a later date is expected.

It also is expected to take official action against students who refused to return to classes, with expulsion mentioned. Any student expelled from a state college is ineligible to re-enter another state-supported institution.

NAACP Lashes Back

Taking cognizance of the situation, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in Jackson issued a statement charging "thought control, used by tyrants and tyrannical powers," had resulted in the boycott by the Alcorn students.

The NAACP said "freedom-loving Americans everywhere should have nothing but admiration and praise for the entire student body for the stand that they have taken in behalf of our democratic ideals." It also said "thought control is the order of the day in Mississippi."

"Not only does it relate to Negroes but also to whites alike," the NAACP said. "Instructors in most of our schools are either instructed to teach white supremacy or don't speak out on the race issue at all.

"Prof. King is a typical example," it said.

Plan To Fire Instructor Ends Boycott

Post-Herald Birmingham, Ala. Fri. 3-8-57

ALCORN, March 7 (U.P.)—The president of Alcorn A&M College for Negroes said today that an "Uncle Tom" professor who publicly criticized the NAACP would be fired for "insubordination."

The announcement by Dr. J. R. Otis brought an end to a student boycott of classes which began yesterday in protest against the published opinions of history professor Clennon King.

In a series of newspaper articles in the Jackson States-Times, King wrote that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People was harming race relations in the South. Some of the 570 students at the all-Negro school labeled King an "Uncle Tom" and the entire student body began boycotting classes.

King said Otis told him he would recommend his dismissal to the state college board and King said he would not protest it.

Otis said the protest was aimed more at King's "drawing the school into this highly controversial political issue" rather than in the point of view expressed in his articles.

Dr. J. R. Otis, president of the state-supported school, told the study body today there could be no further negotiations until they had returned to classes. There was no immediate word from student leaders as to their reaction.

Dr. Otis acted under instructions from the State College Board.

Professor King's views were published in The Jackson State Times. He said the association had created racial tension and done nothing locally for the Southern Negro.

NEGRO COLLEGE IN MISSISSIPPI STRIKE VICTIM

State Board Expels Striking Students and Fires President of Institution

JACKSON, Miss., March 9 (AP)—Mississippi's State College Board today expelled the striking students at all-Negro Alcorn A&M College and fired Dr. J. R. Otis as president.

The board announcement, issued after an emergency session, said students had taken over the college with "the acquiescence if not the consent" of Otis.

The announcement made no reference to Clennon King, a history professor whose newspaper articles were blamed by the students for the walkout. King dealt with segregation in his articles and criticized the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People for having done nothing locally for Southern Negroes.

Not Surprised.

Otis told reporters "I'm not surprised" by his discharge as head of the 86-year-old land-grant college. He had recommended King's dismissal on grounds similar to the students' complaints — that King had involved the college in controversial issues.

Otis said 489 of the 561 students had signed "final withdrawal" slips but a number had asked to retract that action.

Otis told reporters an undetermined number of students, possibly as many as 96, had sought readmission and that some were back in class.

Asked what King's status is, H. G. Carpenter, president of the all-white board said, "he's still a member of the faculty. King's name was not brought up. There was no reason to bring it up."

King's status "will have to be considered through normal channels," the board spokesman said.

The spokesman was asked if the board action could be interpreted as in support of King, whose articles were critical of the NAACP and said American Negroes' lot is better than that of Negroes overseas.

The spokesman did not answer directly, but emphasized King's rights under his contract.

Leaves Campus.

The professor left the campus hurriedly yesterday, saying his life had been threatened. He left after making a tearful appeal to the students to read his articles and then take a secret ballot on whether they wanted him to go. They had been told at the mass meeting by Dean H. A. Wilson that King would appear before them to resign.

King did not offer the resignation and the students walked out.

Assuring that the school will be "continued in operation" for those students who have returned, the board put President-elect J. D. Boyd into immediate authority. Boyd, now president of Utica Institute, a state-supported Negro school near Jackson, was named to succeed Otis recently when the board announced Otis' resignation, effective March 31. Otis, under treatment for ulcers, said he was in ill health.

The board said, "the faculty administration at Alcorn A&M College has wholly failed, and ... students, or some of them, have taken over, by and with the acquiescence, not the consent and approval of the president of the college.

"For good cause ... resident J. R. Otis ... is hereby discharged. ...

"Students ... who have defied the board's direction to return to classes are herby expelled from said college. ..."

As expelled students, they are not eligible under Mississippi law for enrollment in any other state-supported school.

The coeducational college, whose physical plant includes several almost-new structures as well as older ones in need of repair, is about 65 miles southwest of here along the Mississippi River. Agricultural and mechanical engineering and home economics are the principal subjects. All faculty members and all students are Negroes.

The board added that the job of determining who will be expelled will be turned over to the new president of the college.

ALCORN, Miss., March 6.—All 570 Negro students at Alcorn A and M College boycotted classes Wednesday in protest against newspaper articles written by a Negro history professor who blamed other teachers for the strike.

There were unconfirmed reports that students at two other state-supported Negro schools — Mississippi Vocational at Itta Bena and Jackson State at Jackson — planned to stay away from classes Thursday.

Dr. J. R. Otis, president of Alcorn, said he would make no attempt to iron out the problem until the students return to class. He said the students demanded that Prof. Clennon King be fired for writing a series of articles in the Jackson State Times saying the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is harming race relations in the South.

King told United Press he does not mind leaving the school but thinks he should be paid for the remainder of the year.

"This thing has come about as the result of other teachers," King said. "Other teachers have pushed this thing up."

King was called an "Uncle Tom" on signs carried on the campus Tuesday night. The term is used by Negroes for those considered disloyal to their race. King was reported to have been hanged in effigy at a student gathering.

"They are destroying what they say they are trying to build up," King said. "They want other people to be tolerant but they aren't."

King said students had boycotted his classes since the first article appeared last Sunday.

"I would go to class but they did not show up," King said. "Then I would go off and read."

Dr. Otis said he had not talked to King about the matter and said it would be up to the state college board to decide whether King will be fired.

'Never Had Trouble Before'

"Our policy here is not to deal in controversial matters," Otis said. "We had never had any trouble before and we had one of the best student governments anywhere."

Earlier, students at Mississippi Vocational College in Itta Bena boycotted classes for two days in demand for a student government. Students at Jackson State College held a protest meeting Tuesday after the college board forced it to withdraw from a national basketball tournament under a ruling against integrated athletic events.

H. G. Carpenter, president of the college board, said he had talked to Otis and the board planned to take no action until the students return to classes.

Mr. Carpenter said he had heard of no further trouble at Jackson College and Mississippi Vocational.

In his series of articles, King wrote, "Perhaps the NAACP is the National Association for the Agitation of Colored People after all." He said it was hurting the Negro's cause in the South and represented only a small minority of the Negro population.

ALCORN, Miss., March 6 (AP) —Alcorn A&M students demanding dismissal of a history professor here told today their demands won't receive consideration until they return to classes.

The entire student body of the state-supported Negro school quit classes this morning asking dismissal of Prof. Clennon King who wrote a series of newspaper articles critical of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

A spokesman for students who asked that he not be named said Prof. King was hanged in effigy Monday night and students have staged orderly demonstrations on the campus. The decision to boycott classes was made at an 8 a.m. meeting today.

Dr. J. R. Otis, president of the South Mississippi school, called the students into special meeting this afternoon and told them there could be no further negotiations until they returned to classes. He said all students—about 585—attended the meeting, which he described as peaceful.

There was no immediate word from student leaders as to their reaction.

Prof. King's articles have been published in the Jackson State Times. They say in part that the NAACP, has created racial tension and done nothing locally for the Southern Negro.

A student source said the demonstrations continued on the campus and in the student chapel last night. He said students carried signs reading:

"If he stays, we'll go." "If it takes failing to prove our point, flunk us all." "King vs. King." The latter was believed to be a reference both to Prof. King and to the Rev. Martin Luther King Alabama Negro leader.

THE UNTOLD STORY BEHIND:

That Alcorn Explosion

Afro-American

Baltimore, Md.

By SAMUEL HOSKINS
AFRO Staff Correspondent
(Part II of a Series)

JACKSON, Miss.—"What Alabama's L. King is trying to build up, Mississippi's C. King is trying to tear down."

Such was the sign which greeted Professor Clennon King, Alcorn A. and M. College history teacher, when he entered his classroom Monday, March 4, the day after the first of his controversial articles appeared in the Jackson State Times.

Also, numerous 'Uncle Tom' signs were posted along the campus sidewalks.

King's history students boycotted his classes.

THE HISTORY teacher, the morning I interviewed him, told me he received a number of threatening telephone calls and derogatory letters.

One of them, he said, was addressed to "Mr. Clennon (Uncle Tom) King."

A portion of the letter was: "I think you are the most incredible dog I ever heard of . . . We are going to give you something you will never forget. Don't ask questions, just wait for the results. We hate you, white dog Uncle Tom."

King said students would lean out of dormitory windows and ridicule him as he walked along the sidewalks.

One student was described as actually pulling a knife when he approached.

WHEN THE college president, Dr. J. R. Otis, whose resignation was scheduled to become effective April 1, advised the students to return to King's history classes, the Student Council, headed by Ernest McEwen of Oxford, Miss., requested a meeting.

During the subsequent conference with the president, students asked that they be permitted to cut King's classes without loss of credits.

Dr. Otis' position was that, as president of the college, he could not grant their request. Also he advised them to return to King's classes and wait until their grievances could be taken up by the institution's governing body, the State College Board.

RELUCTANTLY, THE students left the meeting, dissatisfied, but apparently willing to follow the president's advice.

As one senior stated: "He (Otis) was a good 'prexy.'" He was honored with an "Otis Day" celebration the previous Saturday, March 2.

If the campus was disturbed on Monday when the first of King's articles appeared the situation reached the proportions of an uproar on Tuesday.

The reason for this, according to Dr. Otis, was the appearance on the campus of a copy of the official publication of the (White) Citizens' Council carrying a letter written by King.

Afro-American

WHAT HAD BEEN a mere protest demonstration before became open revolt. Where only a portion of the students had been involved previously, the entire student body became incensed.

Although King denied writing the article for the Citizens' Council publication, he admitted that one or two letters he had published elsewhere had been run in the newspaper.

Up to this point, the disturbance on the Alcorn campus had stemmed directly from King's articles. Subsequent developments were the reaction to events occurring off the campus and the resevoir of tension which had been growing among both faculty members and students since September, 1954.

Aut. 3-30-57

APPARENTLY alarmed over the furor his articles were creating, King called the State Times on Tuesday. While he would not divulge details of his conversation, or with whom he talked, the third article of the series did not appear on Tuesday as readers had assumed it would.

On the same day an Associated Press dispatch intimated the series had been discontinued because of a call from an Alcorn official who said that the series, if continued, would destroy the school.

It was on this day, too, that the State Sovereignty Commission, watchdog agency created by the Legislature in 1956, met.

Ney M. Gore Jr., director, who also is a state representative, told me his agency became interested after receiving a call from Robert Webb, associate editor of the State Times.

* * *

THE STATE Sovereignty Commission's fundamental function is to maintain segregation of the races in Mississippi, particularly in schools.

The NAACP, which has been critical of the agency since its inception, describes it as the legal arm of the White Citizens' Council.

The commission is composed of the following members:

Governor J. P. Coleman, Lt. Gov. Carroll Garvin, Walter Sillers, speaker of the House; Joe T. Patterson, attorney general; George J. Thornton, State Supreme Court; W. S. Henley, Earl Evans, William G. Nurgin, state senators; Joe Hopkins, George Payne Cossar and William H. Johnson, state representatives.

WHEN I interviewed Mr. Gore, I asked him point blank if the commission sponsored the series of articles written by Professor King.

The director, a stocky, blond-headed drawling lawyer who sports a crew-cut, said: "This agency had absolute no knowledge of King's articles until Tuesday."

Mr. Gore did admit, however, that King came to his office after the series started running in the State Times. He did not elaborate.

But whatever the role of Gore's agency, the situation took a decided turn for Alcorn during its eventful week.

* * *

A SCHEDULED meeting at which students were to vote, in accordance to a suggestion from King, whether he was to submit his resignation or not was called off.

The State Times resumed King's articles.

The entire student body, not just those in King's classes, remained away from classrooms.

They said they would not return to classes unless King was dismissed. Thursday morning Dr. Otis publicly announced his intentions to recommend King's dismissal.

THE FORMAL charges were insubordination, stemming from writing controversial articles after he had been warned against such action, and dragging the school into a highly explosive political issue.

Thursday afternoon, the State College Board, headed by H. G. Carpenter, president, arrived on the campus.

Carpenter who resides at Rolling Fork, summed up the board's position in these words: "I have never seen a student body capable of running a school.

"THEY HAVE made no specific charges against him. They just said, 'If he'll resign we'll go back to school.'"

Instead of acting on Otis's recommendation that King be dismissed, the trustees issued an ultimatum that the students return to classes.

If they don't return, it means the school, the board president declared.

Late Thursday afternoon a hurry-up assembly was called. The entire student body jammed into the ancient, red-brick chapel building. Dr. Otis read the board's ruling. He urged the students to abide by it.

THERE was a long moment of silence. Then he asked if they would abide by it. After a long moment of silence a single student rose and began singing the "Alcorn Ode." Others stood and joined the singing.

Then, still singing, some with tears streaming down their cheeks, the entire student body filed from the chapel. Dr. Otis gave up. "I can't get it over to them," he said. "I can't get it over to them."

* * *

WHEN TOLD at his home in Hazelhurst, Thursday night, that the students had elected to leave school, King announced that he would resign.

Friday morning he went to the campus. The students gathered to hear his announcement of resignation. Instead, he delivered a tearful one-hour and 20-minute speech.

He asked for a "cooling off period" and then a vote on whether he should remain or leave. The students sat through it. After King had finished, they filed out and started leaving the campus.

The previous night Governor Coleman had publicly supported King for his articles.

McEwen summed it up this way: "Now it seems one man has accomplished what no combination of voices have been able to do in the past." He added: "Alcorn College died officially at 11:55 today."

* * *

THE FOLLOWING Sunday the State Times stated editorially why it "Felt Morally Obliged to Publish Clennon King Articles."

It contended that the basic principle of school administration had been attacked.

It stated the real gripe was not that King had drawn the school into controversy, but that he attacked the NAACP.

It held that King's conviction on race deserved an audience.

WHEN I TALKED with Gore, he asked if I have reached any conclusions about the Alcorn incident.

My answer was that I wanted to get the facts first.

One of the facts is King's articles triggered the walkout, but they were not responsible for it.

Another fact is the students resented an attack upon school administration which has been going on at Alcorn since mid 1954 when Dr. Otis publicly opposed the late Governor Hugh White's program of voluntary segregation in schools of the state.

Consequently, he had been in the bad graces of the school board and certain influential members of the legislature.

This "difference" expressed itself in terms of shrinking appropriations for the school.

At the beginning of the current school year the athletic department was woefully short of funds. Students who had paid various laboratory fees could not get lab equipment.

Some of the dormitories could not get the supplies they needed. The students felt, and with considerable justification, that Dr. Otis's resignation was forced.

It was this feeling which prompted the student body to sponsor the "Otis Day" celebration.

ALCORN WAS long overdue for trouble. The King incident was only the spark which ignited it.

As for King, it may also be concluded that his articles were not accidental, or did not "just happened" to be published.

He had been trying for months to get them published in some magazine with national circulation. Falling in this effort, he turned to local publications. Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the State College Board, told me it is his understanding that King approached "a certain state agency" in an effort to get the articles sponsored.

IT IS also a fact that the King series follow in detail the propaganda line of the Citizens Council. As a newspaperman, I find it hard to believe this was mere accident.

King, himself, told me he wrote the articles after he read a "certain book" which presented the other side of the race question. He said there had been some discussion about placing it in the schools as a textbook.

King further told me, during that hectic trip to and from Hazelhurst, that he was going to expose the whole story.

Subsequently, I learned that after literally talking his guts out to me he went back to the State College Board and repeated everything he had told me.

As for the whole story, it is doubtful that King knows it. It is unlikely at this stage that anyone knows it. The reason is it's a story which currently is being written. The Alcorn incident was only a footnote to history.

Helps Five Alcorn Student To Continue Education

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. p. 6
Chron. 4-4-57

NEW YORK — Five students, expelled from the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College at Alcorn because of their leadership role in the protest against Professor Clennon King, will receive NAACP assistance in continuing their education elsewhere, Roy Wilkins, the Association's executive secretary, announced today.

Ernest McEwen who, as president of the student body, led the protest against Prof. King because of a series of articles the teacher wrote for The Jackson (Miss.) State Times criticizing the NAACP's anti-segregation activities, will attend Central State College at Xenia, Ohio. He will be joined at Central State by Miss Robessie Young and Charles Hibbler. The Misses Susan Owens and Ruby Hibbler will attend Virginia Union University at Richmond.

After Alcorn had refused to readmit these students, the NAACP made arrangements for their transfer to other colleges. Dr. Charles Wesley, president of Central State, and Dr. Samuel Proctor, president of Virginia Union, readily agreed to make emergency provisions to permit the students to enroll without loss of time or academic credit.

Action to aid the students was taken by the NAACP committee on administration at its regular monthly meeting here on March 25. The committee voted to provide financial assistance for travel and other expenses for the remainder of the school semester.

Famous Columnist Say Alcorn College Professor May Rank Higher Than Rev. Martin Luther King In Negro History

Advocate Sat. 4-6-57 p.1
Jackson, Miss.

Says NAACP Folder On Mississippi Treason To Truth, Decency, Peace And Order Of The United States

Birmingham, Ala., Apr. 2 (DSN) —The widely read newspaper columnist, John Temple Graves, whose daily column appears in many leading newspapers in every section of the country, in his Tuesday article, pictured Prof. Clennon King, of Alcorn College, Alcorn, Mississippi, whose series of article on the NAACP and race relations, printed in a Jackson, Missippi daily, set off the recent strike of some 500 students of the college, as a man who may rank higher in Negro history than Rev. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery, Alabama Bus strike, and nonviolent resistance movement.

The widely read columnist also branded the NAACP folder now being circulated on the state of Mississippi under the title "M is for Mississippi and murder as treason to truth, decency and the peace and order of the United States."

Speaking of the Alcorn College professor the columnist says: It may be that the Negro named King who is to stand highest in the race history of these unhappy times will be not Martin Luther but Clennon.

Clennon King is the college instructor who, for taking issue with the NAACP, has been threatened, ostracized and subjected to the NAACP's own special brand of rabble-rousing. He exercised his American right to tell his students at Alcorn A. and M. College in Mississippi and the readers of his articles in The Jackson State Times—as The State Times' Associate Editor Robert Webb summarizes it—"racial integrity, morality and harmony are much preferred to naked, mass integration."

Sat 4-6-57

In championing this Negro, printing his articles, reporting his story, circulating a booklet by and about him, Editor Webb and The State Times have struck a blow for the leadership Southern Negroes bitterly need and lack.

P.5

Response to Clennon King's challenge has been race-wide and nation-wide. The State Times' booklet is being distributed as fast as it can be printed. Many a troubled Southern Negro who wants his race to advance but deeply mistrusts the hate-making, South-dividing NAACP way has feared to speak out lest he be pilloried as an "Uncle Tom." He may take heart and find voice in the suddenly appearing leadership of this Negro whom no one can call "Uncle Tom."

Clennon King, Georgia-born, 37-years old, is better educated than Martin Luther King. He has a B. S. degree from Tuskegee, an M. A. from Western Reserve in Cleveland, has attended Oberlin Graduate School of Divinity, has studied Egyptology at the University of Chicago, has taught in six Southern Negro colleges—and is founder of an International Society of African Culture for bringing to Negroes greater knowledge of an pride in their race. (At his request, money from the State Times for his now famous series of articles has been turned over to this Society.)

He is no Uncle Tom and, what is more important (for "Uncle Tom" is just an NAACP epithet), neither is he one of the all-too-familiar "white man's Negroes" who make a cheap living agreeing with whites and undertaking for a profit to organize Negroes. He is a proud, resolute, absolutely free Negro American, a credit to his country and his race.

He may be, also, a man of destiny.

Regarding the NAACP the columnist said:

Those who remember when the NAACP was at least a responsible organization can't recognize it now. Its current folder is entitled in enormours letters "M is For Mississippi and Murder." You gather that a general massacre is going on, with hundreds of killings. But as you read on you find only three. To fill in the great empty spaces the "Blood on Marble Steps" is placed over a Jackson editor's sensible prediction that bloodshed would follow an attempt to send Negro children to school with white in Mississippi. "Gun and Torch," another headline, covers nothing more homicidal than a Mississippi Bar Association president's factual statement that violence is one of three ways of continuing segregation but is "abhorrent" to him. And so forth, ad nauseam.

"We would appreciate any comment,' 'says a printed note from NAACP's Roy Wilkins. Mine is that such wanton and dishonest hate-mongering justifies every action Southern States are taking against this organization. It is treason to truth, decency and the peace and order of the United States.

KING DECLINES ALCORN RETURN

Times-Picayune
Tues. 4-9-57

History Professor Charges Death Threats

New Orleans,

ALCORN, Miss., April 8 (AP)—Prof. Clennon King declined to return to teach Alcorn A&M classes Monday, saying his life had been threatened and "humiliating" conditions demanded by the school president.

P.52

The history professor, whose anti-National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People newspaper articles set off a student boycott which almost closed the state-supported Negro school earlier this year, had been told to return to duty Monday. He has been on temporary leave to recover from the strain of the student strike.

In a letter to executive secretary E. R. Jobe of the State College Board, King asserted that A&M president J. D. Boyd had told him he "should not depend upon work at Alcorn after May 31."

Letter Produced

Dr. Jobe denied that Boyd "or anyone else in authority" had told King his services would not be needed after May 31. But the college board secretary confirmed that the history professor had turned over to him a letter threatening "death or violence" if King returns to the campus.

Jobe said the anonymous letter was turned over to the highway patrol and that King, if and when he returns, "will have whatever protection the state can provide."

Asked if the professor's failure to return Monday affects his status as a faculty member, Jobe said the asserted threats are an "extenuating factor."

The history professor said in his letter to Jobe:

"My expectant wife and our five children need me at work very badly, but I cannot see a way to return April 8 under such humiliating conditions" as the May 31 termination and death threat he had described.

King Statement

"If I should go back to Alcorn under the present degrading circumstances, I will betray every Negro who would like to follow in my footsteps. The South correctly realizes the NAACP is its greatest single enemy. I have given that enemy one of the mightiest blows it has ever received, because it is the only strong blow which has come from within."

Boyd declined to comment on King's charges except to confirm that the Alabama-born professor had been instructed to return to his classes. Boyd did say "everything is normal" at the school. Enrollment now totals 536, and all but "9 or 12" of the students who left the school are back in classes. Most of the students had signed "final withdrawal" slips at the height of the student strike but almost all were allowed to retract them.

King claimed that "before I wrote the articles critical of NAACP" he had promises of summer session work at Alcorn and during the 1957-58 term. Jobe denied this, saying King had the usual teacher's contract, expiring July 1 this year.

On The Alcorn College Students Strik

Advocate Sat 3-16-57

"Every man who says frankly and fully what he thinks is so far doing a public service. We should be grateful to him for attacking most unsparingly our most cherished opinions." Jackson, Miss.

The Alcorn College strike involving the NAACP and its activities has provoked widespread discussion among Negro citizens in the state, with the most vocal spokesman for the NAACP minority, at least until Roy Wilkins rather belatedly spoke out urging the students to return to their classes, inclined towards upholding and praising the students action. P. 4

We are unwilling to concede that there exists among the students of Alcorn College the wisdom and profundity to justify us in pointing out that their action amounted to a denial of Freedom of Speech to Prof. King, which as one of the great bedrocks in the foundation upon which the nation rests, is the one thing that has permitted the growth of the NAACP and allowed its leaders to be the most vocal spokesmen among members of the race.

Nor do we propose to give place here to the arguments of some which has come to our attention that what Prof. King wrote would have been allright had some other member of the college faculty been privileged to voice the opposite view, as we give absolutely no credence to the argument that some are willing to advance on behalf of the Negro, Viz, that two wrongs added up makes right.

Commenting here on another less recent strike of Negro students we expressed the opinion that the main purpose of a college is not so much that of providing learning, as that of providing discipline and inspiration to its students, and further that our definition for education is that of providing discipline and inspiration.

Taking the opportunity to disgress somewhat at this point we noticed in press reports that Prime Minister Nkrumah of the newly created all-Negro State of Ghana in Africa, in praising his alma mater, Lincoln University emphasized that fact that it was there that he received the "Discipline" which he points to a responsible for his success as the leader of the Gold Coast to it's crowning achievement, and his, as the first all-Negro State in the British Commonwealth of Nations.

Unwilling as we are to concede the students the knowledge and understanding to appreciate the magnitude of the problem which now confronts the race, the South, and the nation, we see the Alcorn college strike as nothing more than a complete break down of discipline at the college, the maintenance of which, is the primary responsibility of the President and the members of the faculty.

More Than 300 Students Back In Classes Monday As Strike Focus Spotlight On Alcorn Prof's Writings

Advocate Sat. 3-16-57 P. 1

New President Not Known As Ardent Supporter Of The NAACP

STATUS OF KING STILL UNCERTAIN

Jackson, Miss.

Jackson, Miss., Mar. 11—(DSN)—Prof. J. D. Boyd, Principal of Hinds County Agricultural High School and Utica Institute for the past several years, took over as the new President of strike-torn Alcorn College Monday, after the State Board for Institutions of Higher Learning ordered the immediate dismissal of President J. R. Otis, from whom Prof. Boyd had already been designated to take over the presidency of the college at the end of the month.

Presumably, the Board ordered the immediate dismissal of President Otis because of his openly expressed sentiments favoring the students strike which lasted for 3 days last week, threatening the permanent closing of the oldest state supported Negro Institution for Higher Learning in the state.

Although the new President is not known as an ardent supporter of the NAACP, having withheld further contributions to the NAACP by the State Teachers' Association during his recent tenure as president of that organization, the three day strike at Alcorn was reported as stemming from the objection of the students to a series of anti-NAACP articles by a member of the Alcorn College faculty, published in a local daily, which came under the state, if not the national spotlight as a result of the students strike. The writer of the articles is Prof. Clennon King, a history instructor at the college.

Although the more than 500 students of the college were reported as involved in the strike, well informed sources here were reported as saying that students of the College who returned to Jackson over the weekend as a result of the strike and the subsequent expulsions by the state board, said that more than 200 of the students were opposed to the strike and refused to join in the movement until after President Otis addressed a meeting of students in the college chapel during which he bitterly attacked Prof. King because of his articles criticising the NAACP.

According to reports some 300 students were ready to return to classes Tuesday morning after a careful screening of each returning student by the new president, Prof. Boyd, who is reported to have been given discretionary power to determine the re-admission of each striking student to the college.

Meanwhile the status of Prof. King as an instructor at the College remained obscure after a meeting held by the State Board here Monday. At one time according to press reports, President Boyd was quoted as saying that Prof. King had been fired, but denied such a statement when the State Board denied that any action had been taken in respect to Prof. King staying on as a member of the college staff.

According to informed observers practically all of the students are expected to be back in their classes before the end of the current week.

Praise, Rebuke Alcorn Students

Defender, Chicago, Ill.

Sat. 3-16-57

NEW YORK—The students of Alcorn college in Jackson, Miss., were praised for the spirit in which they backed the NAACP in its fight for equality and first class citizenship for Negroes, but were chided for the pressure they put on Prof. Clennon King.

The lauding and chiding were contained in a wire to the president of the college's Student Council, .Ernest McEwen, from Henry L. Moon, NAACP public relations director, Moon declared:

"We deplore any pressure which denies him free speech on integration. We believe King is mistaken, but under our system of government, any person has a constitutional right to express his opinion on any issue.

"We demand this right for ourselves and we must protect it for others. We wish free speech for all persons in the South of both races and on both sides of the integration issue without muzzle or reprisal of any kind.

"The issue cannot be settled fairly unless everyone is free to debate. We remain confident that in such free debate the ironclad segregationists cannot win.

"We trust that some satisfactory settlement may be reached which will assure the return of students to classes and at the same time preserve Prof. King's right to freedom of expression."

Negro Student Revolt Stuns Lily-whites in Mississippi!

President Is Fired After Student Body Criticizes Professor

ALCORN, Miss.—J. D. Boyd, formerly principal of Utica (Miss.) Institute and the newly appointed president of strife-torn Alcorn State College, attempted to reopen the all-Negro state institution Monday of this week. The college was closed down on the week-end after the entire student body protested an anti-NAACP newspaper article written by an Alcorn history professor.

14eU

Absent from the campus this week were two important figures, J. R. Otis, the former president, who was fired by the State Board because he is alleged to have agreed with the revolting students, and Prof. Clennon King, the history professor who wrote the article criticizing the NAACP.

Professor King, who earned $450 a month during a nine-month period each year at Alcorn, also earns $100 a month as pastor of the Wesley Chapel Methodist Church in Hazlehurst, Miss. He fears now that he will lose his pastorate. In a statement to The Courier Sunday morning, King admitted "I'm Mississippi's biggest fool."

King told the press that Boyd fired him, but Boyd denied this.

Boyd also pointed out that he is not interested in anything or anybody that is not of interest to the state of Mississippi and that "I am not interested in anything outside of the state." Some observers interpreted this statement as meaning that Boyd will stay clear of the NAACP and the desegregation question.

It was learned that after the State Board closed down the cafeteria on the Alcorn campus at noon Friday, 489 of the 571 students signed withdrawal statements. Some are understood to have requested that they be readmitted to the college.

By WILLIE SMALLS
(Staff Correspondent)

ALCORN, Miss—Alcorn A. & M. College, "Home of the Braves," is busy looking for an entire new body of students and a new president in the wake of some fast moving events which saw this institution's 585 enrollees go on strike against what they called "Uncle Tomism."

The "Uncle Tomism," which aroused the ire of the student body, was manifested in a series of newspaper articles appearing in the Jackson State Times and written by one Prof. Clennon King, criticizing the NAACP.

The students struck after the first of the series was printed, demanding as a condition for their return the dismissal of Prof. King.

AT A MASS MEETING, held in the college chapel, Prof. King stood before the packed auditorium of students and in a trembling voice begged the students not to be influenced in their decision by what he called mass psychology. Said King, "I'm a Negro just like you are. I sit in a jim-crow car just like you do. I don't enjoy people dishonoring me and disrespecting me any more than you do."

As he spoke he twisted a handkerchief in his hand and then charged, "They have said I may lose my life if I do not leave the campus by tonight. I have been told it might happen at this meeting."

Ernest McEwen, president of the Student Council, stood up and immediately denied the charge. "Not a single student intends physical harm or violence," he said. "As far as students are concerned, the institution is dead."

BUT GOV. J. P. COLEMAN of Missisippi had other ideas. He moved into action on three fronts.

First, President J. R. Otis was fired with no reason given for his dismissal.

Secondly, all students remaining out of school were expelled from their classes under the stipulation that none were to be allowed to ever enroll in another Mississippi State institution.

Thirdly, he warned that the school would be closed unless the students returned to class and announced later that the school would reopen with a brand new set of students.

AS OF SATURDAY, school officials claimed that nearly one-fifth of the boycotters had returned to the institution.

In the meantime, Prof. King had bundled wife and family into the family car, with some belongings, and left Alcorn for an unannounced destination.

On Sunday, the 300-acre campus was deserted as the Mississippi Board of Control met Sunday morning to decide what to do about the school whose student had decreed must "die."

Today, all the displaced students were reported to be studying hard to make up for the time lost from their studies. The students received tuition, travel expenses, and an incidental expense fund from the NAACP for the remainder of the school semester. This action on the part of the Association was taken by the NAACP Committee on Administration at its regular monthly meeting on March 25.

"In a period when American institutions have given wide acceptance to refugees from Hungary who have struggled against the tyranny of a totalitarian regime, we are glad to be in the midst of those who paralleled this situation in American life with the acceptance of the refugees of freedom from the State of Mississippi."

Dr. Samuel Proctor, president of Virginia Union, declared that his university "is proud to cooperate with the NAACP in helping to keep the students of Alcorn College in school. We have welcomed to our campus Miss Robessie Young and Miss Susan Owens.

Two More Alcorn Students Placed At Other Colleges

Norfolk Va. Journ. Pilot P. 4 Sat. 4-13-57

NEW YORK — Two additional students who were expelled from the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College at Alcorn because of their leadership role in the recent student protest against Professor Clennon King have been placed at Central State College in Xenia, Ohio, Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, announced here today.

14eU

The Association already had arranged the transfer to other colleges of five Alcorn students expelled for the same reason. Three of them were placed at Central State College and two at Virginia Union University at Richmond.

The seven students were expelled from the Mississippi college after they protested against Prof. King because of a series of articles the teacher wrote for the Jackson (Miss.) State Times criticizing the NAACP's anti-segregation activities. The two expelled students most recently placed at Central State College are A. J. Fielder and John Rieley.

The student bodies and faculties of both Central State and Virginia Union were reported to have received the Mississippi students warmly. Addressing a special assembly, Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president of Central State, declared: already begun to make friends here and, I am sure, the disruption in their education will be less severe because of the interest the NAACP has shown in them."

Ex-Alcorn 'Prof.' Says:

'My Life In Danger'

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 1-20-57 p3

ALCORN, Miss. — Prof. Clennon King, a controversial pawn in the Mississippi game of segregation, found himself branded as an "agitator" by Alcorn A. and M. College's new president, J. D. Boyd.

• In addition to being branded an "agitator," Mr. King's status as a member of the Alcorn A. and M. College faculty was on swampy ground, with his exact status remaining an officially taboo subject.

Professor King did little to clear up matters last week, according to the Associated Press, which quoted him as having said, "If I should go back to Alcorn under the present circumstances, I will betray every Negro who would like to follow in my footsteps.

• The South correctly realizes that the NAACP is its greatest single enemy. I have given that enemy one of the mightiest blows it has ever received, because it is the only strong blow which has come from within."

King had become the center of a raging controversy involving Alcorn A. and M.'s entire student body when he wrote a series of articles for a white daily in which he attacked the NAACP. The student body walked out of the school and King contacted The Courier, claiming that he had been betrayed by white friends.

KING LATER retracted his "betrayal" claim, and the boycott at Alcorn fell through, with the principal "victim" of the spat being one J. R. Otis, who was removed as Alcorn's president at the height of the dispute.

Although King was said to have been fired and then reportedly rehired, his current status was veiled by the following developments:

1. Alcorn's new president, Mr. Boyd, said, "There is simply no announcement to make regarding King . . . (I refuse) to be a party to anything that gives him (King) publicity that is wholly unjustified."

2. Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the State College Board, said that school trustees would decide what action to take if King did not return to class. He said that as far as the board is concerned, King has a binding contract at Alcorn until July 1, the same as other members of the faculty.

3. Professor King said that President Boyd had made "humiliating" demands upon him and announced that he was not returning to teach classes because his life had been threatened.

4. Despite the officially stated stand of the board, King said that Mr. Boyd had told him that he "should not depend upon work at Alcorn after May 31."

5. Dr. Jobe of the board denied that Boyd "or anyone else in authority" had told King that his services would not be needed after May 31.

6. King said that before he wrote the articles criticizing the NAACP that he had received promises of summer session work at Alcorn and during the 1957-58 term.

7. Dr. Jobe denied that King had been promised summer work and noted that his contract was like all the others, scheduled to expire on July 1.

Out of the mixup, one thing remained crystal clear: Professor King had not returned to class and the State Board confirmed that he (King) had been threatened with death if he did return to teach.

Alcorn's President Boyd stated, "Everything is now normal" at the school.

Controversial Prof. King Returns To Alcorn This Fall

Daily World Sun. 6-9-57 Atlanta Ga.

HAZLEHURST, Miss.—(ANP) — The man who touched off mass student protest demonstrations at Alcorn A&M College is slated to return to the school next year and resume his teaching duties, it was learned here this week.

Prof. Clennon King, whose anti-NAACP statements were published in a daily newspaper causing a severe student boycott of the school, has been granted a new one-year contract to teach at the school for the academic year 1957-58.

Dr. J. D. Boyd, president of the school, presented King's name with other faculty members.

King stated "I am happy and pleased at the opportunity to teach next year at Alcorn. I have a family to support and I have a house full of furniture at Alcorn.

At the school, pessimism as to King's teaching was expressed by Dr. Boyd. He gave no cause for his belief.

Prof. Clennon King Marches Alone At Alcorn Event

Advocate Baton Rouge La. 6-1-57

Alcorn, Miss., May 29 (Special) —Prof. Clennon King, a member of the faculty, of Alcorn College, who has been absent from his classes since the recent Alcorn College student strike, returned to the College Monday to take part in the Commencement Program.

Prof. King walked alone in the processional and appeared to be extremely dejected, with some observers saying tears flowed from his eyes.

The student strike at Alcorn was in protest against a series of articles on race relations, by Prof. King, published in a Jackson, Mississippi daily paper in which he criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Alcorn Prof. Rehired For Year

Sat. Herald Bethany Okla. Jan. 5-31-57

JACKSON, May 30 (U.P.)—Prof. Clennon King has received a one-year renewal of his contract to teach at Alcorn A&M College it was disclosed today.

King, the Negro history teacher whose series of newspaper stories criticizing the NAACP touched off a student revolt at the Negro school in February left the campus after the strike but returned to his teaching duties last month.

Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the board of trustees of state institutions of higher learning, says the board renewed King's contract at its regular meeting last week.

Alcorn A&M President J. D. Boyd said earlier this week that all but 10 of the 549 students who walked out in February in protest against King's articles returned to classes of their own accord.

Clennon King scheduled to return to Alcorn in fall

Afro-American Baltimore Md. Sat. 6-22-57

HAZELHURST, Miss. (ANP) —The man who touched off mass student protest demonstrations at Alcorn A. and M. College is slated to return to the school next year and resume his teaching duties, it was learned here last week.

Clennon King, whose anti-NAACP statements were published in a daily newspaper causing a severe student boycott of the school, has been granted a new one-year contract to teach at the school for the academic year 1957-58.

* *

DR. J. D. BOYD, president of the school, presented King's name with those of other faculty members.

Mr. King stated: "I am happy and pleased at the opportunity to teach next year at Alcorn. I have a family to support and I have a house full of furniture at Alcorn.

At the school, pessimism as to King's teaching was expressed by Dr. Boyd. He gave no cause for his belief.

Prof. King Charges President Of Alcorn Seeks To Oust Him

Charleston, S.C.

HAZLEHURST, Miss., June 15 (AP)—Prof. Clennon King, whose pro - segregation newspaper articles almost closed Alcorn A&M College, charged today the president of the all-Negro school has "tried to force me to move off the campus."

P. 13-a

The State College Board recently announced that the history professor has been offered a new contract for 1957-58.

"Although it has been announced I am retained on the faculty," King said, "Alcorn president J. D. Boyd has:

"Tried to force me to move off the campus.

"Denied me . . . use of my office.

"Told me not to tell anyone I have a new contract because it is not true.

"Inferred that I may receive a decrease in salary for the incoming year.

"Denied me work for the summer at tremendous loss to myself even though in September 1956 I came to Alcorn with this clearly and repeatedly understood, and even though I am the only history teacher on the regular faculty."

Boyd declined to comment on King's accusations.

Early this year, the bulk of students at the land grant college quit classes in protest against King's newspaper articles, demanding his discharge or resignation. Almost all of the students have returned and the school has been reported back to normal for several months.

The college board named Boyd President after discharging Dr. J. R. Otis as Alcorn A&M head on grounds he had acquiesced in the student rebellion. Both men, like all Alcorn faculty members, are Negroes.

The three students have enrolled at Central State College and President Wesley said, "We are pleased to welcome these refugees of freedom from the State of Mississippi, who have been denied readmission to Alcorn College because they took their stand upon the issues of desegregation and integration on the basis of recognized American principles in a period when American institutions have given wide acceptance to refugees from Hungary who have struggled against the tyranny of totalitarian regime."

NEW YORK — Students who were expelled from the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical college at Alcorn because of their leadership role in the recent student protest against Professor Clennon King have been placed at other colleges.

The NAACP arranged the transfer to other colleges of seven Alcorn students expelled for the same reason. Five of these were placed at Central State college and two at Virginia Union university in Richmond.

THE SEVEN students were expelled from the Mississippi college after they protested against Prof. King because of a series of articles the teacher wrote for the Jackson (Miss.) State Times criticizing the NAACP's anti-segregation activities. The two expelled students most recently placed at Central State college are A. J. Fielder and John Rieley.

The student bodies and faculties of both Central State and Virginia Union were reported to have received the Mississippi students warmly. Addressing a special assembly, Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president of Central State, declared: "In a period when American institutions have given wide acceptance to refugees from Hungary who have struggled against the tyranny of a totalitarian regime, we are glad to be in the midst of those who paralleled this situation in American life with the acceptance of the refugees of freedom from the State of Mississippi."

DR. SAMUEL PROCTOR, president of Virginia Union, declared that his university "is proud to cooperate with the NAACP in helping to keep the students of Alcorn college in school. We have welcomed to our campus Miss Robessie Young and Miss Susan Owens. They have already begun to make friends here and, I am sure, the disruption in their education will be less severe because of the interest the NAACP has shown in them."

Today, all the displaced students were reported to be studying hard to make up for the time lost from their studies. The students receive tuition, travel expenses, and an incidental expense fund from the NAACP for the remainder of the school semester. This action on the part of the Association was taken by the NAACP Committee on Administration at its regular monthly meeting on March 25.

Afro-American Sat. 4-6-57 Baltimore, Md.

CLARKSDALE, Miss. — A drive to raise $100,000 to finance efforts to open the University of Mississippi to students ousted from Alcorn A. and M. College was started here last week end.

The drive began Sunday with a mass meeting sponsored at Clarksdale by the Mississippi Regional Council of Leadership at which H. A. Fielder and John Riley, two of the expelled students, were the principal speakers.

P. 1

EARLIER THIS month the entire Alcorn student body of 570 went out on strike in protest against pro-segregation articles written by Clennon King, a faculty member for a Mississippi newspaper.

This was followed by the closing of the college, the firing of its president, Dr. J. R. Otis, and a ruling by the all-white board of trustees for the state-supported school that the students would be readmitted only on an individual basis.

Ten of the student leaders were expelled outright by the board and an additional 190 refused to return.

FOLLOWING THEIR speeches at Sunday's mass meeting, Fielder and Riley went to Memphis, Tenn., on Monday, where they addressed a meeting of the Interdenominational Ministers Alliance.

Afterward, plans were disclosed by Dr. T. M. Howard, founder and president of the Mississippi Regional Council on Leadership, to send two teams of students to every metropolitan city in the country on a fund-raising tour.

Initial plans of the Council had called for the raising of funds to finance attendance by the expelled students at any college of their choice.

On Wednesday, however, Dr. Howard told the AFRO that the tour would seek to raise $100,000 to finance a legal fight to secure admission of the former Alcorn students to the all-white University of Mississippi.

OLDEST, YET POOREST

Afro-American Sat. 4-6-57

Tallahassee, Fla. — Around 1940 I began collecting information to write a story entitled "I Saw a Land Grant College Die."

The name of that school was Alcorn A. and M. College.

This letter is written because of the effort of some to associate the closing of that college with the activities of the NAACP. Baltimore, Md.

At the time I began collecting data the NAACP was hardly known in Mississippi. P. 4

Yet, the logistics of the lack of development of that school pointed unerringly to the governor's act in closing it down.

It is probably true that students' action was triggered by the professor's attack on the NAACP, but the problem is much deeper and broader than what the professor said.

Alcorn is 11 miles from the nearest highway — not town. Only recently was the road hard surfaced.

It is the oldest of colored land grant colleges. Yet, relatively, it receives the smallest state appropriation, pays the lowest salaries, has the highest teacher turnover, fewest buildings, poorest facilities, equipment, etc.

Alcorn has existed in an atmosphere of hostility on the part of colored people as well as whites in Mississippi.

The students have simply reflected the feelings and attitudes of adults in their action. Officials, therefore, should interpret the action for what it is worth.

But it is doubtful if that can or will happen, because in fact and truth there are practically no channels of communicating their problems and needs to state officials.

Neither does experience provide any source of hope.

WILBERFORCE, Ohio—Proving to be friends indeed to seven ousted Alcorn A. & M. College students in their hour of need, the NAACP, in league with Central State College and Virginia Union University, has arranged to have the Mississippi victims re-enrolled in classes.

• The seven students, prominent leaders in the recent Alcorn A. and M. boycott, included Ruby and Charles Hibbler, sister and brother; Ernest McEwen, Arthur Fielder, John Riley, Susan Owens and Robessie Young.

• The latter two students have been enrolled at Virginia Union University and the remaining five have entered Central State College.

Dr. Charles Wesley, president of Central State College, told The Courier that the school is awaiting the students' transcripts from Alcorn College and pointed out that they will have to take entrance exams to qualify as Central State students.

THE CENTRAL STATE story dates back to last week when NAACP Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins called Dr. Wesley and asked if he would accept three students. After receiving an affirmative answer, Mr. Wilkins forwarded a check for the three students to cover their second semester's tuition. A little later the NAACP called again and asked if Central would take two more.

"It is crowding us," replied Dr. Wesley; "but we're glad to admit them." Central's president said that he assumed that the NAACP is also sending a check for the last two.

Central had originally been asked to take in nine students. Tuition for each student and board at Central comes to about $900 for each student. It was announced that the NAACP is also shouldering the expenses of Misses Owens and Young at Virginia Union U.

THE STUDENTS involved had been outsted from Alcorn A. and M. College for having been leaders in the school-wide protest which had been raised by students against history professor Clennon King who had written a series of articles in a Mississippi daily paper criticizing the NAACP.

• The arrival of five new students at Central State College occasioned a special college assembly at which Dr. Wesley stated, "We are pleased to welcome these students who have been denied readmission to Alcorn College in Mississippi because they took their stand upon the issues of desegregation and integration on the basis of recognized American principles in a period when American institutions have been given wide acceptance to refugees from Hungary who have struggled against the tyranny of a totalitarian regime.

• "We are glad to be in the midst of those who paralleled this situation in American life with the acceptance of the refugees of freedom from the State of Mississippi. We not only welcome them, but give them the opportunity of a college education of the first rink, of self education and self direction under guidance, rather than compulsion, for at Central State College we believe in the freedom of the individual."

Alcorn Leader Lauded For Act

Chicago, Ill.

JACKSON, Miss. — State Elk leaders have agreed to extend the full forces of the National Department of Education of the Elks to give scholarship aid to former students of Alcorn A. and M. college who were ousted when they protested the Jim-Crow articles written by one of their professors.

Making the announcement was George W. Lee, grand commissioner of education.

Leader of the students who succeeded in getting the ouster of Prof. Clemmon King was Ernest McEwen, president of the Alcorn Student Council.

In a letter to McEwen, Lee stated:

"The great storm that now sweeps humanity has swept us all with it and our little fight against discrimination has become part of the tremendous struggle for human freedom upon this globe. You have proven by your action under trying circumstances that you are a fit leader in these heroic times.

"We feel that you symbolize much of which the Elks Department of Education stands for. We are, therefore, extending you a scholarship which will amount to $1,000 to attend the college or university of your choice."

ELK OBJECTIVES

In citing the objectives of the Department of Education Lee also stated that:

"The Elks Department of Education is fighting to make its contribution to the development of an integrated society by giving scholarship aid to prepare American youth for every challenge.

"Our oratorical contests on the local, state and national levels are teaching the Negro masses the American Constitution and freedom. Our contestants are giving plain spoken speeches on the present problems of our domestic scene.

"Through the speeces of these young contestants, the masses ar being educated about the danger of complacency. The masses are being warned against violence, but at the same time are urged to fight against everything that denies them democracy and freedom.

BACKED CASES

"In 1954 we presented scholarships to the five children who were plaintiffs in the Supreme Court case against segregation in the public schools, and in 1956 we presented a $1,000 scholarship to Mrs. Autherine Lucy Foster, who fought so valiantly against discrimination at the University of Alabama

"We have 49 students in the colleges and universities of America, Canada and Mexico who are now receiving our scholarship aid.

"In addition, we also are presenting two other scholarships, one to the young plaintiff in the University of Georgia case and another to the young man who is fighting to enter the University of Florida.

Board In Mississippi Expels Negroes In Boycott Of School

Advertiser Jan. 3-10-57 Montgomery, Ala.

JACKSON, Miss., March 9 (AP)—Mississippi's State College Board today expelled the striking students at all-Negro Alcorn A&M College and fired Dr. J. R. Otis as president.

The board announcement, issued after an emergency session, said students had taken over the college with "the acquiescence if not the consent" of Otis.

The announcement made no reference to Clennon King, a history professor whose newspaper articles were blamed by the students for the walkout. King dealt with segregation in his articles and criticized the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People for having done nothing locally for Southern Negroes.

Otis said 489 of the 561 students had signed "final withdrawal" slips but a number had asked to retract that action.

Otis told reporters an undetermined number of students, possibly as many as 96, had sought readmission and that some were back in class.

Asked what King's status is, H. G. Carpenter, president of the all-white board said, "he's still a member of the faculty. King's name was not brought up. There was no reason to bring it up."

The professor left the campus hurriedly yesterday, saying his life had been threatened. He left after making a tearful appeal to the students to read his articles and then take a secret ballot on whether they wanted him to go.

King did not offer the resignation and the students walked out.

The new college president, Prof. J. D. Boyd, plans to accept applications for admission tomorrow.

A careful screening apparently is planned for students seeking to return. Mon. 3-11-57

"Any applications for readmission will be considered on an individual basis," Dr. E. R. Cobe, executive secretary of the State College Board, said today. "The circumstances of the individual's withdrawal and representations in his application will be the grounds for the decision." P. 1

A person close to the situation said today not all students who left the campus were necessarily rebellios.

"Some students were taken home by their parents after the dining room and dormitories were locked up," he explained. "Obviously, the right thing to do is to give individual consideration to students wanting back."

The all-white State College Board held an emergency meeting at Jackson yesterday and decided the status of the striking students and Dr. J. R. Otis, president when the week-long student boycott began.

Otis was fired and students who defied the board's directive last week to return to class were ordered expelled. Boyd was given authority to decide which students fall into the category.

But the status of Prof. Clennon King remained uncertain.

The board's anncuncement did not mention the 36-year-old Negro professor whose recent newspaper articles about the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People were blamed by students as causing the controversy that led to the boycott.

King's articles criticized the NAACP for having done nothing locally for Southern Negroes.

King, at Hazlehurst, said he would not be at Alcorn tomorrow He said Boyd had fired him, effective tomorow morning. King, a native of Albany, Ga., said he didn't even plan to return to pick up his household belongings. He said he would send someone for them. Advertiser P. 2a

Since he left Alcorn hurriedly Friday, King has been at a Hazlehurst Methodist parsonage where he has also been serving as minister of the Wesley Chapel.

Both Boyd and H. G. Carpenter, president of the State College Board, denied King had been fired.

The 57-year-old Otis, fired some three weeks before he was scheduled to retire because of ill health, had recommended King be dismissed.

But the board didn't act on the recommendation.

Before Otis was discharged yesterday, he told reporters an undetermined number of students, possibly as many as 95, had sought readmission and that some were back in class.

Otis said 489 of the 561 students had signed "final withdrawal" slips but a number had asked to retract that action.

NAACP PRAISES ALCORN PROTEST

Statement Says State Under 'Thought Control'

Sat. 3-9-57

JACKSON, Miss., March 8 (AP)—The National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People Friday charged "though control, used by tyrants and tyrannical powers," has resulted in Negro students boycotting the classes of a professor who wrote articles critical to the NAACP. P. 14

The NAACP statement was issued by the Mississippi Conference after all 585 students of Alc A&M (Negro) College decided to stand fast on their strike emphasizing their demands for dismissal of the history professor in the face of a college board ultimatum to return to classes or quit school.

—Associated Press WIREPHOTO.
DR. J. R. OTIS

Prof. Clennon King, who has decided to resign, was accused of bringing the school's name into a controversial issue by writing articles critical of the NAACP.

The NAACP statement said:

"Freedom-loving Americans everywhere should have nothing but admiration and praise for the entire student body of Alcorn A&M College, Miss., for the stand that they have taken in behalf of our democratic ideals.

"Negro and white Mississippians have been placed in a state of complete isolationism as it relates to freedom of activity and freedom of expression in our American way of life.

"Thought control is the order of the day in the state of Mississippi. Not only does it relate to Negroes but also to whites alike. Instructors in most of our schools are either instructed to teach white supremacy or don't speak out on the race issue at all. Prof. Clennon King of Alcorn A&M College is a typical example.

"In this democracy where freedom of activity and freedom of expression is a part of our American way of life, Mississippi is taking on such a striking resemblance to Nazism, Fascism and Communism. Thought control is the weapon used by tyrants and tyrannical powers.

"Certainly, freedom-loving Americans in Mississippi, Negro and white, who have witnessed the downfall of Nazism and Fascism and the evil that accompany white supremacy and Communism should not sit undisturbed and allow our country and state to be patterned after the Axis powers."

ALCORN COLLEGE 'DEATH' PENDING

Professor Pleads, But Doesn't Resign

Sat. 3-9-57

By TIM PARKER

ALCORN, Miss., March 8 (AP)—Students of Alcorn A&M, an 86-year-old land grant college for Negroes, announced its "death" Friday and prepared to go home.

Some of the 585 students cried and others sang as they trooped from the rickety old chapel where Prof. Clennon King — whose dismissal or resignation they demanded as a condition for staying—made a half-hour plea for "understanding." King did not resign.

The students said they objected to a series of articles written by King, a Negro professor of history. The articles, which began appearing in a Jackson newspaper last Sunday, criticized the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

King Departs

Ernest McEwen, student council president, said the students did not object to King's views but the fact that he involved himself and Alcorn A&M in a controversial situation.

After Friday's mass meeting in the chapel, King put his family and some belongings in a car and left the campus.

In a sense, King's departure—although he did not resign or receive dismissal notice — meant the students had won a major point. But they still had the school board announcement that school would be closed if they stayed away.

At the chapel meeting, King, handkerchief in hand and almost weeping, pleaded with the students to take a ballot on their feelings about his status. He said they were being influenced by mass psychology.

Story on the reaction of the NAACP to the Alcorn college student strike on page 14.

'Life Threatened'

"I'm a Negro just like you are. I sit in a Jim Crow car just like you do," he said. "I don't enjoy people dishonoring me and disrespecting me any more than you do."

King also said his life had been threatened by students.

"They have said I may lose my life if I do not leave the campus by Friday night. I have been told it might happen at this meeting."

McEwen, student council president, got up to deny this.

"Not a single student intends physical harm or any violence," the 25-year-old student and father of three children told King.

"As far as students are concerned," McEwen of Oxford said, "the institution is dead."

Students gathered about the post office, filling out change of address cards. They exchanged autographed pictures. They discussed plans to enter different schools.

Alcorn Students Demand History Professor's Firing

Courier-Recorder, Montgomery, Ala., Thurs. 3-7-57

Classes Boycotted, Faculty Gives Ultimatum

ALCORN, Miss., March 6 (AP)—Alcorn A&M students demanding dismissal of a history professor were told Wednesday their demands won't receive consideration until they return to classes.

The entire student body of the state-supported Negro school quit classes this morning, asking dismissal of Prof. Clennon King, who wrote a series of newspaper articles critical of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

A spokesman for students who asked that he not be named said Prof. King was hanged in effigy Monday night and that students have staged orderly demonstrations on the campus. The decision to boycott classes was made at an 8 a. m. meeting Wednesday.

Dr. J. R. Otis, president of the south Mississippi school, called the student body into special meeting this afternoon and told them there could be no further negotiations until they returned to classes. He said all students—about 585—attended the meeting, which he described as peaceful.

No Reaction

There was no immediate word from student leaders as to their reaction.

Dr. Otis acted under instructions from the State College Board. At Rolling Fork, board president H. G. Carpenter said he told Dr. Otis by telephone to tell the students "we wouldn't entertain any complaints at all until they went back to class."

"White students or colored students, neither are capable of running a school," Carpenter told reporters.

Prof. King's articles have been published in the Jackson State Times. They said in part that the NAACP has created racial tension and done nothing locally for the Southern Negro.

A student source said the demonstrations continued on the campus and in the student chapel through Tuesday night. He said students carried signs reading:

King vs. King

"If he stays, we'll go." "If it takes failing to prove our point, flunk us all." "King vs King." The latter was believed to be a reference both to Prof. King and to the Rev. Martin Luther King, Alabama Negro leader.

It was the third instance of student unrest or disappointment in recent weeks at state-supported Negro colleges in Mississippi. Students of Jackson State College were reported to be preparing protests against college board instructions that the school's basketball team be withdrawn from the NCAA tournament to avoid playing white teams. About 140 students at Mississippi vocational college, at Itta Bena in the Delta, boycotted classes Feb. 22, demanding more student government. They returned before the day ended.

WALKOUT IS LINKED TO ANTI-NAACP ARTICLE

Daily World, Atlanta, Ga., Sat. 3-9-57

ALCORN, Miss. — (INS) — Striking students of Alcorn A&M College gave notice Friday they would not return to their school. The 570 College students, who have been alternately threatened and cajoled in an effort to make them return, after they struck because of anti-NAACP articles written by one of their own professors, began leaving for home early Friday morning.

"Alcorn College died officially at noon," said Ernest McKewin, student body president, shortly after Prof. Clennon King, whose articles stirred up the controversy, offered to resign to save the school.

College Dean Herbert Wilson said the faculty had questioned students Friday, but could not find any one who wanted to stay.

King in a dramatic appearance before the student body Friday morning tried to save the 86 year old Mississippi Institution by offering his conditional resignaton.

King asked the student council to let students decide by ballot if they wanted him to resign. When the ballots are counted, he said "if you want me to go, I'll hand in my resignation." He added:

"In that way you will be cool headed and not ruled by mob psychology."

Thursday night H. G. Carpenter, chairman of the board of trustees, told the students they would either have to return to classes Friday or the school would be closed.

Gov. J. P. Coleman said the strike is "wholly unjustified and will not be tolerated."

The student body has insisted their grievances against the history professor did not result directly from his articles, but because they resented his drawing the school into the segregation issue.

The student protest was intensified when it was learned that King had written letters which were published in what the students called the official paper of the Mississippi white citizens council.

King denied writing the letters for the citizens council to publish and blamed "other teachers" at the college for instigating the strike.

Alcorn Students Return To Class After Walkout

Journal & Constitution, Atlanta, Ga., Sun. 3-10-57

JACKSON, Miss., March 9 (AP)—Dr. J. R. Otis, president of strike-bound Alcorn A&M (Negro) College, said students were returning to classes Saturday, the first break in the week-long student demonstration against a professor's writings.

Dr. Otis made the statement as he arrived at the emergency meeting of the all-white college board, called after reports indicated all 585 students at the 86-year-old coeducational school walked out Friday.

P. 1-A

THE PRESIDENT said he was informed about 95 students were returning to class. He said teachers were at their desks and all buildings normally open on Saturday were open except the dining hall.

The college board specifically ordered the dining hall closed at noon Friday if the students refused to return to class.

The students, announcing the "death" of the old land grant school for Negroes, left the campus when they failed Friday to get the resignation of Prof. Clennon King. They accused King of getting the college into a controversial situation by writing a series of newspaper articles on segregation and said he used pictures of students to illustrate the articles without their permission.

AT FRIDAY'S meeting, prospects at first seemed good the students would all return to class. Dean H. A. Wilson told them Associate Editor Robert Webb of the Jackson Times, which is publishing the newspaper articles, had telephoned him "in great distress," saying that the paper did not want to be in a position of having any part in a situation which might close the school.

All 570 at Negro College Go Home Protesting Appeal for 'Uncle Toms'

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. Sat. 3-9-57

From Press Dispatches

All 570 students of a Negro college in Mississippi left school Friday protesting a professor's call for "Uncle Tom" humility. In Florida, the State Supreme Court exercised the powers of a sovereign state to stay a Negro's admission to a white university.

And two former Negro Communist leaders testified in Baton Rouge, La., that Red agents have been trying since 1929 to infiltrate Negro churches, especially in the South.

Leonard Patterson told the Louisiana Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, probing influences behind racial unrest, "The Negro people in the South never accepted the Communist Party program."

And Manning Johnson said Communists worked on Negro pastors in Dixie, pressuring them to participate in various front movements.

Both New Yorkers were former Red leaders before they turned against the party.

Johnson said Communists favored the churches in the South as a target because they provided a cloak of respectability and a place to hide from police investigations.

"When a cry arose against the law investigators," he added, "the agents thus created sympathy for their cause. The Communists were very clever in this."

The withdrawal of the student body closed down little Alcorn A. & M. College in Southwest Mississippi, leaving it a ghost campus.

The students rejected a last-minute appeal by the professor who caused the revolt, history teacher Clennon King, 36. They held a hymn-singing to mark the end of the school's 86-year operation. There apparently was no disposition on the part of the state, which supported it, to get Alcorn back in business.

After the 30-minute service the students started a mass exodus from Alcorn aboard school buses. Most of them had been packed since early morning after a unanimous vote was taken Thursday night to extend a three-day strike indefinitely. But they stayed on to listen to King's hour-long appeal that they re-read his series of eight articles, published in a Jackson newspaper, and evaluate them as a whole. He offered to resign if the students still rejected his beliefs.

In an earlier article King had called for more Negroes of the "Uncle Tom" type, a reference to the character created by Harriet Beecher Stowe that became the personification of the humble, servile Negro.

Even as he appealed to the students, King had an article published endorsing the principle of permitting Negroes to go to homesteads in their ancestral Africa.

"Alcorn College died officially at 11:55 a.m. today," student president Ernest McEwin announced to the assembly as King's appeal was rejected.

Even before the students left, state officials had warned the college would be closed unless the boycott of classes ended at once.

The Florida Supreme Court rejected the U. S. Supreme Court's order that Negro Virgil Hawkins, 47, be admitted to the University of Florida at Gainesville.

"We are cognizant of our duty to compel (Hawkins') admission without delay if it is feasible to do so, but we have an equally compelling duty to perform in respect to the public peace," said the majority opinion in the 5 to 2 decision.

"This court has an opportunity to prevent the incidents of violence whilh are, even now, occurring in various parts of this country as a result of the state's efforts to enforce integration," it said.

One justice said in a concurring opinion that a state survey has shown students, parents and alumni of the university would "violently resist integration."

Prof. J. D. Boyd Alcorn Graduate Named President Of The College

Advocate Sat. 3-2-57 Jackson, Miss.

Otis Resignation Effective March 31st

p. 1

The Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning of Mississippi has elected J. D. Boyd President of The Utica Institute as President of Alcorn A. & M. College. He is to assume the office April 1.

He will succed President J. R. Otis whose resignation will become effective on March 31. Dr. Otis submitted his resignation suggesting two dates, July 31st and March 31st, giving as his reason failing health.

Advocate

President Boyd will bring to the office wide knowledge of the needs of the people of Mississippi. He was born at Doloroso, Wilkinson County, Mississippi. His education was obtained in the grammar schools of his State. He graduated from Alcorn A. & M. College in 1931. His graduate work and degree were earned at the University of Illinois.

p. 2

His life has been devoted to teaching. He began work in a one-teacher school. He served for sixteen years as a principal and teacher of vocational agriculture in the high schools of Mississippi. In 1947, he was called back to Alcorn as instructor in agronomy and manager of the college farm. In 1951, he was asked to become head of The Utica Institute. In his short stay at that institution, he has increased the enrollment from 300 to nearly 900, the employees from 16 to 47, and the physical plant by about $700,000. He has paved the streets, built a football field, and installed modern lights on the campus. In five years after he became head of The Utica Institute it was fully accredited by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

He has not been too busy to give time to worthwhile projects. He has been president of the County, District, and State Teachers Association. He has been active in attending national educational meetings, and was one of the eighteen delegates from his State to the White House Conference on Education. He helped to organize and become vice president of the State Mutual Savings and Loan Association.

President Boyd is a member of the Baptist Church, the Elks, Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, Phi Delta Kappa Honorary Fraternity, American Society of Agronomy, and many other civic and professional organizations.

N.A.A.C.P. Critic Hanged In Effigy At Negro School

Courier Journal Louisville, Ky. Thurs. 3-7-57

Alcorn, Miss., March 6 (AP)—All students of Alcorn A. & M. College boycotted classes today, demanding dismissal of a history professor who wrote newspaper articles criticizing the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People.

A spokesman for the 585 Negro students said Prof. Clennon King was hanged in effigy Monday and that students staged orderly demonstrations on the campus.

Dr. J. R. Otis, president of the State-supported school, told the student body this afternoon there could be no further negotiations until they returned to classes. He said all students attended the meeting, which he described as peaceful.

There was no immediate word from student leaders as to their reaction.

A spokesman for students who asked that he not be named said Prof. King was hanged in effigy Monday night and students have staged orderly demonstrations on the campus. The decision to boycott classes was made at an 8 a.m. meeting today.

Dr. J. R. Otis, president of the South Mississippi school, called the students into special meeting this afternoon and told them there could be no further negotiations until they returned to classes. He said all students—about 585—attended the meeting, which he described as peaceful.

There was no immediate word from student leaders as to their reaction.

Prof. King's articles have been published in the Jackson State Times. They say in part that the NAACP, has created racial tension and done nothing locally for the Southern Negro.

A student source said the demonstrations continued on the campus and in the student chapel last night. He said students carried signs reading:

"If he stays, we'll go." "If it takes failing to prove our point, flunk us all." "King vs. King." The latter was believed to be a reference both to Prof. King and to the Rev. Martin Luther King, Alabama Negro leader.

Negro Students Ask Prof. Ouster

ALCORN, Miss., March 6 (AP)—Alcorn A&M students demanding dismissal of a history professor were told today their demands won't receive consideration until they return to classes.

The entire student body of the state-supported Negro school quit classes this morning asking dismissal of Prof. Clennon King who wrote a series of newspaper articles critical of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Striking Negro Students Are Warned By Coleman

Memphis, Tenn.

CONCLAVE SET TODAY

By The United Press

3-8-57

ALCORN, Miss., March 7. — The State College Board Thursday told 570 striking Negro students that Alcorn A&M College will be closed unless they return to classes by Monday.

Board President G. H. Carpenter of Rolling Fork issued a five-point ultimatum after a meeting of an activities committee of the board on the campus.

Will Study Demands Today

He said the five-man committee would not consider until Friday demands of the students and a recommendation by President J. R. Otis that a history professor who publicly criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People be fired.

"The student walkout and the Prof. Clennon King issue are two separate issues and will be considered separately," he said after a meeting with Dr. Otis and student leaders.

The committee, which speaks with authority of the full board, told the students to return to classes Friday. The group said if they do not return, "no rule will be spared" and the cafeteria will be closed at noon Friday.

If the students do not return for classes by Monday, the committee said, they will be given a pro-rata share of their tuition and the school closed.

Mr. Carpenter said, however, the committee would consider all petitions and resolutions submitted by students and faculty.

He said the group would meet at 8 a.m. Friday to consider Dr. Otis' recommendation that Prof. King be fired.

Warning From Coleman

In Jackson, Gov. J. P. Coleman said the demonstration and similar ones at Mississippi Vocational College and Jackson State, also state supported Negro institutions, "will not be tolerated."

The Governor hinted he would take disciplinary action against the students if the board failed to do so.

Dr. Otis disclosed he recommended the board dismiss Prof. King, 36-year-old Georgia-born teacher, for involving the school in a controversial matter.

Prof. King said Dr. Otis told him he was being dismissed for "insubordination." The professor said he had received numerous anonymous threats and his family also had been threatened.

Dr. Otis issued a statement saying the students "insisted their grievances against Prof. King did not result directly from the point of view which Prof. King presented in the article in the Jackson State-Times, but from their resentment of his drawing the school into this highly controversial political issue.

Letters Used By Councils

"The student protest was intensified when it was learned Prof. King had written letters which were published in the official paper of the Citizens Councils," Dr. Otis said.

Prof. King said he did not write letters for the Citizens Councils, white pro-segregation groups, but he understood one or two of his letters published elsewhere were run in the Citizens Council paper published in Jackson.

Prof. King came here in September after teaching last year in Albany, Ga. He holds a bachelor's degree from Tuskegee Institute and a master's from Western Reserve in Ohio.

Prof. King said he would not protest if he is fired.

4 students ousted from Alcorn College go on national tour

Baltimore Afro-American — 4-6-57

CLARKSDALE, Miss. (ANP) — Four ousted Alcorn A. and M. College students left this city Monday on a speaking tour which will take them to Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis and New York.

They will speak on behalf of about 12 students who were not allowed to reenter the college following a student strike over a college professors' anti-NAACP newspaper articles.

The group will pause in the tour to make a progress report to the sixth annual meeting of the Council of Negro Leadership in Greenville on April 26, at which time Rep. Corneal A. Davis of the Illinois Assembly will be the principal speaker.

Break in Student Boycott Revives College's Hopes

Evening Star — Sat. 3-9-57

Washington, D.C.

ALCORN, Miss., Mar. 9 (AP). — The first break in the student boycott at Alcorn A&M brightened hopes that the State College Board would find a way today to keep the Negro college alive.

Possibly as many as 95 of the students, among them education seniors just back from practice teaching, were reported seeking to return to classes. They also included some who signed "final withdrawal" statements yesterday.

The break in the students' solid front apparently freed the college board of its announced intention to lock up all campus buildings today if students were not back in classes. The board's statement did not say all students must return.

Board Meeting Called

The all-white board called an emergency session in the State Capital at Jackson today on the basis of reports that all of the estimated 585 students of the 86-year-old co-educational school walked out yesterday.

The students, announcing the "death" of the old land grant school for Negroes, left the campus when they failed to get the resignation of Prof. Clennon King. They accused Prof. King of gettting the college into a controversial situation by writing a series of newspaper artitcles on segregation and said he used pictures of students to illustrate the articles without their permission.

Prof. King took his wife and three children and left the campus for an undisclosed destination yesterday after receiving what he called threats on his life.

Seek Return to Classes

The first break in the boycott came when 15 to 20 students approached Prof. A. D. Fobbs, head of the agriculture education department. Prof. Fobbs said they "explained they didn't know exactly what they had done," and wanted to know what they should do to get back in classes and finish their education.

One of the agricultural students, Ezell McLaurin, told reporters, "We don't intend to leave the campus unless we have to." Mr. McLaurin, a 25-year-old senior, is from Mendenhall, Miss.

The question of academic freedom was raised in December by Prof. King.

This week, the 36-year-old Georgia-born teacher made no reference to academic freedom in his emotional appeal to students to read his articles before voting to have him discharged.

Was Asked to Desist

Dr. J. R. Otis, Negro president of the school, said the question first arose when Prof. King wrote letters to newspapers, saying the United States should name Negro ambassadors to Negro nations.

Dr. Otis said he called Prof. King in, "asked him to desist," and followed this with a letter which said in part:

"While I, as an administrator, must take a stand on academic freedom of expression, it can only be done when that freedom is properly exercised. . . . It is the policy of this administration to adhere strictly to the business of education and to avoid controversial issues.

"Your action is an independent and personal one. . . . It can only place the college in ill repute. Further contributions of this kind are likely to subject you to action as regards your employment status. I hope, therefore, you will do as you have promised, desist from further contributions."

Recommended Dismissal

Dr. Otis said Prof. King's current newspaper articles broke that promise and on that basis he recommended Prof. King's dismissal. The State College Board, which has final authority to hire and fire, has not yet acted.

Mississippi's 1956 Legislature enacted a law requiring all public school faculty members to make an affidavit listing all organizations of which they have been a member in the preceding five years, or to which they have contributed. When the measure was debated in the House, backers listed the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as among objectionable organizations.

Teachers seeking Alcorn A&M posts last summer were sent affidavit forms together with application blanks. Dean H. A. Wilson said so many teachers did not complete their applications thereafter that some posts were unfilled after school opened. Incidentally, one of these posts fell to Prof. King, who arrived on the campus a week after classes had begun. He did not list the NAACP among his affiliations, although Dr. Otis has described him as a former NAACP member.

Objected to Criticism

The Alcorn students told Prof. King they objected not to the content of his newspaper articles which criticized the NAACP and urged Negroes to be "realistic," but to the fact he had embroiled their school in a controversial situation.

The "back to Africa" movement has been among the causes espoused by Prof. King, who was born and reared in Albany, Ga. The Negroes' own problems apparently were among his major studies at Tuskegee from which he got a B.S. degree in 1940 and at Western Reserve in Cleveland, Ohio, which awarded him a master's degree in 1945. He was principal of Smithville (Ga.) High School from 1951 through 1955, studying during summers toward a Ph.D. at Ohio State and the University of Chicago.

His academic record also includes teaching at Lemoyne College at Memphis, Tenn.; West Virginia State College; Bennett College at Greensboro, N. C.; Florida Normal College at St. Augustine; Virginia Union University at Richmond, and Albany (Ga.) State.

Alcorn School Being Reopened

Post-Herald — Birm., Ala.

Student Body In For Screening

Mon. 3-11-57

ALCORN, Miss., March 10 (AP) — Alcorn A&M will open under a new administration tomorrow but apparently without the history professor who caused a campuswide walkout at the all-Negro school.

The new college president, Prof. J. D. Boyd, plans to accept applications for admission tomorrow.

A careful screening apparently is planned for students seeking to return.

"Any applications for re-admission will be considered on an individual basis," Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the State College Board, said today. "The circumstances of the individual's withdrawal and representations in his application will be the grounds for the decision."

A person close to the situation said today not all students who left the campus were necessarily rebellious.

"Some students were taken home by their parents after the dining room and dormitories were locked up," he explained. "Obviously, the right thing to do is to give individual consideration to students wanting back."

The all-white State College Board held an emergency meeting at Jackson yesterday and decided the status of the striking students and Dr. J. R. Otis, president when the week-long student boycott began.

Otis was fired and students who defied the board's directive last week to return to class were ordered expelled. Boyd was given authority to decide which students fall into the category.

But the status of Prof. Clennon King remained uncertain.

The board's announcement did not mention the 36-year-old Negro professor whose recent newspaper articles about the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People were blamed by students as causing the controversy that led to the boycott.

King's articles criticized the NAACP for having done nothing locally for Southern Negroes.

King, at Hazlehurst, said he would not be at Alcorn tomorrow. He said Boyd had fired him, effective tomorrow morning. King, a native of Albany, Ga., said he didn't even plan to return to pick up his household belongings. He said he would send someone for them.

Post-Herald

Since he left Alcorn hurriedly Friday, King has been at a Hazlehurst Methodist parsonage where he has also been serving as minister of the Wesley Chapel.

Both Boyd and H. G. Carpenter, president of the State College Board, denied King had been fired.

Students and College Head Expelled in Bias Strike

Inquirer Philadelphia, Pa.
Sun. 3-10-57

JACKSON, Miss., March 9 (AP).—Mississippi's State College Board today expelled the striking students at all-Negro Alcorn A. and M. College and fired Dr. J. P. Otis as president.

The board announcement, issued after an emergency session, said students had taken over the college with "the acquiescence if not the consent" of Otis.

The announcement made no reference to Clennon King, a history professor whose newspaper articles were blamed by the students for the walkout. King dealt with segregation in his articles and criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People for having done nothing locally for Southern Negroes.

OTIS 'NOT SURPRISED'

Otis told reporters he was "not surprised" by his discharge as head of the 86-year-old land-grant college. He had recommended King's dismissal on grounds similar to the students' complaints—that King had involved the college in controversial issues.

Otis said 489 of the 561 students had signed "final withdrawal" slips but a number had asked to retract that action. He said an undetermined number of students, possibly as many as 96, had sought readmission and that some were back in class.

PROFESSOR DISMISSED

Asked what King's status is, H. G. Carpenter, president, said, "He's still a member of the faculty. King's name was not brought up. There was no reason to bring it up."

Tonight, however, King, labeled an "Uncle Tom" by the students for his articles, said he, too, had been dismissed.

King said at his Hazlehurst, Miss., home that president-elect J. D. Boyd had recommended the move on replacing Otis as school president and the board had agreed.

King said he would not protest his firing but questioned: "Is it possible for a Negro to question the NAACP and escape being destroyed?"

KING OFF IN HURRY

Prof. King left the campus hurriedly yesterday, saying his life had been threatened. He left after making a tearful appeal to the students to read his articles and then take a secret ballot on whether they wanted him to go.

Assuring that the school will be "continued in operation" for those students who have returned, the board put Boyd into immediate authority. Boyd, now president of Utica Institute, a State-supported Negro school near Jackson, was named to succeed Otis recently when the board announced Otis' resignation, efffective March 31. Otis has been under treatment recently for ulcers.

OUT OF CONTROL

The board said, "The faculty administration at Alcorn A. and M. College has wholly failed, and . . . the students, or some of them, have taken over, by and with the acquiescence, if not the consent and approval, of the president of the college.

"For good cause . . . President J. R. Otis . . . is hereby discharged . . .

"Students . . . who have defied the board's direction to return to classes are hereby expelled from said college."

which almost closed the school. Boyd said McEwen telephoned him and was insulting.

"It is my belief that his behavior is not representative of the student group that elected him," Boyd said.

McEwen, 25-year-old father of three, said at Oxford that he merely called Boyd in hopes of arranging a conference on the possibility of being readmitted but that Boyd told him he need not pursue the subject further.

At Mound Bayou, Miss., Thursday, President Theodore Trammell of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership announced "a nationwide drive" to raise $100,000 "to assist students who were ousted from Alcorn A&M."

"Nine of the nation's leading newspapers have agreed to spearhead the drive in their localities," Trammell said. He did not identify the newspapers.

"The plan calls for paying the difference in the cost of attending private colleges and the state-owned colleges where the student desires to further his education," Trammell said. Students expelled from any state school are not eligible to enter another state school until they have cleared the expulsion.

McEwen said he understood at least six members of the student council have been turned

MISSISSIPPI TO KEEP NEGRO SCHOOL OPEN

Sunday Tribune Chicago, Ill.
Sun. 3-10-57

Defies Student Cuts, Fires President

Jackson, Miss., March 9 [Special] — Mississippi's all-white state college board voted here today to keep an all-Negro college open despite a student boycott, to expel all students who defy the board's authority, and to fire Dr. J. R. Otis 57, the college's Negro president.

The college is Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical college in Claiborne county, 75 miles southwest of here, which has an all-Negro faculty and an all-Negro student body of 585 students. Dormitories and college buildings were closed for the week-end by a board order yesterday in retaliation for the boycott.

Names Otis Successor

The board's action today was taken at a closed meeting in the capitol with Gov. J. P. Coleman and Atty. Gen. Joseph Patterson, who are not board members, present by invitation. The action dispelled rumors that the college, which has been operated for 86 years and is the oldest Negro land grant school in the United States, would be permanently closed but left unclear how many students were to be expelled and who they are.

The board appointed J. D. Boyd, president of Utica institute, a junior college for Negroes near Jackson, to succeed Dr. Otis as Alcorn president and instructed him to begin his new duties today.

A board statement said that Dr. Otis had been fired "for good cause shown to the board." Dr. Otis, head of Alcorn for the last 12 years, submitted his resignation several months ago, to take effect July 1, because of ill health, and last week asked that the effective date be advanced to April 1.

Otis had reportedly sided with student leaders in the boycott, which got under way Monday to back up student demands for the ouster of Prof. Clennon King, 36, a history teacher, who had written articles critical of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Urged Professor's Resignation

Otis told students earlier this week that he had asked for King's resignation and had recommended his dismissal.

His whereabouts today was not disclosed. He reportedly left the campus yesterday with his wife and three children following threats on his life.

Newspaper articles by King, which stirred student resentment, are appearing as a series of eight in the Jackson State Times. In articles so far published King has warned Negroes against organizations and individuals who may be out to further their own interests rather than to improve racial conditions.

He's Doubtful of AAACP

King stressed the superiority of American Negro conditions over those of colored people thruout the world and urged Negroes to give more attention to their educational and moral needs without pinning their hopes on the American Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The boycott began with students shunning King's classes but spread to the whole school by Wednesday. The board shut down the dining hall yesterday and ordered other buildings closed today. Hundreds of students packed and left for their homes for the week-end.

College Opens After Boycott

Evening Star Washington, D.C.
Mon. 3-11-57

ALCORN, Miss., Mar. 11 (AP).—Alcorn A&M College opened under a new administration today to receive students seeking readmission after a week-long boycott at the all-Negro State institution.

The new president, J. D. Boyd, reopened the dining hall and dormitories over the week end. He was given power by the State College Board to decide which students defied a board directive to return to class. These were ordered expelled.

In doubt was the status of Clennon King, the history professor whose newspaper articles touched off the student rebellion resulting in the firing of Dr. J. R. Otis as president.

Dismissal Denied

Both Mr. Boyd and H. G. Carpenter of Rolling Fork, president of the all-white State College Board, denied Prof. King had been dismissed. Prof. King, however, said at his home in Hazlehurst he didn't plan to return because Mr. Boyd had fired him effective today.

Prof. King, 36-year-old minister of the Wesley (Methodist) Chapel in Hazlehurst, wrote a series of articles in the Jackson State Times. He criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People as having done nothing locally for the Southern Negro.

Prof. King, who wrote that the Negro as well as the white person needed to learn tolerance, said he doubted the boycott was spontaneous and suggested that the NAACP "moved in and spread confusion."

Many Seek to Retract

Dr. Otis said Saturday he thought as many as 95 students had sought readmission. He said 489 of the 561 students had signed withdrawal slips, but a number had asked to retract the action.

In New York, NAACP Executive Secretary Roy Wilkins sent a telegram to the president of the Alcorn Student Council saying "we deplore" any pressure which denies Prof. King free speech on integration.

"We believe King is mistaken, but under out system of government any person has a constitutional right to express his opinion on any issue," Mr. Wilkins said. "We demand this right for ourselves, and we must protect it for others."

Race Tempest Shuts Down Negro School

Post-Herald
Birm., Ala.
Sat. 3-9-57

ALCORN, Miss., March 8 (U.P.)—A Negro college closed today to climax a racial tempest stirred up by an "Uncle Tom" professor's published views on segregation.

The 570-member student body of Alcorn A. and M. College turned down last-minute plea by Prof. Clennon King, the central figure in the controversy, and began leaving the campus after a 30-minute prayer and hymn-singing session.

Closing of the 86-year-old state-supported school leaves 40 faculty members jobless.

King tried for more than an hour to persuade the students to call of a campus-wide boycott protesting his published opinion that the NAACP was harming racial relations in the South.

The State College Board said the school would be closed if the boycott did not end today. The students met after listening to King and decided to stick by their decision to leave classes for good.

King had criticized the NAACP in a series of newspaper articles the students said reflected White Citizens Council viewpoints on segregation. Students began boycotting classes two days ago and voted last night to quit school entirely.

In a lengthy talk in the school auditorium, King told the students he was ready to resign and urged them to return to classes. The entire student body had packed up during the night and some were seen leaving the campus, bags in hand, shortly after the 36-year-old professor's dramatic appearance.

King was calm during his long appearance before the students but at times he seemed on the verge of tears.

His articles have appeared in the Jackson, Miss., State Times.

President Claims 50 Per Cent of Students Return

ALCORN, Miss., March 13 (AP)—Alcorn A&M's new president said Wednesday he believes the school is now "about 50 per cent back to normal." He was especially pleased, he said, by the "really fine attitude of returning students."

Prof. J. D. Boyd, named to take over the all-Negro school which was almost closed last week by a student boycott against pro-segregation writings of a professor, said he has talked personally to about 200 students seeking readmission.

"I have yet to talk to one whose attitude isn't cooperative and understanding," said Boyd. "They seem to feel, as I do, that the thing to do is to get back in operation."

Boyd declined to translate his "50 per cent of normal" statement into an exact number of students restored to the rolls. Latest information Tuesday was that about 100 of the 561 students were in classes.

Re-admission is on a probationary basis, with Boyd's recommendations going to the State College Board. Boyd said a meeting is scheduled in Jackson Friday at which he is to be formally released from his contract at Utica Institute, which he served as president before succeeding the ousted Dr. J. R. Otis as president here.

Prof. Clennon King, history professor whose newspaper articles set off the boycott, has not returned although the college board says he is free to do so when he wants.

King fails to cash in on smear stories

Afro-American
Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 4-6-57

BY SAMUEL HOSKINS

WASHINGTON

Prof. Clennon King, the controversial teacher whose race relations articles blew a school asunder and, to all practical purposes, ousted him from his job, was much underpaid for his efforts.

This week he told Cliff Mackay, AFRO'S editor in chief, he received only $32 from the Jackson paper which published the series of eight articles.

This pittance is proof positive what the editors of the State Times really think of the tripe some pro-segregation southerners today are hailing as masterpieces.

BROTHER KING, who has called the AFRO'S home office on at least three separate occasions, also posted a complaint about the articles I wrote regarding the Alcorn situation.

"I was double-crossed," he asserts. How? Why I told him a lot of things off-the-record, which I didn't intend to be published."

Now that's a bright young man for you.

Can anyone imagine a newspaperman traveling 800 miles and staying up all night just to listen to something "off-the-record?"

The Rev.-Prof. King was double-crossed, all right. But it was not by the press.

IT'S SPRING, but not in Virginia. With the "massive resistance" boys on the loose, it is dog day time in the Old Dominion.

In Richmond, the Times-Dispatch screams thusly:

"To permit the assignment of white and colored pupils to the same classroom, as a State policy, is to surrender altogether to the Supreme Court of the United States. We are not yet ready to surrender."

In Arlington, 22 colored and white parents who filed a school desegregation suit are being "investigated."

The NAACP is being "probed."

In Alexandria, political candidates seeking the Democratic nomination are trying to outdo each other in calling the Supreme Court names.

Their strategy is to get elected now on the promise that the court probably will reverse itself 90 years from now.

In Congress the hirelings of the Byrd machine are howling states rights and rebellion.

No, it is not spring in Virginia. Madness is on the loose.

THERE'S A new drink on the market. It has the sneaky characteristics of vodka.

Tasteless and odorless, it foams like beer, has four to six per cent alcohol and comes in collins, cola and punch flavors.

It's called Sassy. Advertising features sassy girls in low-cut gowns.

BUT THERE hardly appears to be need for alarm. Just another sign of the times—Vaguely related, perhaps, with what Dr. Goodrich C. Schauffler, gynecologist, says of that well known tree which got Adam and Eve ousted from the garden.

"Our young girls today, at the age of first perception, are confronted with the whole tree instead of the tips of the roots.

"Our children climb the tree . . . eagerly, but they cannot distinguish the rotten branches. They fall and are bruised."

TWO DAYS less than four months after it happened, the charges filed against Dr. Margaret Just Butcher, former Howard University faculty member, were dropped.

Dr. John D. Schultz, a psychiatrist, told Assistant U.S. Attorney Henry Fitzgerald, Dr. Butcher was under serious mental strain when she was arrested at the National Airport.

We repeat now what was said four months ago. The charges against Dr. Butcher never should have been made.

Sometime Tuesday night, offices at the National Democratic Committee, 1001 Connecticut Ave., were ransacked.

Desks were searched, papers taken from files and scattered about the rooms and $63 in petty cash missing.

Paul Butler, national chairman, jokingly had this to say about the thieves: "They were looking for the deficit, but they didn't find it. I had it locked in the safe."

THE SEMI-ANNUAL U.S. Foreign Service Officer examinations will be given on June 24 at more than 65 centers throughout the country.

To be eligible to take the examination, candidates must be at least 20 years of age and under 31, and an American citizen of at least nine years' standing.

For application forms, write the board of examiners for the Foreign Service, Department of State, Washington 25, D.C. Closing date for filing application is May 1.

The following letter, written by Father E. DeMuelder, a Catholic priest, appeared recently in the Central African Post:

"Kariba to Lusaka by Central African Airways is not an unpleasant trip—at least if you belong to the 'civilized' section of society.

"In the spacious Central African Airways aircraft of the January 16 trip to Lusaka there were only 10 passengers, of which three were 'colorful' and seven were 'colorless.'

"The whites, securely grouped together in the comfortable back seats of the plane, were graciously offered tea, biscuits, and the usual sweets at the time of starting and landing.

"The 'colorful,' well dressed, courteous, and speaking English quite well, were duly segregated in the front seats and were offered neither tea nor biscuits, nor sweets.

"I felt ashamed of my skin and of our 'civilized' standards."

Prof. King To Keep His Job At Alcorn, Chairman Says

Commercial Appeal Tues. 3-12-57 p. 1

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal, Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 11.—An Alcorn A. and M. College professor whose anti-NAACP newspaper articles touched off a student revolt at the Negro school has not been fired.

That statement was made late Monday by chairman Harry Carpenter of the Board of Trustees of State Institutions of Higher Learning after a two-hour conference here with Prof. Clennon King.

Chairman Carpenter said the history professor, who is also pastor of Wesley Chapel Negro Methodist Church at Hazlehurst, "can return to the campus any time he wants to."

"Prof. King has not been fired and is subject to call for duties the same as other professors following the revolt," Chairman Carpenter said.

No Immediate Return

However, Prof. King told newsmen after the conference that he does not plan to return immediately. He said he understands that members of his world history class are not among students who returned to classes Monday. Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the board, sat in on the conference.

It was members of Prof. King's classes who sparked the boycott which led to the student body revolt.

Chairman Carpenter said some other professors have no classes to meet following the student walkout last week end, and that Prof. J. D. Boyd, elected president to succeed Dr. J. R. Otis, is now in the process of reorganizing the school as well as classes.

He said since some of the students will not return to the college in Southwest Mississippi near Natchez, that "some faculty reassignments are contemplated."

Given Full Adthority

President Boyd was on the campus during the morning and conferred with chairman Carpenter and Dr. Jobe. He was given full authority to determine which of the bolting students could be readmitted on "terms of the college and not their own."

President Boyd said cases of the 469 students who left the campus last week end in "defiance" of a board order to return to classes and then present their grievances against Prof. King will be considered on an "individual" basis.

Students readmitted will be required to agree to abide by the orders of the college board, as well as not to strike. Those agreeing to the board's terms will be readmitted on "probation." It will be left with the board as to when the probation will be lifted.

Some of the students who walked off the campus were back Monday seeking return of their withdrawal slips. However, they were advised that each will have to see President Boyd and submit to the terms laid down by the college board.

Several of the students who boycotted the school and returned Monday for readmission said their protests were not against Prof. King's right to express his views but their publication which they said lent color to their approval by "all the students." They also complained of use of their pictures in illustrating the articles.

Still on the campus Monday was Dr. Otis, who was fired Saturday by the college board in rescinding an earlier order accepting his earlier tendered resignation as of March 31. The board said the administration of the college had "collapsed" in failing to handle the situation. It also accused Dr. Otis with "acquiescence" in the student revolt.

The board also pointed to asserted inability of other faculty members to gain student consent to return to classes as a condition to the board hearing their grievances.

75 Didn't Participate

About 75 of the 561 enrolled students did not participate in last week's strike. They were in classes Saturday as well as again Monday.

Several of those who boycotted the college likewise met classes Monday pending President Boyd's action on their readmission requests.

President Boyd said Monday he had not fired Professor King or any other faculty member. He said the reduction in enrollmenl as a result of the strike may result later in reduction in the faculty.

Last Saturday before the board advanced Prof. Boyd's appointment to an "immediate" status rather than as of March 31, he told newsmen sitting in the outer office he felt that Prof. King has "ruined his effectiveness" at the college by injecting it into the racial controversy.

Parents Visit Campus

Monday he said he has not had the opportunity to look into the status of any faculty member because "I am too busy trying to reorganize the college and get it back in full operation."

Parents of some of the students were on the campus Monday to intercede for their children. Students stood around the campus in small groups waiting action on their readmission requests.

Others were arriving during the day by car to seek readmission.

Prof. King To Rejoin Alcorn A&M Faculty

ALCORN, Miss., March 29 (U.P.)—Clennon King, the history professor whose newspaper articles touched off a student walkout at Alcorn A&M College, is scheduled to rejoin the Negro school's faculty in the near future.

Dr. J. D. Boyd, the president of the small Negro college, said today King, who was placed "on call" following the revolt, would return to his post soon.

About 500 students walked out in protest of King's series of articles urging moderation on segregation issues and held by Montgomery's (Rev.) Martin Luther King. And the students, well, we fear they have become worked up over something that should receive second billing, if due any place at all in school, and apparently have forsaken the main purpose of attending college—to soak up some book learning. Students who pursue such roles and demonstrate their emotions in a rock-and-roll method are poor excuses for future leaders of any race.

St. Louis and New York and at the council's annual meeting in Greenville, April 26. The Rev. Theodore Trammell, the council president, said it was a "moral wrong" to single out the student council members for expulsion.

Negro Student Strike Is Reported Broken

Post-Times Herald Washington, D.C.

JACKSON, Miss., March 9 (AP) Dr. J. R. Otis, president of strike-bound Alcorn A&M (Negro) College, said students were returning to classes today, the first break in the week-long student demonstration against a professor's writings.

Otis made the statement as he arrived at the emergency meeting of the all-white college board, called after reports indicated all 585 students at the 86-year-old co-educational school walked out yesterday.

The president said he was informed about 95 students were returning to class.

The students, announcing the "death" of the old land grant school, had left the campus when they failed to get the resignation of Prof. Clennon King. They accused King of getting the college into a controversial situation by writing a series of newspaper articles on segregation and said he used pictures of students to illustrate the articles without their permission.

Missing The Point

The Florala News

Students at Alcorn A&M (an all-Negro state-supported college in Mississippi) recently staged a boycott because they failed to get the resignation of the Prof. Clennon King. The students accused the professor of getting the college into a controversial situation by writing a series of articles criticizing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

We have not read all of the professor's articles but we are inclined to agree with at least most of his statements we have noted. For one thing we admire him for his courage to express his thoughts regardless of the possibility of losing his job. We have found, too, that he is by no means alone among his race who are becoming "sick at the stomach" with the practices of the NAACP.

At least it can be said that the Mississippi Professor King has a different view of the segregation issue than that questioning the value of the NAACP. Boyd said only four of the students had been denied re-admittance to the college.

Boyd said the students still do not like King but "will tolerate him."

The new president, who succeeded J. R. Otis who was fired after the week-long boycott by students, said the strike led to a "better understanding of Alcorn and its problems.

"There's been a widespread interest of both white and colored in the college," he said.

Boyd blamed "certain faculty members" for the revolt with their claims that Alcorn was sub-standard. It was climaxed with King's articles.

Four of the expelled students are on a tour of Northern cities to explain their stand in the boycott.

The Regional Council of Negro Leadership announced today in Clarksdale the students will speak in Chicago, Detroit

SAYS STUDENTS WRONG?

Hopkinsville, Ky. — Alcorn A. and M. College at Jackson, Miss. [illegible] to be an object lesson in how not to run a college in a free, enlightened society.

Baltimore, Md. Sun. 3-10-57 p. 4

First, a member of its faculty aired his views on a subject that turned out to be unpopular with the student body whereupon 80 per cent of them walked out in protest.

Then the Mississippi State College Board expelled all striking students and fired the president of the college.

We are of the opinion that even a college professor in Mississippi is entitled to his views even though such views are unpopular or erroneous.

The calculated risk of free speech should never be counterbalanced by direct action of dissenters, however unpopular or erroneous may be the views expressed.

It seems clear, therefore, that the college students sought the wrong forum in which to redress their grievance.

The proper course of action would have been to ask an equal opportunity and time to be heard in opposition to such views as were unacceptable.

If higher education means anything, it should rest upon the premise that there are two sides to any questions and that there should be sufficient tolerance and forbearance to hear all the facts involved in the issue raised.

Since available statistics point so clearly that Mississippi leads all the rest of the states in direct action or mob violence, it would seem, therefore, that the pattern of behavior of the Alcorn striking students is as understandable as it is unjustifiable.

Say Strike Aim At Alcorn Gained

CLARKSDALE, Miss. — (ANP) — A strong plea to the student body of Alcorn A& M college to return to classes and support the school wholeheartedly has been issued by members of the Student Council who have been denied readmission to the college following a strike on the campus.

John Riley, Clarksdale junior, and one of those ousted, stated that he held no ill will toward President J. B. Boyd, who informed him that members of the Board of Trustees of Higher Learning had told him (Boyd) not to readmit any of the students who conferred with the Board.

Among those who conferred with the board and were denied readmittance were:

WORDS OF PLEA

The plea issued by Riley and others who were denied re-admittance said in part:

Our cause was just and our aim accomplished — to remove Prof. Clemmon King from the campus of our 'Beloved Alcorn College'. This was the only issue involved.

"We will have the opportunity to complete our education due to the generosity and benevolence of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership.

"Remember — we all love Alcorn and no action by the president of the college nor the Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning can change our love for you and our school. Therefore, we ask you to please remain in school.

"You will be showing your respect and belief in us, if you will please adhere to this request."

FEW STUDENTS HELD INELIGIBLE AT ALCORN

'Four To Six' Are Denied College Re-admission

JACKSON, Miss., March 29.—(AP)—"Only four to six" of the 450 students who struck at Alcorn A&M (Negro) College in objection to a professor's newspaper writings have been denied readmission, the college board said Friday.

Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the board, said Alcorn President J. D. Boyd notified the board he has rejected readmission applications of "only four to six" students on the grounds they were incorrigible.

In addition, Dr. Jobe said, Prof. Clennon King, whose writings criticized the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and caused the student controversy, still is a member of the faculty but has been on leave since the strike early this month.

Dr. Jobe said the college board ordered all students expelled who declined to return to class but said they could be re-admitted with Boyd's approval.

Meanwhile, in Clarksdale, the Regional Council of Negro Leadership said four expelled students have begun a tour of Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis and New York to speak "on behalf of about 12 students who were not allowed to re-enter" the college.

The council did not identify any of the students.

Negro Prof's Blast Starts Exodus

World-Telegram & Sun New York

By JOHN HERBERS,
United Press Staff Writer.

ALCORN, Miss., March 8.—The 570-member student body of an all-Negro college here turned down a professor's plea today and began an exodus from the campus that threatened to close the school.

Clennon King, a history professor at Alcorn A. and M. College, tried for more than an hour to persuade them to call off a campuswide boycott in protest against his critical views of his own race.

Mr. King had criticized the NAACP in newspaper articles which the students said reflected White Citizens Council viewpoints on segregation. Students began boycotting classes two days ago and voted last night to quit school.

In the school auditorium, Mr. King told the students he was ready to resign and urged them to return to classes. The entire student body had packed up during the night and some were seen leaving the campus, bags in hand, shortly after the 36-year-old professor's appearance.

The students had voted unanimously last night to withdraw from school in the face of an ultimatum from the state college board that Alcorn would be closed if they did not end their strike.

Mr. King's articles have appeared in the Jackson, Miss., State Times.

That Professor At Alcorn

The published remarks and writings of the professor at Alcorn College were of little importance. The action of the students who demanded his resignation was of tremendous significance.

One of the shortest ways to fame and wide publicity in the South today is to attack the NAACP. White people who engage in this practice get comfortable returns for their efforts, but colored people who do so are deluged with compliments and exhortations to say more.

In such an atmosphere almost any pigmy feels like a giant. The only difference between the Alcorn professor and a host of other similar operators is that he managed to break into the national area of news.

MOST OF the other chaps are confined to regional newspapers, radio networks and local television shows. Sometimes they are lovingly inserted into the fine print of the Congressional record by elected officials who suffer from delusions.

It will be noted that I have not mentioned the name of the professor. I have not done so because as I write this I remember a story about a Greek who burned down the temple of Diana when Alexander the Great was born.

The gentleman who applied the torch was seized by a crowd. When asked to explain his actions, he said he did so because he wanted his name to go down in history. The wise men ordered him set free but told him that no recorded history would carry his name.

ONE STUDENT at Alcorn put his finger on what has been wrong in some of the colleges that educate colored youth. He was quoted as saying sorrowfully, "two years of football down the drain."

All too many of the institutions of higher learning have failed to give the young people a picture of life as it is. They have gotten the college spirit, they can sing the alma mater and they know how to stage good senior proms. This is not enough.

Of course the professor had a right to express himself, but what some people overlook is that the students also had a right to express themselves. There was no violence that I know of and their refusal to attend classes was a kind of free speech that some of their parents would do well to exercise themselves.

King Branded As 'Agitator' By Superior

Post Herald Birmingham, Ala.

ALCORN, April 9 (U.P.)—President J. D. Boyd of Alcorn A&M College today branded controversial History Prof. Clennon King as a "publicity seeker who has done nothing but agitate."

Boyd refused to reveal whether the Negro professor has returned to his classes as scheduled Monday but sources said King did not show up on the campus of the Negro school here.

Wed. 4-10-57

Boyd said "there is simply no announcement to make regarding" King, who was blamed for a student revolt last month by attacking the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in a series of newspaper articles.

A report on yesterday's classes was made to Dr. Boyd who said he would probably have no announcement until 8 a.m. Wednesday.

Boyd said he had no statement to make today because he refused to "be a party to anything that gives him (King) publicity that is wholly unjustified."

He said the matter had been projected "far out of proportion" and commented that Professor King "has the right to say anything he pleases but he simply should not take advantage of his position to say it."

King Says Life Threatened, Will Not Return To Alcorn

Commercial Appeal Tues. 4-9-57 Memphis, Tenn.

By The Associated Press

ALCORN, Miss., April 8.—Prof. Clennon King declined to return to teach Alcorn A&M classes Monday because he said his life had been threatened and the school president had demanded "humiliating" conditions.

The history professor, whose newspaper articles criticizing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People set off a student boycott which almost closed the state-supported Negro school earlier this year, had been told to return to duty Monday.

He has been on temporary leave to recover from the strain of the student strike.

In a letter to executive secretary E. R. Jobe of the State College Board, King asserted that A&M President J. D. Boyd had told him he "should not depend upon work at Alcorn after May 31."

Denial Is Made

Dr. Jobe denied that Boyd "or anyone else in authority" had told King his services would not be needed after May 31. The college board secretary confirmed that King had turned over to him a letter threatening "death or violence" if King returns to the campus.

Dr. Jobe said the anonymous letter was turned over to the Highway Patrol and that King, if and when he returns, "will have whatever protection the state can provide."

Asked if the professor's failure to return Monday affects his status as a faculty member, Dr. Jobe said the asserted threats are an "extenuating actor."

King said in his letter to Dr. Jobe:

"My expectant wife and our five children need me at work very badly, but I cannot see a way to return April 8 under such humiliating conditions" as the May 31 termination and death threat he had described.

"If I should go back to Alcorn under the present degrading circumstances, I will betray every Negro who would like to follow in my footsteps. The South correctly realizes the NAACP is its greatest single enemy. I have given that enemy one of the mightiest blows it has ever received, because it is the only strong blow which has come from within."

Comment Declined

Boyd declined to comment on King's charges except to confirm that the Alabama-born professor had been instructed to return to his classes Monday. Boyd did say "everything is normal" at the school. Enrollment now totals 536, and all but "nine or 12" of the students who left the school are back in classes. Most of the students had signed "final withdrawal" slips at the height of the student strike but almost all were allowed to retract them.

King claimed that "before I wrote the articles critical of NAACP" he had promises of summer session work at Alcorn and during the 1957-58 term. Dr. Jobe denied this, saying King had the usual teacher's contract, expiring July 1 this year.

Bias Revolt 'Kills' College

Philadelphia Inquirer

ALCORN, Miss., March 8 (UP).—The death of an all-Negro college here was proclaimed today by the 570-member student body because a faculty member wrote critically of desegregation efforts.

A mass exodus from Alcorn A. and M. College was in full swing. Special buses arrived on the campus to take the students to their homes. Students had voted to withdraw after the State college board warned that the small, State-supported school would be closed today unless they halted a two-day boycott of classes.

Sat 3-9-57

ON VERGE OF TEARS

The object of the students' wrath, history Prof. Clennon King, 36, offered to resign. He made an hour long appeal today in the college auditorium. The Georgia-born educator was on the verge of tears at times as he tried to stem the revolt.

But after his plea, Ernest McEwin, student body president, summed up student reaction with the statement:

"Alcorn College died officially at 12:55 P. M. today."

CALLED 'UNCLE TOM'

King aroused the ire of the students, who called him an "Uncle Tom," by writing a series of articles for the Jackson, Miss., State-Times. In them he was critical of the role played by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its drive to end segregation. The students also accused King of backing the White Citizens Council.

King, a Negro, received part of his education in Ohio and has traveled extensively in the United States and Europe.

King conferred in Jackson with Gov. J. P. Coleman before returning here to address the students.

He attached conditions to his offer to resign.

"If you really want me to go, this is how I'll know it—that you wait until all of these articles have been published," he said. "The last one will be out Monday."

The professor said he would see to it that each student received a copy of the articles.

RAPS MOB PSYCHOLOGY

"You take those eight articles, read and study them. Then, afterwards, you'll meet and say what you don't like about them," he said.

"Then you put me out and let your Student Council give you a ballot . . . so you can be cool headed, not ruled by mob psychology," he said. "When the ballots are counted, if you tell me to go, I'll hand my resignation to Mr. Carpenter (college board president) and say the students have done well. I will leave not with tears but with a happy heart."

King told the students that he objected to being called an "Uncle Tom," a term which he said denotes a "low, inconsistent, sneaking, double-talking, head-scratching character that neither white nor Negro can trust."

Sat 3-9-57

King also volunteered to ask the State-Times to get someone from the NAACP to present its side of the segregation issue. King's articles indicated that the organization was hurting the cause of the Negro in the South.

King's fifth article appeared in the State-Times today. In it King said a proposal to permit American Negroes to settle in Africa with government help would "cure a host of our racial ills" even if Negroes did not accept the opportunity.

75 Students End Revolt at Negro College

World-Telegram and Sun p. 3

By the Associated Press.

ALCORN, Miss., March 9.—The first break in the student boycott at Alcorn A&M brightened hopes the State College Board would find a way today to keep the Negro college alive.

Sat 3-9-57

Possibly as many as 75 of the students, among them education seniors just back from practice teaching, were reported seeking to return to classes. They also included some who signed "final withdrawal" statements yesterday.

The break in the students' solid front apparently freed the college board of its announced intention to lock up all campus buildings today if students were not back in classes. The board's statement did not say all students must return.

The all-white board called this morning's emergency session in the state capital at Jackson, on the basis of reports all of the estimated 585 students of the 86-year-old coeducational school walked out yesterday.

The students, announcing the "death" of the old land grant school for Negroes, left the campus when they failed yesterday to get the resignation of Prof. Clennon King. They accused Mr. King of getting the college into a controversial situation by writing a series of newspaper articles on segregation and said he used pictures of students to illustrate the articles without their permission.

The first break in the boycott came when 15 to 20 students approached Prof. A. D. Fobbs, head of the agrucultural education department. Mr. Fobbs said they "explained they didn't know exactly what they had done," and wanted to know what they should do to get back in classes.

Mr. Fobbs said he understood 50 to 75 students in the teacher education division, including the newly returned practice teachers, intended to continue classes.

Negro College Shut Down; Student Boycott Blamed

Daily Tribune Chicago, Ill.

Sat. 3-9-57

Jackson, Miss., March 8 [Special]—An all-Negro college was ordered closed today because of a student boycott over a professor's criticism of some of the tactics used in pro-Negro movements.

The school is the Alcorn Agricultural and Mechanical college, the oldest Negro land grant college in America. It is co-educational, has 585 students, and is located at Alcorn, 75 miles southwest of here.

The closing order came from Dr. E. R. Jobe, executive secretary of the state college control board, known as the board of trustees of state institutions of higher learning.

Board Mandate Ignored

Referring to the boycott of classes. which mounted steadily thruout the week, Dr. Jobe said the students had disobeyed the board's mandate to return to classes as a condition preceding consideration of their grievances.

Consequently, he said, "the school is closed." He said he had notified operators of the school cafeteria to close that section of the school after today's lunch. The board of trustees will meet tomorrow to discuss the matter.

The students' ire was directed at Prof. Clennon King, a history instructor, whose resignation they demanded because of a series of articles he wrote for a Jackson newspaper which published them recently.

N. A. A. C. Criticized

The students contended the articles had placed the 74 year old school in a controversial position. The articles were critical of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Rep. Powell [D., N. Y.], Negro congressman, and other Negroes. King accused Negroes of "acting like white people" and implied that some of their tactics had not benefited their race.

Students began their protest by boycotting King's classes Monday and Tuesday, and since have boycotted the entire school. Told their action would result in closing of the college, most of the students began packing their belongings and making arrangements to go home.

Refuse to Take Ballot

The students were told by college officials they were recommending that King be discharged, that "you have won your only grievance—that King leave the school," and that King would appear at a mass meeting today and submit his resignation. Instead, King appeared at the meeting and pleaded with the students not to be influenced by mass psychology and asked them to take a ballot. They refused and maintained their boycott.

In the midst of the furor, it was disclosed that Dr. J. R. Otis, president of the college had resigned a month ago. College board officials declined to comment on reports he had been dismissed or had resigned under fire. However, minutes of the board's meeting last month disclosed his resignation had been accepted and a new president appointed to head the college, beginning April 1.

The new college president, Prof. J. D. Boyd, plans to accept applications for admission tomorrow.

The all-white state college board held an emergency meeting at Jackson yesterday and decided the status of the striking students and Dr. J. R. Otis, president when the week-long student boycott began.

Dr. Otis was fired and students who defied the board's directive last week to return to class were ordered expelled. Prof. Boyd was given authority to decide which students fall into the category.

Blame Articles

The board's announcement did not mention Prof. Clennon King, the thirty - six - year - old Negro professor whose recent newspaper articles criticizing the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were blamed by students for the controversy that led to the boycott. Prof. King's articles charged the N. A. A. C . P. had done nothing locally for Southern Negroes

Prof. King, at Hazelhurst, said he would not be at Alcorn tomorrow. He said Prof. Boyd had fired him effective tomorrow morning. Prof King, a native of Albany, Ga., said he didn't even plan to return to pick up his household belongings. He said he would send someone for them.

Deny Firing King

Both Prof. Boyd and H. G. Carpenter, president of the state college board, denied Prof. King had been fired.

"I have not hired or fired any teacher, nor have I dismissed or accepted any students," Prof. Boyd said. "I'm not in a position to hire or fire until I've officially assumed the responsibility.

"I am the president of Utica Institute. I am not officially the president of Alcorn A. & M. I did accept the request from the college board to go to Alcorn A. & M. and restore order."

He said he had not been relieved of his duties at Utica.

HAZLEHURST, Miss., May 30 (AP) —Prof. Clennon King said today he is "happy and pleased" at the opportunity to teach next year at Alcorn A&M, the all-Negro college where students boycotted classes in protest against his pro-segregation newspaper articles.

"But I am very hopeful that I will also have work at the college this summer," the history professor said at the parsonage of Wesley Chapel AME Church, where he is minister.

The state college board disclosed yesterday that it has granted a new one-year contract to King after Dr. J. D. Boyd, Alcorn president, submitted his name along with other faculty members for the 1957-58 academic year.

"I have a family to support, and I have a house full of furniture at Alcorn," Prof. King explained. "There was an understanding, before I came to Alcorn, that I would have summer work in order to support my family. I am very hopeful that understanding will be met."

At Alcorn, Dr. Boyd had expressed belief that King will not teach next year. He did not give a basis for his opinion.

THE UNTOLD STORY BEHIND:

That Alcorn Explosion

JACKSON, Miss. — Suddenly and without warning, the automobile swerved off the road, Highway 51, and came to a grinding stop.

The driver folded both arms across the top of the steering wheel and wearily rested his head upon them. "I got to think this thing out," he said. "I got to think it out."

The time was 3 a.m. the Sunday after Alcorn A. and M. College students walked out en masse.

* * *

THE PLACE was about halfway between Hazelhurst and Jackson. The driver of the automobile was Professor Clennon King, history teacher at Alcorn who had triggered the explosion which climaxed in the walkout.

It was pitch dark. He said: "You're not looking at a rat who is not crying because the trap sprung shut. You're . . ." His words trailed off into the black nothingness of the night.

King gets 'rest'

ALCORN, Miss. — Prof. Clennon King, whose prosegregation newspaper articles closed a college, will be given an opportunity "to rest," newly inducted Alcorn College President J. D. Boyd announced Saturday.

Alcorn student body had demanded his resignation, but white supporters had backed King. The 'rest' solution saves face for everybody.

I thought he was not going to complete the sentence.

Then he continued: "You're looking at a rat who didn't expect the trap to shut so soon."

AT 11:55 A.M. Friday, March the trap slammed shut at Alcorn College, Mississippi's land-grant college for colored, located approximately 85 miles southwest of Jackson.

The college president was fired and a new one hired to replace him. All but about 50 of the institution's 570 students packed their trunks and went home.

The chief casualty of the sprung trap was the president and the education philosophy for which he stands.

Dr. J. R. Otis alluded to this Monday, as he was about to leave the campus.

Looking out upon the almost deserted campus, he said: "I have no regrets. If education is to mean anything, it must teach boys and girls to become men and women."

REFERRING TO A 19[illegible] meeting of Mississippi educators with the late Hugh White then Governor of the state, Dr. Otis added: "I told the Governor in 1954, shortly after the U.S. Supreme Court's school ruling, that I would never sell my people down the river."

Boiled down, this means the real issue behind the trouble at Alcorn was whether or not state-supported schools, particularly the institutions of higher learning and their faculties are to be forced to support racial segregation.

The fact that Professor King criticized the NAACP is only incidental to the basic issue.

This was admitted by King himself.

MY FIRST contact with the history teacher was at the Jackson Municipal Airport, thanks to a tip from Dick Morphew, news division, WLBT-TV.

King came to the airport about 1 a.m. Sunday. He told Morphew he was catching a plane to Nashville to talk with a reporter there.

p. 2

After Morphew left, King told me he was going to New York City to call a press conference.

Baltimore Md

"I got to get the whole sordid story before the nation," he said. "I must have a national audience for it to stand up. Once the true story is out, there's no telling what will happen to me. Mississippi is a dirty state," he declared.

Sat. 3-23-57

HE SAID if I would go to his home in Hazelhurst, and get certain papers for him, he would give me the entire story.

He gave me two notes. The first was to a "Dear Sister Henry."

It read: "Please give this gentleman the key to the parsonage and let him get that beer box of papers out of the living room." He signed the note: "Your brother, Rev. Clennon King."

The second message was addressed to a "Dear Brother Ball." It read:

"Will you please drive to Jackson right away and get my car? Ann (his wife) will pay you for all your trouble. The car is at the airport. If you would drive her and the kids to her home you could take a plane back and she could pay you. If you cannot do this keep her with you until (sic) you year from me."

* * *

AS I STARTED for his automobile, he said: "Wait. I think it's best that I go with you."

En route to Hazelhurst, about 35 miles south of Jackson on Highway 51, he told me the following:

Prior to coming to Alcorn, he had offers to go to Southern University in Texas and Louisiana Normal at Grambling, La.

He decided on Alcorn because he would net about $400 more per year and living expenses were less.

Shortly after he arrived at Alcorn, he learned that the president, Dr. Otis, was under considerable pressure from "the authorities" to write articles favoring racial segregation in schools.

After becoming aware of the pressures being exerted upon the school, he decided that it would be better if Dr. Otis gave in and "issued the statements."

Indirectly he sent word to Dr. Otis that he (Otis) should do this. The college president, King said, never so much as acknowledged his message.

It was then that he (King) decided to expouse such views himself. The decision became final after he read a book which some authorities wanted placed in the schools as a textbook.

CAREFULLY HE wrote a series of articles on the question of racial segregation. He discussed these articles with a few faculty members who thought as he did, as well as with certain other "influential figures off the campus."

I asked him to identify these influential figures. His response was: "I can't name them; but, if you want to get anywhere in Mississippi, you have to deal with them."

His first article, he said, were letters to the editor—sent to the Commercial Appeal (Memphis, Tenn.) and other out-of-state publications circulated in Mississippi.

He said he realized it would be dangerous to express himself through papers published in Mississippi. "The atmosphere was not right."

* * *

AT FIRST he did not identify himself as a teacher at Alcorn, he said. He would sign his name merely as "C. King" of either Hazelhurst or Lorman, Miss.

Later he sent his major articles to a number of national magazines. He was told, he said, they were not "national in flavor."

The first of his letters to the editor which identified him as a teacher at Alcorn was published in the States Times, the Jackson newspaper which eventually ran the controversial series.

King denies that when he submitted the articles to the State Times his purpose was for them to be published.

* * *

HE MERELY asked Robert Webb, associate editor, to look them over and tell him what he thought of the articles, he said.

"Right away he called me on the telephone and told me he would like to run the articles. After thinking it over, I told him 'All right, go ahead.'"

By this time we had reached Hazelhurst. The highway runs through the center of town. In order to reach his home, it is necessary to pass through the business section.

At the edge of town, he turned off on a back street. His explanation was he didn't want the police officer on duty to see him. He did not explain why he wanted to dodge the policeman.

* * *

PROFESSOR KING resides in a white frame house across the street from the church he pastors, Wesley Chapel Methodist.

The house was dark. His family away. He said there had been threats, because of the articles, and a friend had warned his wife to get the children off the streets.

The house was locked. I followed the Rev. Mr. King to the rear, feeling my way in the blackness. He went up the steps of the back porch, forced open a rear window and disappeared in the darkness.

Standing there in the darkness, gripping the handle of my flashgun, I asked myself why he had dodged the cop. When he called to me to come on into the darkened house, I declined.

He told me to go to "Sister Henry's" and get the key. I did. When I returned, he had turned on a light in the living room. I unlocked the front door and entered.

THE LIVING room is about 12 by 14 feet. On one side of the room is a well-worn sofa, a coffee table in the center and gas furnace on the other side. There were two chairs and one or two other items of furniture, and on the front wall a large picture of Christ and the Rock of Ages.

King lit the gas furnace and I sat on the sofa, facing him across the room. He went to the front of the room, directly beneath the picture and got the cardboard box of papers he had mentioned earlier. The papers were filed alphabetically.

First he took out carbon copies of the series of articles which then were appearing in the State Times.

"These are what the trouble is all about," he said.

* * *

THERE WERE eight articles in the series. At that time seven had been published.

In introducing the series, the newspaper stated:

We (the State Times) are publishing the King series to give what we think is a sane, sober view of the segregation issue from a southern colored intellectual.

". . . We feel they will add materially to thoughtful discussion of the great social issue of the day."

The first article appeared Sunday, March 3, under the caption "NAACP Claimed Closing Doors of Opportunity To Negroes."

The tag-line on this article and subsequent ones was "Mississippi Negro Speaks."

THE OPENING sentence of the initial article was: "Perhaps the NAACP is the National Association for the Agitation of Colored People after all."

In it, King contends the NAACP always has been and is inadequate to reflect the thinking of colored people anywhere.

He is critical of the U.S. Supreme Court's May 17, 1954, school ruling. He refers to the Justices as the "nine white fathers."

He says the NAACP, until about three years ago, was predominantly dependent upon labor unions, Socialists, certain Quakers, B'nai B'rith Anti-defamation League, the Civil Liberties Union, disguised Communists, etc."

The overall tenor of the article was that maybe colored people everywhere would be better off without the NAACP. Colored people of the South, if they wish to get along with whites, simply cannot afford to have anything to do with the NAACP.

* * *

THE REMAINING articles had to do with subjects ranging from Congressman Adam Clayton Powell to how misunderstood the South is.

Representative Powell, whom he labels a dupe' to northern trickery, is doing the race a disservice by insisting that the Federal aid to schools bill be amended to prevent federal funds going to school districts which refuse to integrate, the college professor says.

He accuses Powell of following a double standard—calling for integration in the South while he pastors an all-colored church in all-colored Harlem.

This "actually makes him a dupe to Northern trickery."

He asks: "Is going to school with a white boy as important as the feeling of belonging? Is sitting beside a white person as important as sitting?"

He suggests there is nothing disgraceful about being an "Uncle Tom," but that the real Tom characters today are those who try to ape white folks by moving into "white neighborhoods," and wanting to send their children to "white schools."

He attempts to justify "white supremacy."

"There is no need to try to escape the fact that the U.S. is primarily a white nation and puts the concern of white people first," he declares.

* * *

WHILE THERE is some extreme examples of racial segregation in the United States, particularly the South, colored people are much better off in the U.S. than anywhere in the world, King writes.

On the other hand, he lauds the late Marcus Garvey and his ill-fated back to Africa movement.

"If the door to African migration permanently and conveniently stood ajar, it would . . . cure a host of our racial ills," King declares.

He suggests that economic reprisals against colored people of the South is based more in the imagination of the "do-gooder" groups than in fact.

FURTHERMORE, EVEN if such reprisals occur, there may be justification for them.

"When a man gets so he doesn't want to be conciliatory he should stop being dependent."

Any organization which encourages the colored people to stay in the South, yet, encourages them to incur the displeasure of the people they are dependent upon for their economic existence isn't interested in the welfare of the colored people of the South, he argues.

Colored people have been leaderless since 1954. In fact, there has not been a real leader since the late Booker T. Washington sought to lift "The veil of ignorance from his people . . ."

Booker T. asked whites to be fair.

He asked colored people to be realistic.

"His was no white wife like Frederick Douglass' or Walter White's."

King declares that today the colored people are fundamentally balled up. "It may look like the colored people are behind the Rev. Martin Luther King and the NAACP, but actually we are a leaderless people."

* * *

THE FINAL article of the series is an apology for the South.

Why, in Mississippi, even known members of the NAACP remain as state employees. George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Patrick Henry and Andrew Jackson, all great Americans, were Southerners.

True the South bought slaves, but good ole New England Yankees went to Africa and captured them. The Northerners even started the Civil War because they were jealous of the South.

They were never "so against slavery—they stopped it for selfish reasons."

"Mississippi," the history professor says, "thinks as much of freedom as New York.

"In fact, what the Mississippian has to say about freedom rings, to me, with truer sincerity than the slick New Yorker warbling."

This, in essence, was what the history professor's articles were about. And King was right about one thing. They ignited a mess of trouble at Alcorn.

Ousted Miss. Students on Speech Tour

Courier, Pitts. Sat. Apr. 27 Pittsburgh, Pa.

CLARKSDALE, Miss. — Four ousted Alcorn A. and M. College students have left this city on a speaking tour which will take them to Chicago, Detroit, St. Louis and New York.

They will speak on behalf of 12 students who were not allowed to re-enter the college following a student strike over a college professor's anti-NAACP newspaper articles.

A mammoth mass meeting attended by about 1,000 was held in Clarksdale last week at which time students Arthur J. Fielder, Laurel and John M. Riley, Clarksdale, gave a revelation of why the students called the strike.

The meeting also launched the kick-off drive for $100,000 to assure the education of students expelled from Alcorn College and other programs of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership.

Miss. college board learns the hard way

ALCORN, Miss. — You can take a horse to water but you can't order him to drink.

Mississippi's state college board learned this last week.

When students at Alcorn A. and M. College refused to attend classes taught by history professor, Clennon King, the all-white board said, Go back to your classes or you will be expelled.'

Dr. J. R. Otis, president of Alcorn, read the board's statement to his students in the rickety chapel Friday morning at 11:55.

* * *

FIVE HUNDRED Alcorn boys and girls arose as one, sang the alma mater, marched out of chapel and went to their dormitories.

By Friday night the campus was deserted.

On Saturday 50 students in the practice teaching school who had been off campus returned.

The board announced President Otis was fired Saturday at noon and his successor would be Dr. John Dewey Boyd, for six years president of Utica Institute, a state agricultural secondary school, 40 miles from Jackson.

Finding itself with a campus and no students, the all-white board announced in Sunday's papers that Alcorn would be happy to readmit all students who had walked out under certain conditions.

ON MONDAY 122 students were enrolled. By Thursday this number had grown to 200.

One of these told the AFRO he wasn't certain he would remain.

By Thursday 376 students, 66 per cent of the enrollment, had apparently left the college for good.

* * *

DR. OTIS, who left the campus the Monday after he was fired, has returned to his home in Tuskegee, Ala.

Before leaving, he promised to tell the entire story of his ouster—"in my own words, in my own time."

The new college president, Dr. John D. Boyd of Utica Institute, says: "I'm trying to

Allen U. Board Returns Three Asked To Resign

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

COLUMBIA, S. C. — (ANP) — A unanimous vote of the Board of Control and the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees of Allen University in a special meeting here, August 6, crushed a demand by President Frank R. Veal of the institution made upon three professors two months ago that they resign by July 15 or be fired.

The vote coming at the end of a day long meeting devoted largely to a discussion of the financial report of the institution brought on a virtual love feast in which the trustees engaged in hardy back slapping and warm handshaking of the highly esteemed professors.

Allen U. to mix students

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — With the admission of five white students to classes and dormitories this month, Allen University — operated by the AME — becomes the first South Carolina college to undertake complete campus integration.

The college employed a Chinese and two white professors last term, and has added a Japanese with a doctorate in economics for the 1957-58 term.

Dr. Frank R. Veal, university president who announced the student admissions Monday, said all were Hungarian refugees, who were being accepted in cooperation with the Hungarian Student Program of the Institute of International Education of New York City.

Allen U. receives $10,000 grant

COLUMBIA, S.C. — A $10,000 grant to Allen University has been made by the Danforth Foundation, Dr. Frank R. Veal, Allen president, announced last Monday.

Notification of the allotment, which is to be used towards increasing faculty salaries by the college, was made in a telegram by Kenneth I. Brown, executive director of the Foundation, of Chicago.

Allen Enrollment Largest In College History

American Recorder Memphis, Tenn. P. 1 Thurs. 10-17-57

Allen's enrollment continued to surge above the 800 mark as many other students were turned away from the university due to crowded conditions and lack of facilities. Statistics from the Registrar's office reveal that this year's enrollment is the laregst in college history. 14e(1)

It represents 20 states, District of Columbia, all 46 of the South Carolina Counties and four foreign countries. The twenty states are Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, Maryland, Michigan, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Ohio, Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia. The foreign students represented Ghana, Nigeria, Bahama Islands, and Hungary.

S. C. Seeks Talk On Allen U. Suspension

Afro-American, Baltimore, Md. P. 9.

Sa 10-12-57

By JOHN H. McCAY

COLUMBIA, S.C.—As reactions to the state board of education's discrediting of Allen University continue to build up, persistent but unconfirmed reports are that state officials are seeking a conference, "off the record," presumably to right the suspension.

The AFRO learned from a reliable souce that "feelers" had been sent to Dr. Frank R. Veal of Allen "twice this week," reportedly by the state board of education, seeking a conference.

14e(1)

Dr. Veal, however, neither affirmed nor denied the report.

"The only thing I can tell you now," he said, "is that Allen University has not requested a conference and thus far none has been scheduled between the university and state officials."

* * *

PRESSED, Dr. Veal said: "I won't affirm or deny your information. I have refrained from public comment on what I consider an unusual action of the State Board. I do not wish to comment now."

Just the same, although there were tight lips around both the governor's office and the state board of education about the subject, prospects were that a secret meeting between representatives of the AME Church college and state education leaders, at the latter's invitation, is in the making.

For no officially given reason, the state board held a special meeting last Sept. 9 in Governor Timmerman's office and unanimously suspended Allen from the list of accredited colleges "until such time as the board deems it in the public interest" to approve teacher training graduates of Allen, about 80 percent of its enrollment.

* * *

THE SUSPENSION was to have been a secret but reporters discovered and reported it.

At a special press conference five days later, Governor Timmerman denied the action had been taken secretly.

However, he declined to state reason, referring reporters to minutes of the special meeting in board records after its Sept. 20 meeting. The official records list no reasons for the action against Allen.

However, two board members told reporters that the suspension came because Allen retained three professors, two of them white, whom Governor Timmerman had been known to wish dismissed for for several months.

The men, Drs. John G. Rideout, Edwin Hoffman and Forrest O. Wiggins, had been asked by President Veal to resign in June, "for reasons on the campus," the president told newsmen. The trio refused to resign.

Subsequently, Dr. Veal recommended their employment for the current school year to the university's board of control, reporting that each had been given a required one year advance notice of the termination of their contracts, a procedure required by university rules.

THE UNIDENTIFEID state board members said the suspension did not involve the 24-year-old Hungarian refugee student, Andre Toth, white, who arrived on the campus the night of Sept. 8 as the first to matriculate at the university.

The board, they said, considers the Toth incident something beyond the duty of the board, inasmuch as Allen is a private college.

Some AME church leaders, however, express differing opinions to those of the board members. They contend that the "secret" suspension was aimed at deintegrating both the faculty and student body at Allen.

One trustee said:

"If the board knows it has nothing to do with who studies at Allen, then it knows, too, it has nothing to do with who teaches at Allen."

Meanwhile, if Allen is greatly disturbed over the state action this fact isn't evident.

DR. VEAL, for example, told The AFRO that, if the suspension weren't lifted, in time to enable seniors to do practice teaching as customarily in public schools this school year, arrangements are being made to place them in private schools about the state and in public schools in nearby states.

"I have several letters from out of state schools inviting us to place Allen teacher trainees with them for an internship," Dr. Veal said.

Replying to a question as to whether or not the university's academic program may have failed in state requirements, leading to the suspension, Dr. Veal said:

"I DON'T think that is the reason. At the close of our last college year, the state board considered our work satisfactory. I have several letters and documents of recent date which verify this aspect of our operations.

"Allen, right now, is considerably improved in its program and staff over what it was in June. We've made certain changes in our study program and instructional staff, all under our own power and planning," he said.

He pointed to Dr. Sylvia P. Swinton as an example of improvement in the college's program.

Dr. Swinton, who was employed by the state department of education several years ago while holding an M.A. degree, was added to the Allen staff, as of September, as director of teacher training, with a Ph.D. degree in her field.

* * *

WHILE THERE was some inclination to talk things over, there also was rebellion among AME and Allen officials against contacts with state officials.

Fiery Dr. Robert W. Mance, financial secretary of the denomination and a member of the Allen trustee board, told the AFRO:

"We are not studying about that man (Timmerman). We are going right along with our program as though he doesn't exist."

Dr. Mance and other AME leaders said none of them would ask Timmerman's office or that of State Superintendent of Education Jesse T. Anderson for a conference.

Allen U. President Denies NAACP Ban

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. P.9

Sat. 8-17-57

BY JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Dr. Frank R. Veal, president of Allen University, with some support from Dr. James M. Hinton, president of the S.C. Conference of NAACP chapters, categorically denied a report this week that he "or anyone else" had banned the NAACP Youth Council (campus chapter) at the university.

"Any report or rumor that the NAACP chapter has been banned at Allen is categorically false and unfair," Dr. Veal told the AFRO.

He said that "NAACP Week," an advisor and schedules for affairs of the Allen chapter are already "listed in our 1957-58 calendars. Just two weeks ago, since I've been president, I opened our doors for a meeting of the Columbia (NAACP) chapter.

"OUR CAMPUS chapter, this last term, functioned widely. We had the largest membership of any college campus in the state. We expect to do equally as well next year," Dr. Veal said.

He said the only rankle between the administration and the campus branch had occured the past term over an occasional conflict between college regulations for student organizations and extra requests made by graduated Fred H. Moore, whom Mr. Veal said:

"I permitted to be elected and serve as president of the chapter when no other college in the state would admit him as a student."

Reached at his insurance office in Augusta, Ga. Dr. Hinton corroborated Dr. Veal's reference to the conflict with Mr. Moore.

"WHEN I heard about it (from an unnamed faculty member)," Dr. Hinton said, "I had Fred (Moore) to come to my home in Columbia and straightened him out on our regulations and policies governing campus chapters."

He explained that the "regulations" required that a campus chapter conform, at all times, to regulations governing other student organizations.

He and Dr. Veal said, separately, that apparently throug misinterpretation of these regulations, Mr. Moore had at times made requests for the chapter which were unreasonable and a "nuisance" classification.

MR. HINTON said that Mrs. Modjeska M. Simkins, secretary of the state organization, had told him the campus branch would not be listed in the college's 1957 catalogue, which is now with printers.

However, he said, his concern was over the existence of the chapter and not over whether or not it was named in the college catalogue.

"We had an excellent chapter at Allen last year and I understand we will have the chapter next year," he said. "That is all we can ask and hope for. As to Dr. Frank Veal, he has given us excellent cooperation. I have no complaints to make against him. I like his spirit."

* * *

DR. VEAL said the chapter would not be listed in the new catalog to make uniform a general practice among the two other South Carolina colleges having campus organizations.

"Neither Benedict College no Claflin College lists their NAACP chapters," he said. "Our reason is the same as theirs."

A story published in some newspapers, and attributed to Mrs. Simkins, charged that Dr. Veal "has taken steps to disband the college chapter of the NAACP. He is said to have ordered all mention of the chapter deleted from the 1957 catalogue."

The release, knowledge of which Mr. Hinton disclaims, also charges:

"With the advent of the Rt. Rev. I. H. Bonner, observers see a definite change in the attitude of school officials. It lauded Bishop Frank M. Reid's attitude.

Dr. Veal said: "I think it unfair to bring Bishop Bonner into the matter. I wonder what else do they (NAACP officials) expect or want me to do?"

* * *

DR. HINTON, saying he had not authorized nor authored the release to newspapers, said that perhaps the item was issued by the state secretary.

Dr. Veal, who said Mrs. Simkins had sought information several nights before Tuesday's meeting of the board of control as to his position and charges against three professors at the college, told the AFRO:

"I told her I had absolutely no comments or remarks until after the trustees had acted."

He said he couldn't remember whether or not "I was certain that she asked about the campus chapter. If she did, I do recall that I governed myself on all matters under the position I stated to her — no comment.'"

Allen University

In apparent retaliation for defying its bias racial practices, the state of South Carolina has withdrawn its approval of Allen university in Columbia as a teacher training center. All the requests from university officials as to the basis for so drastic an action, have been met with silence. Accompanying the notice was a directive to the state's department of education stating that Allen's graduates may not be certified to teach in South Carolina's public schools.

Defender P.4

There is a widespread and apparently well founded assumption that a recent announcement by the university that some Hungarian students had been admitted at Allen, has precipitated the dis-accreditation order. Though they have not yet arrived on the campus, the Hungarians will come through a special arrangement with the Institute of International Education in New York.

Chicago Def.

Shortly after the announcement was made, the Attorney General for the state cried out, "it is against public policy" to integrate whites and Negroes in this state, then he added, "there is no law in South Carolina to reach Allen's acceptance of white students." The presence of four white professors on the school faculty has provided additional fuel to the fire of racial bigotry.

Sat. 9-21-57

The board's notice was ominously succinct. It said: "Approval of Allen university for teacher training is withheld until such time as the board may determine that it is in the public interest to grant approval."

Had this university been a state institution, it would have been closed down through the simple procedure of withdrawing its appropriations. Fortunately, this is a church-supported institution and one of the oldest in America. Founded in 1870 by the African Methodist church board, Allen university has survived many a storm and reached a position of wide usefulness. It came into being during the reconstruction era when Negro rights and immunities were given broad interpretations by the Supreme Court.

By a singular historical coincidence, on the day this university was founded, the 15th Amendment to the Constitution became effective by action of Congress. It is the Amendment which provides that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude. It is this constitutional guarantee that the recent civil rights bill seeks to protect, and against which Sen. Strom Thurmond (D) S.C., attempted a one-man's filibuster for which he was censured and ridiculed by his own Dixiecrat colleagues.

Allen university has an able president in the person of Dr. Frank R. Veal who has guided the destiny of the institution with consuming zeal and educational foresight. Instead of hampering the institution in the legitimate exercise of its academic functions, South Carolina should help it to attain its objective as a center of learning radiating its light through the fog of ignorance which envelops the state.

AME's irked by rule against Allen

Pittsburgh Courier P.15

WASHINGTON

AME Church officials, in Washington this week for the special session of the Bishops Council on the Bishop Nichols case, were stunned to learn of the crisis at one of the church colleges, Allen University.

Allen, located in Columbia, South Carolina, registered five Hungarian students at the opening of school Monday.

The Hungarian refugees of course, are white students, thus Allen, already under pressure because it has a mixed faculty, would have a mixed student body.

Sat. 9-21-57

THIS IRKED the South Carolina governor. In consequence a special session of the State Education Board was called and resolution unanimously approved declaring Allen graduates ineligible to receive state teaching certificates.

Inasmuch as graduates cannot be employed to teach in South Carolina without a teaching certificate from the State Board of Education, nor can they get clearance to teach elsewhere without such a certificate, the situation seriously paralyzed Allen's student body.

President Frank Veal and Bishop Isiah Bonner, chairman of the college's trustee board, left immediately after Tuesday's session for Columbia in an effort to try to adjust the matter.

Dr. Veal, who had been away from the college since Thursday, attending the Judicial Council meeting in Cleveland and the special Bishops' meeting here, said he had been "in touch with school officials by telephone," but declined to give out a statement until he was able to get on the scene.

The refugees, Dr. Veal said, were accepted in coöperation with the Hungarian Student Program of the Institute of International Education of New York City.

Bishop Bonner refused to discuss the case at all.

DR. ROBERT W. MANCE, financial treasurer of the AME Church, who is one of the leading trustee members of Allen, described the situation as "deplorable" and not understood able inasmuch as the United States State Department had requested schools and colleges to aid the Hungarians.

Dr. Mance is slated to go to Columbia this weekend to assist in any way he may with the restoral of accreditation to this college.

schools whenever a Federal Court orders integration. When the impending integration at Allen was first made known, a state official remarked that although there was no law to stop it, such a move was against public policy.

The action of the Education Board is expected to start Negroes (who had previously refrained from doing so) applying for admittance to state-supported white colleges.

Allen U. Loses Accreditation After Award

COLUMBIA, S. C.—After it was made public that Andre Toth, a Hungarian freedom fighter, had accepted an art scholarship to Allen University, the State Board of Education met secretly and notified Allen that its education courses would no longer be recognized toward public school teaching certificates.

Allen is a Methodist Church school and not subject to the state law which would close the state

Hungarian student won't leave Allen University

By JOHN H. McCRAY

COLUMBIA, S.C. — Andre Toth, 24 - year-old Hungarian student whose admission to Allen University has been the center of a two - week - old controversy, spurned the opportunity to withdraw from the university this week.

The student program of the Institute of International Education in N.Y.C. said that Toth (pronounced "Toat") had sent back a check the IIE had sent, advising him that, if he wished, he could return to New York for assignment at another institution.

At the same time, IIE said that several of four other Hungarian refugee students, who had been given the chance to enroll at Allen, had been placed in colored colleges in border states, having made their own selections.

Toth, IIE said, had accepted the Allen University invitation after briefing on customs and the race question.

* * *

THE DAY HE arrived on the campus, the State Board of Education, in a secret meeting, quickly suspended Allen from its list of accredited colleges. The action affects more than 80 per cent of the college's enrollment.

Two members of the board on Friday, following a regular meeting of the unit, told newsmen that the suspension action by the body was aimed at three professors at the institution.

Both of the members, who asked that their names be withheld, said that the professors in question all hold doctorates and that two of them are white. The two others have been cited by the House Un-American Activities Committee.

At a hurriedly called press conference last Saturday afternoon, Gov. Timmerman denied the board's meeting was secret, but hinted the reason for suspension might be released at the next meeting.

WHETHER OR not Toth, a former film factory worker who fled his native Budapest, knew of the controversy about his presence, or understood it, this much was true:

He is "supremely" happy at Allen, Dean A. D. Greene told the AFRO, and has already made many friends.

His constant companion and friend is Alexander DeVeaux, a journalism major who last summer was employed by Baltimore office of the AFRO.

DeVeaux is associate editor of the Allen Journal, student campus publication.

DEAN GREENE said faculty members had noted that the young refugee has already been taught numerous American slang expressions, typical of college life, and has adopted some of the campus style of dressing.

For example, Mr. Greene said "Toth now greets you with 'Hey, man. How're you doing, man?'", among other slangs.

One day during the week, the Dean said, Toth came to classes wearing strictly American apparel which, he said, friends had told him to wear, "So you won't be a square."

Several of Allen students have been taking turns lending the Hungarian trousers, shirts, etc. to give him the "not square" appearance on the campus.

Toth has already attended several campus affairs, parties, etc., and "all of the students and faculty members are crazy about him," Mr. Greene told the AFRO.

DESPITE HIS language handicap, Toth scored 117 points on the freshman entrance exam, the Dean's Office said. The norm for the examination is 85. Toth scored higher than most of the others.

Timmerman had told reporters that the State had not intended announcement of the action against Allen, which led to speculation that:

1. The suspension was intended primarily as a bit of state blackmailing the university into remaining non - integrated, which is beyond the reach of state regulations.

2. The action had not the sanction of the Attorney General's office, nor of other state agencies.

* * *

AT ST. MATTHEWS, State Senator L. Marion Gressette said that Allen had been discussed by the State Commission to Keep Public Schools segregated which he heads.

He added that the Commission's opinion was that state laws upholding segregation were not applicable to private colleges and schools.

Dr. R. W. Mance, financial secretary to the AME church, who had rushed to the campus from his Washington office after the suspension was announced, told The AFRO:

"We aren't studying about that man (referring to Timmerman). We are going along with our program just as we've always done."

Dean Greene said that the board of education had not notified the university of any short coming. In fact, he said, the college has been continuously lauded by the department for its program.

Abolishes Giving Bachelor Divinity Degree For Present

Globe Fri. 6-7-57

Late Drs. J. H. Garnett And J. M. Nabritt Honored; Elect Dr. I. H. Henderson Board Chairman And Dr. Victor T. Glass Acting President At Annual Trustee Meeting; Officials Also Tighten Requirements For B. Th. And B. Ed. Degrees

At the annual meeting last week of the board of trustees of the American Baptist Theological Seminary, well known religious educational institution located here, Dr. Victor T. Glass, white, was re-elected acting president.

At the same time, Dr. I. H. Henderson, now a pastor in Kansas City, Kan., was chosen chairman of the interracial board of trustees. The seminary is supported by the Southern Baptist Convention, white, and the National Baptist Convention, USA, Incorporated.

It also gets some financial support from churches affiliated with the Natioinal Baptist Convention of America, which is committed to maintaining a different group of religious schools, among which of the Virginia Theological Seminary and College, headed by Dr. M. C. Allen.

In addition to the two key elections the ABT trustees made a number of important changes in its program. Possibly the principal one was to discontinue offering the Bachelor of Divinity degree to any graduates. Pursuit of study leading to the B. D. Degree has heretofore attracted a number of students.

It was stated that the trustees were discontinuing the awarding of the B. D. Degree "until such time as faculty and equipment justify the degree being offered."

Other actions taken by the trustees included the following:

1. Made plans to improve and expand the curriclum of the undergraduate level of instruction leading to the bachelor of theology and bachelor of religious education degrees.

2. Began a study of the personnel with regard to rank, salary leave of absence and retirement.

3. Changed the name of the annual ministers and Missionaries conference to the Garnett-Nabritt Lectures, in honor of Dr. J. H. Garnett and Dr. J. H. Nabritt, former presidents of ABT. Dr. Garnett had served a period as president of Simmons University in Louisville, before becoming president of ABT Seminary.

Dr. Nabritt, one of the truly great Baptist ministers of the country served as president of the Seminary for eight years and while here established the Training School that is affiliated with the seminary. In referring to Dr. Nabritt, the daily papers correctly referred to him as the father of Mrs. Cecelia Nabrit Adkins. In her own right Mrs. Adkins is one of the city's brilliant scholars and eloquent lecturers. She is a graduate of Fisk University and is employed by the Sunday School Publishing Board in an important position.

Globe

But any reference to the late Dr. J. H. Nabritt could with propriety take into consideration not only Mrs. Adkins but the other Nabritt "boys and girls." For instance the following:

P. 4

Dr. S. Milton Nabritt, President of Texas Southern Unversity

Dr. J. M. Nabritt, Jr., brilliant lawyer and secretary of Howard University.

Globe 6-7-57

Dr. Henry C. Nabritt, who succeeded to the pastorate of First Baptist Church in Memphis, following the death of his father.

Mrs. Margaret Nabritt Curry, the first colored teacher chosen on the faculty of Spelman College in Atlanta, and still on its faculty.

Mrs. Gertrude Thomas, director of public relations, Riverside Children's Association, New York City.

Mrs. Ann Nabritt Young, on staff of the U. S. Post Office in Detroit.

Mrs. Lois Nabritt Clark on Library staff at Knoxville College.

And so when critics tell you that the children of preachers turn out to be "bad actors," the Nabrit "boys and girls" can furnish proof that "it ain't necessarily so." Their worth and work helped notably in making it plausible to honor their father at the annual meeting of the ABT Semiary trustees.

Dr. Henderson, new chairman of the trustee board is also the son of a minister. He was a very popular leader in Nashville several years ago when he was pastor of Pleasant Green Baptist Church.

Atlanta U. gets $140,000 bequest

ATLANTA—Atlanta University has received a bequest of $140,000 from the estate of Mrs. Gertrude Ware Bunce, daughter of Edmond Asa Ware, first president of Atlanta University, (1869-1885) according to President Rufus E. Clement.

The money will become part of the Ware Fund which was established in memory of the Ware family in 1886. Prior to this recent addition the fund contained over $71,000.

Mrs. Bunce was not only the daughter of the university's founder and first president and sister of Edward T. Ware, the third president, (1907-1922), but was also a teacher in the university.

Dr. Tillman named

ATLANTA—The appointment of Dr. [illegible] Tillman as dean of the graduate school of arts and sciences has been announced by President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University.

Dr. Tillman has been serving as acting dean since the resignation of Dr. S. M. Nabrit to accept the presidency of Texas Southern University two years ago.

Evaluation Clinic Held At Atlanta University

ATLANTA, Ga. — Seventy participants attended Georgia Evaluation Clinic of the Phelps-Stokes Fund Project for the improvement of teaching in the secondary schools. The two-day conference, held last week at Atlanta University, had the largest attendance of any of the four clinics in the states where the project is entering its third year, according to Dr. Aaron Brown, project director for the Phelps-Stokes Fund.

The meeting closed with a luncheon presided over by President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University. J. T. Lacy, principal of the Central High School, Sylvania, spoke about what the project had meant to the four participating secondary schools, and president John H. Lewis of Morris Brown College gave the point-of-view of the colleges.

After the opening meeting where Dr. W. H. Brown, a national consultant for the project and director of research at North Carolina College, Durham, outlined the progress of the project and set the scene for evaluation of its accomplishments, the participants broke up into group meetings on communications, science, social science and mathematics. Dr. Brown emphasized that the Phelps-Stokes Fund had given no specif directives, but asked the schools to work out their own aims and techniques.

In addition to Dr. Brown three other national consultants attended the conference, Dr. W. N. Jackson of Tennessee A. and I., Dr. Arthur Wirth of Brooklyn College, and Dr. N. P. Tillman, Atlanta University.

The high school-college teams attending were Albany State College, Camilla Consolidated High School with 10 representatives, Morris Brown College, Henry County Training School, McDonough, with 22 representatives, Fort Valley State College, Henry A. Hunt High School with 11 representatives, and Savannah State College, Sylvania High School with nine representatives. Five members of the State Department of Education were at the meeting.

Taiwan Student Graduates From Atlanta University

YI-KUEI KUO

Among the August graduates of Atlanta University was a Chinese student who will return to his government position in Taiwan to put to use what he has learned as he worked for his master of arts degree in economics. Yi-Kuei Kuo has been on leave from the Taiwan Power Company during the past eighteen months while he pursued his graduate studies.

A 1948 graduate of National Chengchi University, formerly in Nanking, now in Taiwan, Mr. Kuo worked for a year with the Canton Commodity Tax Bureau before going to Taiwan with Chinese nationalist government where he taught for three years in the Taiwan Provincial Kaohsing High School. He then served as a government interpreter before taking the position with the power company.

While studying at Atlanta Universtiy, Mr. Kuo participated in campus life and worked as a student assistant in the library.

Opportunities for Negroes Stressed By Butler At AU

ATLANTA, Ga — Negro teachers were urged to train their students for the America of the future rather than fo rthe South of ten or twenty years ago by George Butler, Director of Education of the President's Committee on Government Contracts, as he pointed out jobs that are available now and would be in the future to the youth of minority races.

Mr Butler, former labor economist for the United States government and member of the boards of the National and Washington Urban Leagues, was addressing the Summer School Assmbly at Atlanta University.

Saying that a government economist had in 1955 predicted an increase of 10,000 in now plants in the South in the next decade, Mr Butler said that if the rate of progress in the South is to obtain, there are going to be a whole lot of brown hands doing hands things they have not been allowed to do before, else the industrial expansion will be severely limited.

He called upon teachers to forget the traditional oportunities which had been open to Negro youth, teaching, proaching, medicine, and the law, and to encourage students to consider the skilled crafts, "Opening the doors of employment to Negroes without having trained people to go through them is ideological exercise," he said.

Questioned as to the kind of education the liberal arts college should provide for the future, Mr Butler favored no change in curriculum, since job content changes so rapidly that specialized training today might soon be obsolete. He advised sound discipline in the fundamentals of communication and computation so that applicants for jobs would be able to do well on aptitude tests.

Dr. Bond Gets At Atlanta University

ATLANTA, Ga. —The appointment of Dr. Horace Mann Bond as guest professor of education and acting dean of the School of Education at Atlanta University has been announced by President Rufus E. Clement. Dr. Bond, former president of Lincoln University, Pa., assumed his duties with the opening of the fall semester on Sept. 13.

Although since 1939 Dr. Bond has served as president of two institutions, of Fort Valley State College until 1945 and since then till this past summer at Lincoln, he has had extensive experience in the teaching field and was professor of education and chairman of the department when he left Fisk University to become president at Fort Valley.

Atlanta University Gets Science Foundation Grant

ATLANTA, Ga., Dec. 19—Atlanta University has for the second summer received a grant from the National Science Foundation for an institute for high school teachers of mathematics and science. This is one of 108 such institutes financed by the Foundation.

The enrollment will be limited to 43 students who will receive tuition and fees, a weekly stipend of $75 and extra grants for dependents and travel. Dr. K. A. Huggins, chairman of the chemistry department at Atlanta University and director of the Institute said, "that all applicants must be received by the University Registrar by April 1. The dates of the Institute are June 9 through Aug. 8.

The program will include work in chemistry, biology and mathematics conducted by the local faculty with the assistance of outside consultants.

The purpose of the institutes, according to Dr. Alan T. Waterman, director of the Foundation, is to strengthen the training of scientists in the United States by improving the competence of science teachers. "Good science teachers are apt to be the first to stimulate an interest in science among our young people in secondary schools," he said, "but if instruction is not stimulating and contains outdated concepts, it tends to weaken youths' motivation toward science careers."

The program, which is now in its fifth year after an experimental beginning in 1953 with two institutes, has for two successive years received from Congress a grant of $9.5 million earmarked for the training of secondary school science teachers.

ARKANSAS BAPTIST COLLEGE

Contribute $40,000 To Ar. College

Defender P. 4
Thurs. 7-25-57

Little Rock, Ark. (ANP) — Arkansas Baptist College here last week received $40,000 in contributions from the white Arkansas Baptist Convention which announced it might contribute an additional $20,000. The convention estimated about $15,000 to $20,000 had been collected but not yet sent in to Baptist headquarters.

The $40,000 is part of a $100,000 drive for funds for the college. Several churches in the area are cooperating in the drive. They are expected to take up special collections to raise an additional $70,000.

Rev. Clyde Hart, director of Negro affairs of the convention, said the drives will get under way late this summer.

Last year the convention budgeted $20,000 for the college.

14e(1) 1957 A & T COLLEGE 3 WHITE STUDENTS APPLY FOR ADMISSION

Students Ask Admission To North Carolina College

Daily Herald Atlanta, Ga. Thurs. 5-30-57

GREENSBORO, N. C. — One of three male white students who applied for admission to the all-Negro North Carolina A&T College Tuesday reportedly changed his mind yesterday according to his wife who explained "he just couldn't meet the high qualification standards at A&T." He is Rodney Jaye Miller, 22, of Greensboro.

Mrs. Miller said her husband's decision did not result from "smart-alecky" telephone calls he had received or "this integration thing."

A faculty admissions committee is considering applications submitted by Edward Holodny, 21, of New York, and Richard Jerome Weiser, 24, of Hamburg, N. Y. Holodny intends to study mechanical engineering, and Weiser wants horticulture.

The three applications were submitted to the board of trustees which turned them over to the faculty admissions committee, indicating it would concur with the committee's decision.

Miller, who is attending North Carolina State College now, indicated he would attend nearby all-white Guilford College.

Although there are no white students at A&T now, some Negro colleges, including neighboring West Virginia State College, have accepted whites.

Three Buildings Dedicated

66th Founders Day Celebrated at A&T

GREENSBORO, N. C.—Faculty and students at A. and T. College were challenged to dynamic direction in a Crusade for Freedom.

The speaker was T. E. McKinney, dean of faculties at Johnson C. Smith University, Charlotte, who delivered the principal address at the annual Founders Day program held GET CITATIONS — James L. Person, Garysburg, left, and Thurman Ballard, Scotland Neck, Army and Air Force cadets, respectively at A. and T. College, were cited last week for outstanding achievement. Dr. Warmoth T. Gibbs, president of the college, makes the presentations as Lieut. Col. Aubrey L. Williams, professor of military science, looks on.

The event celebrated the 66th anniversary of the college founded in 1891.

Dean McKinney, who had held a similar post at A&T College from 1924 through 1929, urged his audience to catch the spirit of those who founded the institution.

• "We are still in the midst of a Crusade for Freedom," he said, "for people, the world over, are demanding it more earnestly than ever before."

In paying homage to those who charted the growth and development of A&T, including: Dr. J. O. Crosby, its first president; Dr. Charles Moore, its first vice president and founder; Dr. James B. Dudley, president from 1896-1925, and Dr. F. D. Buford, president from 1925-1955, the speaker concluuded, "We know that the faculty, here, like those who have gone before, will not fail to move freedom forward and meet the price of progress."

THE SPEAKER was introduced by Dr. Warmoth T. Gibbs, president of the college, who presided.

Three new buildings were dedicated at the celebration. They included the Robert L. Campbell Hall, the ROTC headquarters building, named in honor of a former instructor of military science and mechanic arts, now residing in Venice, Calif.; the Charles L. Cooper Hall, a male students' residence building, named in honor of a deceased former instructor in industrial arts education, and the James Edward Reid Nurseries, named in honor of a former instructor in horticulture, killed in action during World War II.

• In a formal military review conducted by the Army and Air Force ROTC units, earlier in the morning, two cadets were cited for outstanding achievement.

James L. Person, Garysburg, who made the top record in his own company and placed third among all Army ROTC cadets at the recent summer camp at Fort Bragg, was cited as a distinguished military student.

Thurman Ballard, Scotland Neck, an Air Force cadet, was presented a letter of commendation, for outstanding service as flight commander and group commander while at summer camp in Florida.

Chicago Ill.

GREENSBORO, N. C. — (ANP) — The proposed 20-day study tour to several countries in the Caribbean being sponsored this summer by A&T College is now assured.

Dr. F. A. Williams, dean of the college's Graduate School, under which auspices the tour is being conducted, stated this week that a few more than 15-persons, the minimum requirement, had already procured reservations. He added the study group could be increased to 30-persons and was optimistic that the maximum figure would be reached prior to departure time.

The group departs from Miami, Fla., on Thursday, June 20 and returns to the States on Monday, July 8. All inter-country travel is by air. Principal study stops for school visits, lectures and conferences will be made in Puerto Rico, Dominican Republic, Haiti and Jamaica. Opportunities for recreation, sight-seeing, shopping and other forms of entertainment will be made available with stops in San Juan, Guidad Trujillo, Port, Au Prince, Kingston, Port Antonio and Montogo Bay.

The study course in "Comparative Education" carries full graduate credit and advance credit at the undergraduate level.

A&T may integrate this fall

GREENSBORO, N.C. — A and T College may be the first, previously all-colored college in North Carolina, to integrate. The A and T Trustee Board, in session here at the college last Tuesday, heard requests for admission of three white students.

One is from Greensboro now studying mechanical engineering at State College, Raleigh, who is interested in transferring to A and T; and two are from New York State desiring to enter the freshman class this fall to study mechanical engineering and horticulture.

The Greensboro applicant, married and the father of two children, stated that he is interested in saving money and being more convenient at home.

..THE TRUSTEES referred the applications to the college adminisions committee and indicated that they would approve any decision the committee might make.

Dr. Warmonth T. Gibbs, president of the college, in his annual report, told the board that he believed that the state legislature now in session, will make an appropriation for a general salary increase of about 11 per cent for vaculty and staff.

The board favored a resolution whereby the present salary schedule would be increased to provide a wider range of income for faculty-staff personnel.

The report stated that 3,250 students had enrolled during the past year.

THE NEED for additional scholarships was also cited in his report. The president told board members that four scholarships worth $1,000 each were given this year by the Alumni Association.

Almost 1,000 students took the test in 20 widely scattered centers throughout the state and more than 50 per cent made scores acceptable for admission to any college in the state.

"There were still some 500 qualified youngsters eager to go to college but unable to do so because their parents were unable to send them," the report said.

Famed Coach To Head Athletic Dept.

Fri. 6-7-57

GREENSBORO, N. C. A coaching era ended at A&T College here last Tuesday.

Nashville Tenn.

Bill Bell, head football coach at A&T College since 1945 ,is retiring from active coaching and will be succeeded by his top assistant, Bert Piggott.

Dr. Warmoth T. Gibbs, president of the institution, made the official announcement Tuesday following a meeting of the college's board of trustees.

Bell, who retires with a coaching record of 129 wins, 49 losses and 15 ties. will continue as athletic director and chairman of the college's department of physical education.

Piggott, who has served as back field coach since 1949 will have complete charge of football, according to the announcement. A 19447 graduate of the University of Ilnois, where he performed as an outsanng halfback, Piggot played with the professional Los Angles Dons for two seasons. He also holds an M. S. degree in Physical Education from the same institution.

No other changes in the athletic set up were made.

Bell was an outstanding tackle at Ohio State University, from which he grauated in 1932. He received his M. S. Degree there and has done substantial work toward a Ph. D. degree. Prior to coming to A&T he had successful coaching stints at Claflin University, Orangeburg, S. C., Florida A&M College, Tallahassee, and at the Tuskegge Army Air Base in Alabama, during World War II.

A&T College White Student to Attend

Defender

Raleigh, N. C.

GREENSBORO, June 11 (AP)—A 23-year-old white college student will begin classes at A&T College when the State supported school for Negroes opens Thursday.

Rodney Jaye Miller of Greensboro will be the first white student to be admitted for study although several white persons are members of the faculty.

"Mr. Miller has been admitted as a special student for the summer session," said Warmouth T. Gibbs, president of A&T yesterday.

Wed. 6-12-57

Miller said he intends to continue his work toward a degree in heating and air conditioning at State College in Raleigh when the September term opens.

He had applied for admission at A&T last January citing convenience to his home, special technical courses offered in his field which he could not get elsewhere in Greensboro, and job opportunities here, as reasons for wanting to go to A&T.

But after trustees met to consider his application, Miller said he had changed his mind and intended to study this summer at Guilford College where he had been accepted.

He and Mrs. Miller, parents of two small children, said that they made the decision to choose A&T for summer study "after careful consideration."

President Gibbs said Miller will be "just another student" and will be on campus only a few hours each day.

Miller's application to A&T indicated that he has completed one year of study at State College.

Two other applications for work at A&T were received from white men but there has been no further word from the students, President Gibbs said.

We Congratulate A & T College

The decision to admit Rodney J. Miller, a white applicant, as a student at the Agricultural and Technical college of Greensboro, N. C., was a courageous one. The faculty deserves the warmest congratulations for taking a long step toward the onset of the new era of enlightenment.

No doubt the decision was reached with some difficulty compounded of misgivings and dissents that probably gave way to the preponderance of wiser counsel. While North Carolina is in many ways different from Mississippi and Georgia, yet its segregative pattern follows along the line of Dixie's social traditions. There are reactionaries and rabid racists who are so irrevocably committed to the separation of the two races that they may waft a whispering campaign that could find sympathetic ears in the state legislature.

A. and T. is not a private institution. It is a land-grant college whose fiscal appropriations are susceptible to all sorts of capricious legislative actions. Reasoning from this premise, it follows that the administration of Miller is a risk, yes, but a calculated risk whose compulsion, under the pull of the historical forces, made no other alternative expedient or desirable. To reject on whatever grounds the application of a qualified white student would have amounted to an inexcusably blind repudiation of the broad principle of cultural integration for which we have fought hard and long.

Nevertheless, it took fortitude, uncommon clarity of vision to break with the past. And, this break is a happy augury for the administration of A. and T.'s new and scholarly president — Dr. Warmouth Gibbs who is the first trained educator to occupy the presidency in the long history of the Greensboro institution. The faculty of this college ranks academically and technically among the very best in America. So, Miller could not have made a better selection. We congratulate him upon his sound and rugged judgement. It is men of the stature of Miller and of the intellectual prevision of the faculty at A. and T. that give contagious warrant of a new day and a new deal for the emergent South.

A "FIRST" — Mrs. Claudine Wilson Jackson, Greensboro, a senior at A&T College is the first woman to enroll in auto mechanics. A major in Clothing and Textiles in which she expects to earn her degree this summer, Mrs. Jackson, a better than average driver, took the course so that she might be able to maintain the family car. A native of Durham County, she earned most of her educational expenses as a switchboard operator at the college during the past four years. She married just a year ago.

Clement Cites Race Efforts

Advertiser
Montgomery, Ala.

ATLANTA, Ga., March 10— "Any nation which suffers a part of its population to determine which laws it will, and which laws it will not, observe is courting disorder and chaos," President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University said last week at the 127th anniversity dinner of Rhode Island Alpha chapter of Phi Beta Kappa at Brown University. Dr. Clement was initiated as a member of the honorary scholarship fraternity and gave the banquet address.

Speaking on the "Second American Reconstruction," Dr. Clement discussed the disappointment in Negro gains after the Civil War, the persistent struggle through which barrier after barrier to full citizenship had been challenged in federal courts, and the stunning effect of the Supreme Court decision of May, 1954.

While some areas began to make plans to comply with the court decision, the segregationists and worshipers of tradition began to think of ways by which the decision could be negated, some using legislative means, other criminal, Dr. Clement said.

"The people of the entire nation should understand that the Negro's present efforts to achieve first-class citizenship are not motivated by any social or erotic desires," he said. "The American Negro is seeking the opportunity for personal development along lines consistent with his character, his ability, and his achievement. He is not motivated by any desire to invade the private social life of any other person or group."

The solution of the problems of the Second Reconstruction will not only affect the status of the Negro in American life, but will more decisively affect the history of the American nation than it will the life of any group within it, Dr. Clement stated. He urged that decisions which will be made with respect to domestic life will be those which will contribute to world tranquility and progress.

State May Control Bethune-Cookman

Pittsburgh, Pa. P. B

(By Staff Correspondent)

DAYTONA BEACH, Fla.—About the same time President Richard V. Moore of Bethune-Cookman College was announcing receipt of a check from the Ford Foundation for $70,000, making a total of $140,000 given the school by the foundation, observers were predicting a drastic administrative change for the institution.

Surveying the program of higher education for Negroes in Florida, a prediction has been made by observers that Bethune-Cookman will become a state university within the next five years, perhaps sooner.

The prediction is based upon the growing needs of the increasing university-bound students and the geographical extensions of the state. It was pointed out that Tallahassee, home of the only state university for Negroes, Florida A. and M. University, is 225 miles from the center of the state.

ONLY TWO other Negro institutions are considered capable of being expanded satisfactorily into a state university. They are Bethune-Cookman, here, and Florida Normal and Industrial Institute at St. Augustine. Each has a plant which would lend itself to the readjustment.

Bethune-Cookman now has an enrollment of some 1,100 students. Florida Normal runs between 500 and 600. Florida A&MU enrollment is 2,200.

Dr. R. W. Puryear heads Florida Normal, while Dr. Moore has done a magnificent job at Bethune-Cookman during his 11 years as president.

Thus, the observers are speculating that the State Department of Instruction will soon turn its eyes toward Bethune-Cookman or Florida Normal in order to meet the growing needs of an expanding higher education program.

Bishop College Head Explains Dallas Move To Nat'l Baptists

Daily World Thurs. 6-27-57 p. 5

Atlanta Ga.

MARSHALL, Texas — President M. K. Curry, Jr. of Bishop College addressed an audience of about seven thousand at the new Dallas Memorial Auditorium recently. Speaking before delegates to the National Baptist Sunday School and B. T. U. Congress Dr. Curry explained the reasons behind the school's proposed move from Marshall to Dallas. Earlier this year, the Bishop College Board of Trustees voted to move the school within two years. Bishop has been located in Marshall for more than 76 years. Present plans call for a new Bishop College to rise on 100 acres in the Bon Aire development located in Oak Cliff between Loop 12 and U. S. Highway 75 just outside Dallas city limits.

Some of the reasons cited by Dr. Curry for the Board's decision to move Bishop to Dallas were: inadequate support in present location growing partially out of the inability of the Marshall area to support three colleges; the trend of the populace shifting from an agrarian type of existence to city dwellers; and a greater opportunity for students to help themselves by means of jobs in Dallas. Dr. Curry spoke during the college hour.

KING SPEAKS

The Rev. Mr. M. L. King, leader of the successful bus boycott in Montgomery, Alabama, was principal speaker of the evening. Rev. King was introduced by his second-in-command during the bus boycott, the Rev. Ralph Abernathy. Dr. King who holds the Ph. D. degree as well as the honorary Doctor of Divinity degree from three institutions, spoke on "Facing the Challenge of a New Age." A forceful speaker, Dr. King, among other things, told his listeners: "We must learn to achieve excellency among all peoples — not just among Negroes." At another point, speaking of recent victories achieved by Negroes, he challenged Negroes to enter the new age with "understanding good will in our hearts." Otherwise, he warned, "the new order will be nothing but a duplication of the old order."

Also present at the meeting was Mrs. Autherine Lucy-Foster, whose fight to attend the University of Alabama gained nationwide attention.

Another sidelight to the Friday night meeting of the National Baptist Sunday School and B. T. U. Congress was a resolution adopted by the resolution committee. The resolution condemned the Statler Hotel in Dallas for allegedly refusing accommodations to some delegates.

Bishop Gets $46,000 Ford Foundation Grant

Call p. 5 Kansas City, Mo. Tri. 7-12-57

MARSHALL, Texas — (ANP) — President M. K. Curry Jr., of Bishop college has announced the receipt of $46.000 from the Ford Foundation. The check was the second and final installment in a program initiated by the Foundation in 1955 to help raise faculty salaries.

President Curry says the two grants from the foundation for this purpose now total $91,000. The total amount has been deposited with the Baptist Foundation of Texas as part of the Endowment Fund in accordance wih the stipulations made by the Ford Foundation.

According to President Curry, the interest from the $91,000 will amount to approximately $4,500 a year, and will underwrite almost one-fourth of the increases granted in teachers' salaries within the past two years.

The Ford Foundation this week sent checks totaling more than 130 million dollars to 630 privately-supported colleges and universities. The amount represents one-half of a 260 million dollar appropriation approved by the Foundation in 1955. Each of the 630 institutions received sums approximately equal to its undergraduate instructional costs for the 1954-55 academic year.

President Curry said that the psychological effort of the gift on the institution and on other potential donors would be tremendous in the years ahead.

MARSHALL — The Registrar and Director of Student Personel at Bishop College says he is constantly amazed at the geographical disparity of students who enroll at Bishop.

J D Hurd recalls that one of the May graduates, Larkland Allen, came from British West Indies. Another student, Carlos Jarvis of Panama City, Canal Zone who enrolled at Bishop last year, is expected back this fall. Mr Hurd says he has an application from one prospective student in Nazareth, Israel, and another application from Acra, Ghana in West Africa. "And here in the United States," the Bishop Registrar observed, "we have applications from students in New York, California, Alabama, Nebraska, and Indiana. In fact, Bishop attracts students from practically every state in the union."

"Yes sir, everytime I get a letter or application from one of those far away places, I wonder how they heard about us. But they keep coming every year, and we're glad to welcome them."

Outstanding Music Student At Bishop To Join Staff

Nashville Tenn.
8/17/57

MARSHALL, Texas, June 18—A promising young music student at Bishop College who says he likes music and students, will join Bishop's staff in September as Director of the Band. Henry L. Shegog, II will take over the music post at Bishop following his graduation in August. Full of zest for music, Mr. Shegog, now 22 years old, started his music career on the piano when he was six years old. He played his first solo at school at the age of ten. Although he now specializes in the clarinet and saxophone, Mr. Shegog can play all instruments.

Mr. Shegog says he became serious about the music profession while a sophomore in Douglas Hi School in Lawton, Oklahoma. While there, he earned a four-year music scholarship to Langston University. He attended Langston for two years, where he taught the training school band for one year, and then transferred to Bishop College. He did his practice teaching the past semester at Pemberton High School in Marshall, where he was well-liked by the students. Come next summer, Mr. Shegog plans to start working toward his doctorate in music at Syracuse University in New York.

Some of the other members of the Shegog family also are musicians. A 17-year old brother, James Howard, plays the trumpet; another brother, 15-year old Don, plays trombone; and his father, who, incidentally, heads the Department of Elementary Education at Bishop plays the piano. Henry L. Shegog, Senior also developed the band and chorus at Douglas High School in Lawton. He had charge of the band and chorus for twelve years, then spent another eight years as principal of the school. He filled a similar post at another high school in Charlottesville, Virginia from 1953 to 1955. The senior Shegog went to Bishop College in 1955.

Most of the persons who know Henry L. Shegog, II predict that he will reach great heights in the field of music.

MARSHALL, Texas — Bishop College of Marshall, Tex. will move to Dallas within two years. That was the decision announced jointly last week by Dr. W. R. White, chairman of the 33-member board of trustees of Bishop College and Dr. Ernest C. Estell, chairman of the executive committe. Dr. Whie also is president of Baylor university in Waco, Texas, and Dr. Estell is pastor of St. John's Baptist church in Dallas.

p. 11

According to Dr. Estell, in a recent meeting of the executive committee at Dallas, the committee took an option on 100 acres in the new Bon Aire development in South Oak Cliff. The site for Bishop is located between Loop 12 and Highway 75, an area scheduled so that the growing Negro population in Dallas will have additional residential space. Dr. Estell also says the 100-acre campus will provide a nucleus for a beautiful residential building development for Negroes.

Dr. M. K. Curry, Jr., president of Bishop college, had this to say about the move: "The decision to move the college to Dallas is part of a total strategy being developed by the United Negro College Fund, under the leadership of Dr. F. D. Patterson New York, 'fund president' The strategy seeks to provide the maximum opportunity for the well-trained leadership for Negro Youth in Texas."

Moving to Dallas

P.7 14 col

MARSHALL, Tex.—Bishop College is going to move to Dallas within two years. That was the decision announced jointly by Dr. W. R. White, chairman of the 33-member board of trustees of Bishop College, and Dr. Ernest C. Estell, chairman of the executive committee.

According to Dr. Estell, in a recent meeting of the executive committee at Dallas, the committee took an option on 100 acres in the new Bon Aire development in South Oak Cliff.

The site for Bishop is located between Loop 12 and Highway 75, an area scheduled for immediate improvement.

DR. M. K. CURRY JR., president of Bishop College, had this to say about the move: "The decision to move the college to Dallas is part of a total strategy being developed by the United Negro College Fund, Inc., under the leadership of Dr. F. D. Patterson of New York.

• Although Bishop has operated a two-year junior college branch in Dallas for the past 10 years, the move of the parent college to Dallas will give Dallas its first four-year college for Negroes.

Dr. Estell says the executive committee of Bishop's board of trustees also has appointed committees to consider proposals for disposal of the school's 50-acre campus with 12 major buildings.

BISHOP COLLEGE gets its support from three organizations, according to Dr. Estell. They are the Baptist General Convention of Texas, the United Negro College Fund. Inc., and the American (Northern) Baptist Convention.

• The board of trustees' decision to move Bishop College to Dallas was one of three proposals recommended by Dr. Patterson, founder and president of the United Negro College Fund.

Other proposals recommended by Dr. Patterson were that Bishop merge with Wiley College, a Methodist College also located in Marshall, and remain in Marshall, or that Wiley and Bishop merge and both move to Dallas.

Wiley College also receives support from the 31-member United Negro College Fund.

Moving College To Dallas

Informer Sat 4-6-57 P.13

After three quarters of a century in Marshall, Texas, which is only a short distance from the Louisiana line Bishop College, historic Baptist Institution of higher learning, is now making plans to move to Dallas. It is thus moving from an essentially rural setting to a large urban center.

Houston, Texas

Dr M K Curry, Jr president of Bishop College, cited broad strategy of the United Negro College Fund to eliminate duplication of colleges, along with the large concentration of Negro population in Dallas, as a primary reason for the move. Already Bishop has operated a junior college center in Dallas for about a decade, and it thus has acquired experience concerning the need and possibilities of the full college program there.

14 col

The 1950 Census gives Dallas County a Negro population of more than 83,000, practically all of which is in the metropolitan area. The Negro population of Harrison County, in which Marshall is located, is only about 25,000, with less than half of it in the metropolitan urban area of Marshall. Not only is there this great difference in Negro population within easy access of a college within the metropolitan urban area, but Dr Curry rightly points out the continuous trend of Negroes from rural to urban areas.

The training program which has been developed at Bishop College also fits into its anticipated big city environment Liberal arts and sciences, teacher training, and pre-professional training for ministers and other religious workers, and for prysicians, dentists, and lawyers, offer special appeal to city dwellers. The site where the new campus is expected to be located is situated within the city limits of Dallas.

These comparative references to opportunities for Bishop College to continue to serve the Negroes of the great Southwest do not at all mean to suggest that the enrollment will be or should be restricted to Negroes. Indeed, in metropolitan Dallas the college will doubtless have even greater opportunities for emphasizing its ideals of freedom and true democracy.

But in the years immediately ahead we as Negroes have a special need for stronger sources for trained leadership to cope with the problems of desegregation, integration, full freedom, and first-class citizenship. In no area is this more pressing than that of leadership for the Negro church. In all probability Bishop College in Dallas will strengthen and enlarge the splendid work which it has done through the years in offering training for ministers and other religious workers. Truly, the contemplated move to Dallas offers very bright prospects.

Bishop College Holds 76th Annual Founders' Week; Many Activities

Call Kansas City, Missouri P.5

Sat 4-19-57 14 col

MARSHALL, Texas. — Bishop college last week (April 8-14) held its Annual Founders' Week observance. The chairman of the Founders Week committee, J. D. Hurd says activities of the week-long observance got underway Tuesday April 9, with the presentation of an adaption from "Fiat Lux," a modern mystery play by Faith Von Valkenburgh Viles. "Fiat Lux," which is Latin meaning "Let There Be Light," is Bishop's school creed and motto. The observance ended Sunday, April 12.

Mrs. Fannie Lee Perkins of Marshall, Bishop alumna and special education consultant for the Marshall Public school system, was in charge of Alumni mid-week prayer service. The service was held Wednesday, April 10, in Bishop's Oscar A. Fuller Memorial Chapel. All graduates and former students and friends were invited to worship with the College during this special dedicatory hour.

Immediately following the prayer service, the Lyceum Committee presented two movies. One was called "Fall of the House of Usher," and the other's title was "Storm Over Mexico." The public was admitted to the movies free.

The alumni speaker at the regular chapel service Thursday morning, April 11 was Rev. C. A. Holliday, former pastor of Jerusalem Baptist church in Marshall. Rev. Holiday received the BA. and B. D. Degrees at Bishop college. He is presently serving as Pastor of the Greater St. James Baptist church of Fort Worth, Texas.

One of the highlights of Bishop's Founders Week was the presentation by the Coleridge-Taylor Choral Society of the "Manzoni Requiem" Thursday night in the Oscar A. Fuller Memorial Chapel. The Choir is under the direction of J. Harrison Wilson. The "Requiem" was dedicated to the "Founding Fathers, and to those who have given of themselves untiringly to Bishop College and its ideals."

There was no charge for the presentation of the "Requiem" which was open to the public. The Language Arts Club, under the direction of Mrs. Dorcas S. Menefee honored the Choral Society and guests with a reception immediately following the program in the lobby of Bishop Hall.

REV. I. W. WHITLEY

The Annual Founders' banquet was held in the Dining Hall, Friday night, April 12. Dr. Anthony Wayne Beal, '39, Houston, Texas was the guest speaker. B. H. Rosborough, Texarkana, Texas was was toastmaster. Mrs. Ruth Douglas and Mrs. Ruth Rockamore-Lawson, both of Shreveport, La., paid tributes and gave citations to outstanding graduates of the institution. Those honored were: Rev. W. F. Bledsoe, 1898 and 1905; Dr. Christine Benton-Cash, 1926; Mrs Corrine Coleman-Stewart, 1917 Port Arthur, Texas; Mrs. Samuel W. Hudson, 1939, Dallas, Texas; Mr. Bert Charles Williams, Jr., Senior, Texarkana, Texas; Miss Gwendolyn LaFaye Jackson Senior, Marshall, Texas and Miss Bernice Halley, Freshman, Ogden, Utah.

Saturday night, April 13, the Veterans club, under the supervision of Dean Hurd presented its third annual Formal Black and White Cotillion as part of the Founders Week celebration. All alumni and former students were invited.

The observance closed with a formal convocation exercise on Sunday afternoon, April 14, at 4 p.m., in the Oscar A. Fuller Memorial Chapel. The Rev. M C Williams, former pastor of the New Bethel Baptist church of Marshall and now minister of the New Hope Baptist church of Denver, Colo., was the Founders' Day speaker. Rev. Williams also is chaplain in the Colorado House of Representatives. The Coleridge-Taylor Choral Society sang during Sunday's program.

A formal reception was given in Bishop Hall immediately following the exercises, in honor of the Rev. and Mrs. Williams.

BUTLER COLLEGE GETS $37,500.00 GRANT

Daily World Atlanta, Ga.

Sat. 11-19-57 (14-1)

TYLER, Texas — Butler College a local Baptist College announced today through its President Claude Meals, the receipt of $37,500.00 grant from the Baptist General Convention of Texas. A check in the amount of $27,500.00 was received, along with a letter from Dr. R. A. Springer, Treasurer of the convention. The letter stated in part: "I am attaching herewith our check for $27,500.00 the appropiation of $10,000.00, for 1957 can be paid quarterly, semi-annually or as the work on the building progress"..... P. 6

The reference to the building was the proposed new library which is to be constructed on the Butler College campus in the near future. Dr. W. M. Shamburger, Pastor of the First Baptist Church and Mr. John Stephens Chairman of the Board of the Peoples National Bank, both of whom were instrumental in having the grant transferred to the local fund were hopful and confident that this generous gift would stimulate other individuals and organizations to give financial support to the efforts of the Butler College expansion program.

Thursday morning, May 23, 1957 at ten o'clock Campbell College's Sixty-seventh Commencement was held under the leadership and direction of President H. P. Wilburn and Bishop R. R. Wright, Jr., Presiding Bishop of the Eighth Episcopal District.

A total of thirty-three candidates for graduation. Thirteen from the high school, seventeen from the college and three from the Lampton Theological Seminary, Dr. J. J. Morant, dean.

May 19, at 3:30 p.m. Dr. Andrew White, Editor-in-Chief of the Journal of Religious Education of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, Nashville, Tenn., brought the baccalaureate sermon. May 23 at 10 o'clock a.m. Dr. Benjamin H. Hill, chairman of the Executive Commission of the Division of Educational Institutions of the A. M. E. Church, pastor of Vernon Chapel Church, Tulsa, Oklahoma, brought the commencement address.

Mrs. Charlotte Crogman Wright, Editor of The Southern Cross, gave $75.00 award for a scholarship. Mrs. Annie Casteal Moore, an alumna of Campbell College, gave $20.00 to the scholarship fund. Mrs. Moore is one of the secretaries at Southern University.

A Huge Crowd Witnessed These Services

President H. P. Wilburn who has given seven years of untiring service as president of Campbell College, was re-elected president. President Wilburn has helped many young people over rough places while trying to make it through school. Many times students had obstacles before them, they became thwarted and frustrated, they couldn't find their way around, President Wilburn sought to find their needs, and moved the block and brought them through. He is a great man.

Mrs. Ellen M. Wilson, who has given seven years as bookkeeper at Campbell College, a very efficient bookkeeper, who after the death of the late Dr. J. W. Hair, was recommended by Bishop R. R. Wright, Jr., to the board as treasurer of Campbell College. Mrs. Wilson was re-elected treasurer. Her books were found up-to-date.

WILBERFORCE, Ohio — Ernest McEwen, ousted president of the Alcorn College student body, and two other students, Ruby and Charles Hibbler, who were also denied readmission to this Mississippi land grant college, enrolled at Central State College here April 1.

In a special college assembly President Charles H. Wesley of Central State stated:

"We are pleased to welcome these students who have been denied readmission to Alcorn College in Mississippi because they took their stand upon the issues of desegregation and integration on the basis of recognized American principles in a period when American institutions have given wide acceptance to refugees from Hungary who have struggled against the tyranny of a totalitarian regime."

Baltimore, Md.

SAMUEL WILLIAMS, president of the Central State College Student Council, Warren Taylor, Alice Windom and Earl Saunders, other spokesmen of student government and life, also brought greetings ti the three new students.

Kansas City, Mo.

WILBERFORCE, Ohio (ANP) — The board of trustees of Central State college in session recently on the campus, approved a building program for 1957-'58, totaling $2,150,000. Final action was given by the board to an agreement with the United States Housing and Home Finance agency for the construction of two men's dormitories to house 206 men and two proctors at a cost of $470,000, for which dormitory revenue bonds will be issued.

Another action was the acceptance of the bid of Six Industries, Construction Firm, Springfield, Ohio, for the construction of the college cafeteria and home economics laboratory at a cost of $250,000. Actual construction on this building will begin within the next few weeks.

The third project approved by the board was the erection of a woman's dormitory to house 160 women at a cost of $360,000. Final bids on this building was opened in Columbus on April 16.

A fourth building project is a new college library, preliminary plans for which are already drawn to be erected during the next academic year at an expenditure of $650,000.

The fifth project is an addition to the gymnasium, so that there will be a gymnasium for men and a gymnasium for women with the natatorium between the two, at a cost of $500,000. These five projects constitute a total building program for 1957-'58 of $2,150,000.

Trustees who were present and approved this program were Attorney Ray E. Hughes, Columbus; Dr. Jane E. Hunter, Cleveland; Dr. Braxton F. Cann, Cincinnati; Dr. J. Welby Broaddus, Dayton; Dr. George W. Lucas, Dayton and Dr. W. P. Young, Youngstown.

Two More Alcorn Pupils Placed At Central State

NEW YORK.— Two additional students who were expelled from the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College at Alcorn because of their leadership role in the recent student protest against Professor Clennon King have been placed at Central State College in Wilberforce, Ohio, Roy Wilkins, N.A.A.C.P. executive secretary, announced here this week.

The association already had arranged the transfer to other colleges of five Alcorn students expelled for the same reason. Three of these were placed at Central State college and two at Virginia Union university in Richmond.

The seven students were expelled from the Mississippi college after they protested against Prof. King because of a series of articles the teacher wrote for the Jackson (Miss) State Times criticizing the NAACP's anti-segregation activities. The two expelled students most recently placed at Central State College are A. J. Felder and John Rieley.

The student bodies and faculties of both Central State and Virginia Union were reported to have received the Mississippi students warmly. Addressing a special assembly, Dr. Charles H. Wesley, president of Central State, declared: "In a period when American institutions have given wide acceptance to refuges from Hungary who have struggled against the tyranny of a totalitarian regime, we are glad to be in the midst of those who paralleled this situation in American life with the acceptance of the refugees of freedom from the State of Mississippi."

Dr. Samuel Proctor, president of Virginia Union, declared that his university "is proud to cooperate with the NAACP in helping to keep the students of Alcorn College in school. We have welcomed to our campus Miss Robessie Young and Miss Susan Owens. They have already begun to make friends here and, I am sure, the disruption in their education will be less severe because of the interest the NAACP has shown in them."

All the displaced students were reported to be studying hard to make up for the time lost from their studies. The students received tuition, travel expenses and an incidental expense fund from the NAACP for the remainder of the school semester. This action on the part of the association was taken by the NAACP Committee on Administration at its regular monthly meeting on March 25.

Better Racial Understanding Theme At Clark

Daily World Fri. 2-15-57 14e Atlanta Ga.

"Negro History in the Development of Racial Understanding" is the theme of Clark College's celebration of Negro History Week.

Sponsored by the Social Science Club at the College, the celebration started Wednesday in Davage Auditorium with an address by Rev. L. M. Terry, professor of Church History and practical Theology at Morehouse College and pastor of Zilon Hill Baptist Church.

Addressing himself to the theme of the week-long observance, Rev. Terrell called for an evaluation of race relations in the light of world, national cry for justice and equality is not peculiar to the American Negro, and briefly reviewing the status of the Negro in America during the past century, he cited the return of active government support to the cause of equality for Negroes for the first time since Deconstruction.

Rev. Terrell called for intelligence and courage combined with legal methods and a "spirit of love and non-violence" in efforts to seek first-class citizenship in this country.

Today, during the morning chapel program, Mr. James Green, a member of the Clark Social Department will conduct a quize program designed to air information regarding Negro History. Jesse McDade, freshman; Robert Felder, sophomore; Judge Cleveland, Junior; and Alfred Fanning, senior, will represent their classes and answer the questions presented by quizemaster, Roy Beasley.

Clark College To Share In RCA Scholarships

World Tifton, Ga. Wed. 2-13-57

ATLANTA, Ga. — (SNS) — Radio Corporation of America has announced that an annual scholarship of $800 will be available to Clark College and nine other American colleges and universities in the fall.

14e p.3

The scholarship, which will be awarded to prospective teachers of science and mathematics, will be available to the student selected as recipient during his sophomore, junior and senior years at Clark.

Commenting on the scholarships Brigadier General David Sarnoff, chairman of the board at RCA, said "The Radio Corporation of America plan, unique among corporate educational aid programs, is actually an extension of the long-established RCA Scholarship and Fellowship Program. It provides for thirty RCA Teacher Scholarships which will be awarded to 20 different teacher-training colleges throughout the country."

The General continued, "Greater cooperation with our schools in both a corporate and community responsibility. Many of RCA's 75,000 employees participate in various types of school and educational activities such as serving on school boards and school committees. I am urging all of them as citizens to increase their efforts, to be more aware of the contribution they can make to the school programs in their communities, and to generally increase their participation and support.

RCA Scholarships providing an annual grant of $800, will be granted to ten colleges and awarded to prospective teachers being trained in the fields of science and mathematics. These scholarships will be available to the student during the sophomore, junior and senior year at the following colleges and universities: Berea College, Berea, Ky.; Adelphi College, Garden City, N. College of The Scriptures To Start Work on $150,000 Building This Fall

Courier-Journal Sat. 5-25-57 p.5

Louisville Ky.

Construction will begin in the fall on a $150,000 school for the College of The Scriptures, it was announced last night at the college's commencement ceremonies.

The new building, which will accommodate 150 students, will be on a 5-acre campus at Old Shepherdsville Road and Indian Trail, said college President Tibbs Maxey. The college, 709 W. Magazine, now has 22 students.

About $22,000 has been collected for the project in a campaign that began a month ago. The building should be ready for occupancy by fall, next year, Tibbs said.

Eight students were graduated last night in ceremonies at Central Christian Church, 17th and Jefferson. College degrees were awarded to Edwin L. Hyatt, Mrs. Margaret E. Hyatt, and Thurman Jenkins.

Mrs. Minnie Freeman and Cornelious Perry, Jr., received academy, or high-school level, degrees. Missionary certificates were awarded to Mrs. Maudelia Buchanan, Mrs. Gracie Moore, and Miss Lillian Freeman.

Max Ward Randall, a former dean of the college and a missionary to South Africa for the past six years, spoke to the graduates on "Love and Forgiveness." Randall, superintendent of the South African Church of Christ mission, said the mission has been averaging 1,000 conversions a year in an area about half the size of the United States.

President Of Edward Waters

COLUMBIA, S. C. — William B. Stewart, president of Edward Waters college, was elected president of the recently organized Council of AME College Presidents at a meeting held last week at Allen university.

The meeting was held in conjunction with a workshop of AME college business managers called by H. Talcott Stith CPA, representing the General Board of the church. The workshop was held to develop a uniform system in auditing accounts of the church-connected schools.

During the meeting standardized procedures were outlined by Stith to the business managers, who under the reorganization of the church's administration of school affairs, will be given a greater responsibility for handling fiscal matters.

The college presidents in electing Stewart stated that they had organized for the purpose of unifying their efforts in behalf of the improvement and perpetuation of AME supported schools under the accepted standards of accreditation agencies.

PAY TRIBUTE

A spokesman for the college presidents stated that the election of President Stewart was a tribute to the splendid work he has accomplished at Edward Waters junior college in Jacksonville, Fla.

Stith, a member of the accounting firm of Derrick, Stubbs and Stith of Columbia S. C., has been working on a plan to bring the entire accounting systems of the colleges under a central control.

In the meantime a General Education Commission is setting up a set of rules and regulations which will serve to bring the administrationso f these schools into line with the standards of recognized accrediting agencies.

LAW PASSED IN '56

All this grows out of legislation passed at the May 1956, Quadrennial Conference of the A. M. E. church, held in Miami, Fla. The spelling out oft hese laws were emphasized duringt he trial of Bishop Nicholas in Jacksonville, Fla., during the past summer.

The standards as set down by th new laws of the church bring the administration of the fiscal affairs of the church schools directly un- Board.

Among the schools affected are Wilberforce university, Wilberforce, Ohio; Payne Seminary, Wilberforce Ohio; Morris Brown college Atlanta, Ga.; Allen university Columbia, S. C.; Paul Quinn college, Waco Texas; Kittrell college Henderson, N. C.; Campbell college, Jackson, Miss.; Edward Waters college Jacksonville, Fla.; Daniel Payne college Birmingham, Ala.

DISTRICT CONTROL

Prior to 1956, each AME church supported school, was controlled entirely by the district which supported it. As a result the school prospered according to the ability of the bishop in charge to handle the administrative affairs of the institution.

This often created a more or less challenging condition in the rise and fall of the schools and few presidents could set up long range administrative programs.

Under the new law, the moneys collected for the support of the school is included in the $4 per annum dues to be paid by the membership of the church. This money is turned into the General Church Fund which is administered by the General Board. The General Board in turn dispenses the money proportionately to the schools.

An Educational Vommission, working under the direction of the General Board, and in conjunction with the General Secretary of Education has general supervision of the administration of these funds.

In spite oft he loose definition of control under previous church laws, many bishops have done much to furthert he advancement of schools undert heir control.

GETS SCHOOL RATED

Edward Waters college accreditation was held directly responsible to the cooperation given President William B. Stewart by the late Bishop Gregg and later by Bishop Carey A. Gibbs, who upon his transfer to Alabama gave similar cooperation to Dr. Howard Gregg, president of Daniel Payne college.

Wilberforce university showed definite advancement under the administrations of Bishops Reid and Bonner. Paul Quinn has moved ahead under the administration had great prosperity under the a- Bonner. Paul Quinn has moved ahead under the administrations of Bishops Gomez and Primm.

It is the contention of those who foster the direction of the college administration by the General Board, however, that an over-all program removing complete control by the assigned bishop is for the general betterment of the insituations concerned. They also say it'll give a degree of stability to the administrative programs that will allow better planning for the development of future program and curricula.

A similar attitude has been taken by the official accrediting agencies of the nation in defining policy at all church supported schools. Many other churches have followed this advice and the AME church is now attempting to bring its program in line with the accepted program now being followed by other major church supported institutions.

The majority of the AME colleges are now in the hands of capable men as presidents. The General Board feels that these men should be allowed to function unhampered in the operation of their offices.

This policy should do much to enable the schools to move forward and take their proper places among the privately endowed colleges at a time when adequate institutions of higher learning are sorely needed, officials attending the workshop agreed.

Daniel Payne College Celebrates 64th Commencement

In the long rugged history of Daniel Payne College, the climax was reached as the college set a new precedence in achievement under the leadership of his grace, Bishop Carey A. Gibbs as chancellor and the learned Dr. Howard D. Gregg as president.

Sunday, May 26th, at three (3) o'clock, Dr. C. E. Thomas, popular pastor of St. John A. M. E. Church, delivered a befitting commencement sermon to a capacity audience. Monday night, May 27, was Class Night; a beautiful play was presented by the school. Tuesday night, May 28, Dr. G. W. McMurray, pastor of Metropolitan A. M. E. Zion Church, Birmingham, delivered the sermon to the divinity class. Wednesday night, May 29, the Alumni of Payne, headed by Mrs. Bessie Walker, Mr. W. E. Shortridge was principal speaker.

On Thursday, May 30, at 10:00 o'clock the school auditorium was filled to see thirty-nine (39) young people be rewarded for their diligence, and five (5) ministers receive their honorary degrees of Doctor of Divinity. The commencement speaker was Mr. Reeves Sims, Personnel Manager of Stockham Valves Fitting Co.

The Trustee Board

Bishop C. A. Gibbs exposed himself as a master executive who knows his church as well as men; he rules with the force of love and is a firm believer in the merit system. He has a way of getting things done with his firm and candid manner, and from all indications Alabama will come into her own under his matchless leadership. 14e(1)

The Trustee Board was one of the most epochal Boards in connection with the school in many seasons. Bishop Gibbs took the reins and suggested that the expenditures of the colleges conform with the budget and as a measure of economy he suggested the safeguard of all unnecessary expenses. The Trustee Board set the sky-lines for the most progressive era in Payne's history.

Tuesday, May 28, the eighteen (18) Presiding Elders met in the College Auditorium to report the first half of the Connectional Budget.

Something New Under the Sun In Alabama

In order to equip ministers and laymen with the necessities to meet the challenge of the new order of things in the A. M. E. Church in this age of transition, out of Bishop Gibbs' resourceful mind was born the idea of setting up a seminar for two (2) weeks at the college to train leaders for what lies ahead. Some of the best minds in the Church will give their time as instructors.

Bishop Gibbs and his queenly wife have proven a blessing to Alabama the short time they have served us, and we are happy that they have bought a home on the great soil of Alabama, located in Birmingham. More power to this Godly Pair.

Board Told D.C. Needs Full 4-Year City College

Post & Times Herald p. 1 Wed. 1-23-57 Washington D.C.

Proposed Teacher Institution Could Make Way to Fill 'Need' of District

By John Lindsay
Staff Reporter

School Superintendent Hobart M. Corning said yesterday that a proposed new District Teachers College should be made the nucleus of a full-fledged general college for the city of Washington.

Corning told District Commissioners that the need for a truly "city" college "has existed for some time." The city's school system already provides "excellent" education, and "it should not stop short of an equally rich offering in the field of higher education," he said.

Corning threw out the idea at a discussion between the Commissioners and the Board of Education on the proposed long term borrowing plan to finance $70 million of new school construction here in the next five years.

Commissioners agreed to set up a task force of District and School Board staff employes to tackle details of the ambitious program.

Included in requests for needed borrowing is $7.5 million for a new D. C. Teachers College building and site.

Corning said the site acquired for the proposed teachers' college should be large enough to permit expansion, not only for a future general college, but also for the teachers' college.

Adequate housing and other facilities for a five-year teacher training institution should be provided. Following an "orderly and well planned" transition, he said, a start could be made on developing a high level college for general education.

Corning pointed out that 18 states with populations smaller than the District's now have publicly supported colleges.

Another phase of the multimillion borrowing program discussed yesterday was the acquisition of sites for nine new elementary schools, or additions to present buildings.

Corning, backed by school board members, told Commissioners that planning on a building-to-building basis is not practical.

He suggested that acquisition be made by areas of the city on the basis of population studies, needs and individual communities within the city. About $4 million is needed for immediate acquisition of the required building sites, Corning said.

The borrowing program will be fine-combed by the combined "task force," and possibly submitted for recommendations to a citizens group before Commissioners submit it to Congress.

School Principals Hold Workshop at Dillard U.

NEW ORLEANS. — (ANP) — Fifty-six principals and school educators from ten states participated in a Principals' Workshop at Dillard university this week.

The group met Thursday, following a general session lead by group consultants. Acting in this capacity were Dr. Theodore Rice, professor of education, New York university; Dr. Ellsworth Tompkins, assistant secretary National Association of Secondary School Principals and Dr. Raymond G. Wilson, executive secretary Southern Association's Commission of Secondary Schools.

According to Dr. Violet K. Richards, director of the workshop, great strides were made by the group in approaching the problem of improving instruction in the secondary schools.

Group discussion chairman for the meeting were J. K. Haynes, president, Louisiana Education association, Baton Rouge; L. D. Crocker, principal, Booker Washington highschool, New Orleans, and Dr. I. B. Bryant, principal, Booker Washington high school, Houston, Tex.

National Science Foundation Gives $29,000 To Dillard University

New Orleans — A National Science Foundation grant of $29,000 has been made to Dillard University in support of a summer institute for high school teachers of science, it was announced by Dr. Albert W. Dent, president of the university.

"The program is designed to help maintain the nation's scientific and technical leadership by improving the competence of the teachers whose task it is to recruit the scientists and engineers of the future and to introduce them to the field of science," Dr. Dent stated.

The six-week institute has been tentatively scheduled to begin on June 16. Advanced courses in chemistry and biology will be offered by members of the university's faculty and by prominent guest lecturers and consultants.

Terms of the grant provide for stipends of $75 per week, plus allowances for dependents, for participating high school teachers. Tuition and fees are also covered by the foundation grant.

President Dent announced the appointment of Dr. Edward E. Riley Jr., chairman of the division of the natural sciences, as director of the institute.

AWARDED GRANT - Dr. Edward E. Riley, Jr., associate professor of biology and chairman of the division of the natural sciences at Dillard University, has been awarded a three-year grant of $22,600 by the National Cancer Institute of the U.S. Public Health Service to continue his research in the biological phenomena of cancer. It was revealed by Dr. Albert W. Dent, president of the university.

Dr. Riley's studies, which are concerned primarily with catalase enzyme activity in the liver tissue of cancerous organisms, are part of a worldwide search for basic scientific data about cancer. He began his studies five year ago.

Students' Plea For Integration Ignored

Journal + Guide Sat. 3-9-57

DURHAM, N. C. — Duke University, one of the South's richest privately endowed schools, has again turned down a petition by a segment of its students to admit Negro students.

Norfolk, Va.

The students in the university's School of Divinity sent a petition to the trustee board last week asking integration of the Divinity School, but the reply coming back from the group and voiced by President Hollis Eden was "Yes, the divinity school petition was discussed, as have other petitions in the past. The policy of the University is unchanged."

Duke University Admits Three Negro Students For Summer Schools

Advocate Jackson, Miss.

Durham, N. C., Apr. 22.—Three Negroes are slated to attend Duke University this summer. They are school teachers who will be enrolled in a special session financed by a government educational foundation.

Sat. 4-27-57

The three are Mrs. Lucy S. Herring, supervisor of elementary schools a Asheville; Mrs. Lucille Burton, teacher at Stephens-Lee high in Asheville; and Robert B. McDowell, teacher at Langston high of Danville, Va.

They were awarded scholarships to attend a nine week institute for teachers of Science and Mathematics at Duke.

Duke President D. Hollis Edens told reporters early this week that admission of the three would not represent a change in administration policy.

Dr. Eden did not elaborate on Duke's admission policy. It is generally known that the Methodist school does not admit Negroes.

Dr. Edens did not explain to reporters that the University had entered into a contract with the National Science Foundation to sponsor Institutes for Teachers of Science and Mathematics. He pointed out that since the foundation is a federal agency the administrative policies are controlled by the government.

Duke Urged to Drop Racial Bar In School

Dis + Opin

By DAVID MURRAY.

NEW BERN, June 27—A resolution urging Trustees of Duke University to take down racial bars at Duke Divinity School was passed here today at the closing session of the North Carolina Methodist Conference.

The resolution, introduced by the Rev. J. F. Herberts of Morehead City, asked the Trustees "to permit the admission to the Divinity School of qualified students without distinction as to race."

The resolution cited that the administration, faculty, and students of the Divinity School had already requested such action to permit any qualified student.

Discussion.

In a short discussion prior to approval of the resolution, the Rev. A. L. G. Stephenson of Stoney Point said, "I do not question the motive of those who drew up this resolution, but I think it would be a draw back to our colored friends."

The Rev. T. H. House of Harnett County told the group "I speak for this motion. Duke University is not a local institution—it is a world wide institution. We can hardly send missionaries to colored people if we are discriminating against colored people.

"We are speaking about the Divinity School," the Rev. Mr. House continued.

"On a local level, I drag my feet, but this is a world wide thing."

During the discussion, it was pointed out that Southeastern Seminary at Wake Forest had recently paved the way for Negro Ministerial students.

In part, the resolution said, "We recognize that such a change of policy involves real problems; and confess that because of these we have not for the rightly faced this issue in our conference and congregations. But we believe that, because the Divinity School is in a special sense a community committed to the Christian quest, because such a policy would bring together only graduate students pursuing a specifically Christian purpose, and because of the expressed willingness on the part of the administration, faculty, and students to undertake such a venture, the Divinity School is peculiarly fitted to lead the Church in this regard. We therfore respectfully hope the Trustees of the University will give it freedom to do so."

In other action during today's closing sessions, Bishop Roy H. Short of the Nashville, Tenn., area, spoke to the conference on strengthening the local church. The Bishop suggested that local churches study themselves and then set up goals for improvement.

"The test of the Church," he said, "is whether it brings people to him."

Recommendations concerning the conference activity with educational institutions was also approved today.

Bishop Paul N. Garber, presiding Bishop of the Richmond area, said "this has been one of the best conferences we have ever had.

"I think we have had some of the finest leaders at this conference we have ever had."

A Hymn festival commemorating the 250th anniversary of the birth of Charles Wesley featured the afternoon session while the highlight of the evening meeting was the reading of appointments by Bishop Garber.

Nelson Gibson Jr. of Gibson was appointed to serve another year as Conference Lay Leader.

District lay leaders for the coming year are: Burlington District, James F. Rogers of Burlington; Durham, Frznk Hanst of Chapel Hill; Elizabeth City, Fred Ritter of Ahoskie; Fayetteville, Terry Sanford of Fayetteville; Goldsboro, A. C. Edwards of Hookerton; New Bern, Roy Turner Jr. of Ayden; Raleigh, Herbert Ridgeway of Raleigh; Rocky Mount, E. E. Adkins of Rocky Mount; and Wilmington, A. E. Goldfinch of Tabor City.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS- AME GENERAL BOARD OF EDUCATION

11 AME Schools Get $479,478 By Church

Defender Chicago Ill, Sat. 2-2-57

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — "Through prayer, counsel and cooperation we have solved many difficult problems during the first year under our new budget system," Dr. Sherman L. Greene, jr., secretary-treasurer, Division of Educational Institutions, African Methodist Episcopal Church, told a weekend session of the AME General Board of Education here.

His annual report took note of the deaths during the year of the board's general chairman, Bishop R. J. Allen, and Dr. Charles L. Hill, president of Wilberforce university and member of the executive commission on education.

Bishop D. Ward Nichols, presiding head of the Eleventh Episcopal District of the AME church, was elected general chairman.

The "new budget" referred to in Dr. Greene's report was adopted at the church's general conference at Miami last May. It amounts to a revolutionary move in AME history, requiring readjustments on the part of every division of the church.

Dr. Greene's report listed $479,478.29 his office has disbursed to 11 AME schools between June and December, 1956.

The three top amounts went to Wilberforce university ($72,174); Morris Brown college ($64,956.92); Allen university ($64,956.92).

The remainder of the money was distributed to: Payne Theological seminary, $28,388.58; Turner Theological seminary, $4,330.48; Paul Quinn college, $56,777.20; Edward Waters college, $48,116.26; Daniel Payne college, $48,116.26; Shorter college, $32,718.96; Campbell college, $32,718.96; and Kittrell college, $26,223.35.

According to Dr. Greene's report, the schools received approximately 86 per cent of the $568,750 the Division of Educational Institutions received from AME general budget funds during the six-month period.

'56-57 PROPOSAL

The report proposed allocation for 1956-57 to the schools of $1,300,000. Wilberforce will get $165,000; Allen and Morris Brown, $150,000.

Dr. Greene placed emphasis on Paul Quinn college's need for emergency funds, "a situation made even more critical," added Dr. Greene, "as a result of the recent fire which destroyed Howard Memorial Chapel" (on Paul Quinn campus).

All of the church's bishops and general officers were in Nashville for the board session.

Other bishops who attended were: George W. Baber, first Episcopal district; F. M. Reid, second district; Joseph Gomez, fourth district; F. D. Jordan, fifth district; W. R. Wilkes, sixth district; I. H. Bonner, seventh district; R. R. Wright, jr., eighth district; C. A. Gibbs, ninth district; H. T. Primm, tenth district; E. L. Hickman, thirteenth district; and W. F. Ball.

Officials Can't Beg For Money For Founder's Day At E.W.C.

Letter p.1 Jacksonville, Fla. Sat. 2-9-57

Was Edward Waters College Sold for $32.50? 14e(1)

Yes, the College was SOLD to the Putnam Lumber Company a few years ago at a Sheriff's Sale for $32.50.

When the Administration changed, the College was bought back plus cost and interest, and then, the wrong Mortgage was Burned.

Throughout the years, there has been enough CASH money collected and put into the wrong pockets to have established at least a Ten Million Dollar Endowment Fund.

Within the past several years, it appears that some of the old 'Con' brothers have returned and revived the 'wrong-pocket' game again. This, and this alone has caused an order to be handed down from the Bishops' Council to the effect that No College Official or Teacher can solicit funds for Founder' Day.

Founder's Day of '56 was a success in one sense of the word and a failure otherwise, a big disappointment because, some of the COLD Cash did not get to to the President's office but, the reports did.

According to the Books, last year, the Printing Department did about $25,000 worth of work for the connection throughout the State but, there was a $4,000 shortage in cash.

Now, the 'Big Boys' want to BUILD an expensive Motel for visiting Bishops, Ministers, and their wives instead of improving the physical plant and paying the $1,600 grocery bill.

The late John A. Simms, who was printing instructor and athletic director, really put the college on the ball, and he was a real honest-to-goodness gentleman.

Now, Jack Daniels, who for a number of years served as dean of men, worked hard so long with the students, that he came down with a nervous break down, and now, he is BLIND but, yet he is still interested in the welfare of the college and the students, and, in his way, continues to boost the college.

Now, let's go back to Overstreet stadium. There have been enough stone blocks taken from out of the fence to build a three-story building. It is evident that some of the free-lodgers and boarders took the stone blocks and built garages.

The Founder's Day program of 1956 at the Duval County Armory was an idea of the Editor, sanctioned by President Stewart and the committee. The musical program was a huge success. Platform guests were City, County and State officials, and candidates running for office.

The Editor is not fighting the college nor is he 'hatching' up fables for headlines. He is only trying to awaken those who would like to do but, their hands are tied.

There are a lot of people who want to, and would donate to the college but, there is too much 'stink' going on.

There is a LIE being rumored that a committee composed of three preachers, called on the Editor and offered him money to stop the articles The Editor is not FOR SALE and, when he gets Good and 'Damn' ready, ready to stop the articles, he will and not before.

May 30 was Bishop Nichol's "Day"

BISHOP G. W. NICHOLS

. . . did he "axe" Dr. Stewart?

JACKSONVILLE, Fla.—May 30 was not only a national holiday, it was also Bishop D. Ward Nichols' "day" at Edward Waters College because the 24-hour period was climaxed with the "firing" of Dr. William Stewart as president of the AME-sponsored school.

Pittsburgh Pa. 5-31-57

• Dr. Stewart's "dismissal" by the college's committee of management was reportedly for "insubordination."

Informed sources say that strained relations were existent between Bishop Nichols and Dr. Stewart up to and including the time of the latter's dismissal as school president.

PERHAPS DR. STEWART "paved the way" for his dismissal in his openly frank report to the board of management of the school, which was presented to the annual meeting of the group on May 28.

In his report, Dr. Stewart had pointed to the school's progress under his administration since 1951. However, since Bishop Nichols replaced Bishop Gregg, Dr. Stewart noted in his report, "This is the first year I have been unable to confer periodically with the board of management on important issues pertaining to the current operations . . . This report is not intended to be interpreted as a resignation but rather as a factual statement of existing conditions . . ."

Edward Waters Sets Opening for Tuesday

Edward Waters College will begin its 92nd school term Tuesday. Advance registration predicts a record enrollment, which may exceed last year's total of more than 650.

Including the day and evening divisions, the daily schedule will begin at 8:30 a.m., and continue until 10 p.m., to provide for all groups in the community.

Faculty Planning Conference

The faculty will study and plan for the year work beginning Tuesday. The theme will be concerned with answering three questions: What is General Education; What are the Characteristics of the Instructional Program and What is the Relationship Between Personnel Services and Learning Efficiency?

Dr. Charles S. Davis, dean of the School of Arts and Sciences of Florida State University; Dr. Lee Henderson, assistant director, Division of Community Junior Colleges, State Department of Education, Tallahassee and Dr. B. L. Perry, dean of students, Florida A. and M. University, will serve as consultants Sept. 4.

Appearing on the opening program will be the Rev. B. J. Williams, pastor of Mt. Olive AME Church; Mrs. Mary Betsch, vice president of the Afro American Insurance Co., and a member of the Board of Management; Walter Roberson, president of the Student Council; the Rev. E. M. Hurley, pastor of Ebenezer Methodist Church, and Bishop Sherman L. Greene, chairman of the Board of Management, who will greet the faculty and staff. Music for the occasion will be presented by Miss Meltonia Cobbs and Miss Rose Lynn Harris, students at the college.

During the afternoon, President W. B. Stewart and heads of the various administrative and instructional areas, will discuss the programs with the college personnel. In attendance also will be J. Theodore Johnson of the Chamber of Commerce, who will present pertinent facts relative to Jacksonville.

Freshmen Orientation Week

Freshmen Orientation Week, under supervision of the Rev. James I. King, will begin Sept. 9. All freshmen have been requested to register at this time. Entrance examinations, health examinations and programs designed to acquaint the new students with the college have been arranged.

General registration for sophomores, evening school students and other groups will be held Sept. 16. Classes will begin Sept. 17.

President Stewart announced the teachers returning are: James A. Espy, dean, B.S., M.A., University of Minnesota; Amy H. King, communication, A. B., M. Litt. University of Pittsburgh; Leonard F. ELIZABETH CITY, N. C. — After more than 60 years as a strictly teacher-training institution, the Elizabeth City State Teachers College, beginning with its fall session, will expand its program of education to include several trades. This new program culminates the efforts on the part of the faculty and board of trustees over a period of years to provide, in addition to the teaching program, training for those persons who do not wish to be teachers.

The recent General Assembly, upon the advice of the North Carolina Board of Higher Education has authorized the Elizabeth City State Teachers College to begin trade courses with the opening of the institution in September. Terminal courses in cosmetology, commercial education, brick masonry, cabinet making, electronics and pre-nursing will be offered. Students completing the courses will be issued certificates. Certified students will be aided in securing employment by the campus placement bureau.

LONG NOTED for its thoroughness in training elementary school teachers who are unusually successful, the local college will continue to maintain this high quality of work in its teacher-training program. Likewise, it is expected that those entering the trades will meet the same high standards of quality. The institution will train craftsmen who will be proficient in their work.

In addition to the new program of trades, the college will begin a liberal arts program for those who desire a college education, but do not wish to teach. Courses in English, mathematics, science, foreign languages and social studies will be stressed.

STUDENTS enrolling in the facilities usually associated with college life. Modern dormitories provide a home-like atmosphere. The campus, well kept, is beautiful and provides a wholesome environment for healthful living. Athletics and recreation will b estressed for all students.

For students who are interested in dramatics and aesthetic dancing, ample opportunities are provided for participation in these worthwhile activities.

A. U. Charter Day Convocation Today

14e(1)

Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president [illegible] University, will speak at Atlanta University Charter Day Convocation today at 11:00 a. m. in Sisters Chapel, Spelman College campus. Dr. Wright assumed his duties at Fisk this year after serving as president of Winfield State College and before that as dean of the faculty at Hampton Institute.

Atlanta University marks this year the ninetieth anniversary of the granting of its charter which it received from the Fulton Superior Court two years after instruction began in 1865.

The new members of the faculty will be honored at the Charter Day Dinner in the evening. President Rufus E. Clement will preside at the dinner. Mrs. Hallie B. Brooks of the School of Library Service will introduce the new members of the faculty, who are, Miss Barbara Baskerville, School of Social Work; William W. Bennett, Librarian; Dr. Horace Mann Bond, guest professor of education and acting dean of the School of Education; Mrs. Harriet Chisholm, Oglethorpe Demonstration School; Dr. Lonnie Cross, department of mathematics; Mrs. Carolyn W. Ford, School of Library Service; Myron Johnson, School of Education, and Dr. John Reid, department of sociology.

Set Up Workshop 3 Years Ago

Defender, Chicago, Ill.
Sat 11-30-57

NASHVILE, Tenn. — Since the launching of the first Russian earth satellite, Americans have been "up in the air" over an apparent lag in this country's development of scientists.

Back in 1954, however, Fisk university launched a "down to earth" workshop for high school science teachers. This workshop paved the way for Fisk's being chosen by the National Science Foundation as one of 15 leading colleges and universities in the nation to operate foundation-financed in-service training programs for high school teachers of science.

14e(1)

The Fisk program is called "Basic Concepts in Chemistry" and meets for three hours every Saturday. Teachers come from cities and towns as far away as 130 miles for the course which can be credited toward a graduate degree.

"Basic Concepts in Chemistry" is a sort of mental sandpaper, as Dr. Samuel P. Massie, Director of the program, puts it.

"Most of the people who attend the course," he said, "have been out of school 10 to 15 years and, in many cases, the new developments in chemistry during those years have passed them by. All have expressed a definite need for the program."

Explaining that the program involves studies in mathematics as well as chemistry, Dr. Massie said, "We place great emphasis on mathematics. Working with these people has shown that many are, frankly, just plain rusty in math. And you cannot teach science without being a mathematician."

A great deal of consideration has been given to expanding the in-service program to include elementary teachers, the chemistry professor said. He pointed out that about the only factor standing in the way is the matter of financing.

"We believe the fundamental trouble, the fundamental cause for the shortage of scientists and science teachers is in the elementary school," he said. "So many students never get started in either science or mathematics because too many of our teachers are not familiar enough with math and science and consequently make them out to be hard, difficult and unusual subjects."

Dr. Massie said much of the blame for this situation must rest on the shoulders of scientists themselves.

"By making the subjects of science, which are really commonplace, appear mystical and mysterious, we may have created a monster in the eyes of young people and frightened them away from these subjects," he said.

"But regardless of this fact, the average elementary school teacher has just a smattering of science when he leaves college," he said. "This is a situation we can improve greatly by starting an in-service program for them."

The present program for high school teachers is financed by a $4,750 grant from the National Science Foundation, making it possible for teachers to enroll at no cost and to receive funds with which to travel back and forth to Fisk.

FISK UNIVERSITY

Funny Business at Fisk

Courier Sat. 5-18-57

There is something definitely wrong at Fisk University when its students are deprived of the instruction of two highly capable professors, Drs. R. W. and Gertrude F. Rempfer, because they took the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation decision seriously and sent their four children to nearby "Negro" schools.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

It seems that they also made the "mistake" of becoming prominent in the Nashville fight for integration, and the two "errors" led to their dismissal, whereupon their department head, Dr. Nelson Fuson, resigned.

Sat. 5-18-57

Singularly enough the dismissal of the teachers, both white, was recommended by now-deceased Negro President Charles S. Johnson, and with his passing the interim committee, headed by trustee Ferris Bailey, a white Nashville lawyer, refused to reconsider the action.

When Mr. Bailey rose to speak to the student body recently, he was drowned out by group singing.

While we cannot condone the rudeness of the students, we certainly cannot condone either this action of the trustees which penalizes professors for trying to uphold the law of the land.

These dismissals would be reprehensible in any college or university, but are inexcusably outrageous in an institution dedicated to the education of Negro youth.

The very least the trustees can now do to make amends is to reinstate the Rempfers and urge Dr. Fuson to return before the Association of University Professors compels them to do so.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.— In a brief ceremony following commencement exercises at Fisk, a plaque honoring Dr. Robert Rempfer, recently ousted Fisk professor, was given him by student members of NAACP.

The presentation was made by E. Wellington Butts, student NAACP president, in appreciation of Dr. Rempfer's years with the student group as a faculty sponsor.

Dr. Rempfer, who has subscribed to a Life Membership in NAACP, and Mrs. Rempfer who are white and who were principals in the recent successful NAACP effort to desegregate the Nashville public schools, have just been dismissed from Fisk for next year.

Dr. Stephen Wright Will Be 2nd Negro Chosen For Part

Native Of Dillon, S. C., Gets Unanimous Approval Of Famed Institution's Trustee Board; Is Graduate Of Hampton And Holds Degrees From Howard And NYU.; Expects To Emphasize Natural Science Studies

14e(1)

Although it was being widely speculated with regard to who would be elected president of Fisk University as the successor of Dr. Charles S. Johnson it turns out that the trustee board, in the final analysis came up with a unanimous verdict on a man. He is Dr. Stephen Wright who has been president of Bluefield State College, located in Bluefield, West Virginia, and one of the two state colleges the state has created for the education of colored students.

The other college is the well known West Virginia State College which has had a long and enviable history. West Virginia state was one of the first of such colleges to get aboard the integration band wagon. It opened its doors for the reception of white students more than two years ago and is reported to be getting along admirably.

Ky. State Next in Line

Possibly the next Negro State College due to go in for integration in a big way will be Kentucky State located at Frankfort and having quite a long list of prominent alumni, who have been working hard to keep Ky. State in operation. There had been talk of closing the school and leaving the students free to attend the University of Kentucky which is not more than 30 miles from Frankfort at Lexington.

Among the well known graduates of Kentucky State is the late Dr. John E. Wood, who was a brilliant political leader of his state, newspaper editor, the pastor of the First Baptist Church, Danville, Ky., at the time of his death more than 25 years ago, he was President of the National Baptist Convention of America.

Rev. Wood's brother, also a Kentucky State Alumnus, was the head of the colored schools of Baltimore for many years, after leaving the presidency of Kentucky State. He was Dr. Francis M. Wood. He was head of the Baltimore colored schools about the time Thurgood Marshall was a student. The college traces its history back more than 70 years. The present president, Dr. R. B. Atwood has been there close to 30 years. The college, in its earlier years, quite famous for its baseball prowess, in its rivalries with Wilberforce and West Virginia State in later years became national champions in football under Coach Henry Arthur Kean, who later became coach of the "Tigers" of Tennessee State, another array of national champions. Kean was a native Kentuckian but an alumnus of Fisk University as is Dr. R. B. Atwood, who also received considerable mention as a possible president of Fisk.

2nd Colored Prexy

Young Dr. Stephen Wright, the second colored President of Fisk is an alumnus of Hampton Institute, and is only 46. He will gladden the hearts of all NAACP enthusiasts, as a result of his early advocacy of equal pay for qualified colored colored teachers. Famed Charles Houston, former dean of Howard University is said to have used the equal pay lawsuit of Prof. Stephen Wright as the entering wedge for similar lawsuits all over the South. They were successfully conducted by Thurgood Marshall and his associates following the untimely death of Mr. Houston.

Dr. Wright can claim close "kinship" with most of the best educated Negroes of these times. Born in Dillon S. C., one must concede he came up the hard way in getting his early education. He went on from there to acquire his bachelor's degree at Hampton Institute, next his master's degree at Howard University, and finally his doctorate at New York University.

He has had considerable experience in teaching and has been honored with the presidency of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. He thinks that increased enrollments will enable Fisk to be more selective in future enrollments. He sees a great need for strengthening courses of study in the natural sciences because of the ease that schools for higher education experience in getting financial assistance. He is "sold" on the idea of preserving such noted schools as Fisk and Morehouse, not withstanding all being said about closing them because of integration.

He has announced that he expects to take over his duties as the new Fisk President, the first of July.

Dr. Wright was even more fortunate than was Dr. Charles S. Johnson, in that he was elected with the concurrence of all members of Board of Trustee, that is Northerners and Southerners of both races.

FISK UNIVERSITY SAFE CRACKED FOR $83,000

Cash Missing, Checks Found In Ditch Near Carthage

NASHVILLE, Sept. 18.—(UP) —Safecrackers raided a Fisk University safe Tuesday night, making off with $83,000 in cash and checks that came in during registration day at the school.

A few hours later a farmer in Smith County, Tenn., found $75,135 in checks and money orders in a money box and a paper sack in a ditch near Carthage.

Memphis Press

Officials at the Negro University said the loot included at least $16,796 in cash and $66,362 in checks. Another $38,000 in checks was dropped by the bandits as they fled the college business office.

Police and school officials called the robbery the work of "professionals."

I. T. Creswell, comptroller at the University, said the large amount of money in the safe was "exceptional."

"We usually don't keep that much on hand," he said, "but the students were just coming in to register Tuesday and paid their entrance fees."

"I'm almost certain the burglars knew of the large registration day we had and the money and checks in the safe," he said.

He said the loss was insured.

Entrance to the business office was made through a window and the thieves knocked off the dial lock.

Creswell said it was the first safe robery in his 34 years at the school.

The robbery was not discovered until after the checks were found in Smith County. Sheriff Sidney Harper of Smith County notified Nashville police who checked with Fisk officials. They went to the business office and discovered the robbery.

$90,000 Stolen From Fisk Univ.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Fisk University Accountant D. D. Hawkins discovered that a large safe in his office had been broken into and more than $90,000 in cash and checks stolen.

Courier P. 3 Sat. 9-28-57

Local police officers recovered some $70,000 in checks on Highway 70 near Carthage, later that afternoon, atop a rock in plain view of the highway. One of the checks was reportedly for $10,000, according to Detectives C. E. Stewart and C. O. Robinson. They said the job seemed to be the work of professionals.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Mr. Hawkins said the unusually large amount of money on hand was due to the registration of more than 700 Fisk students last week. Police are still investigating the robbery. Lone clue is a 1956 car reportedly seen before the robbery.

$90,000 Robbery At Fisk University

NASHVILLE, Tenn — (SNS) — Fisk University in Nashville, Tenn. was robbed of more than $90,000 in checks and cash on Wednesday morning, the night city editor of the Nashville Tennessean newspaper reported to the World by telegram Thursday.

Editor Phil Sullivan said the robbery was discovered by D. D. Hawkins, accountant for the University when he went into his office at about 8:05 a. m. The money was stored in a six-and-a-half foot high safe located in a small room adjacent to the Registration office in the Administration Building.

$75,000 FOUND

Nashville police found $75.000 in checks atop a rock on Highway 70 near Carthage, Tenn., late Wednesday. Carthage is about 50 miles east of Nashville. The money was in plain view of the highway, it was reported. The checks were turned over to the Nashville late.

One of the checks found in a black metal box along the highway was reportedly for $10,000, Sullivan said.

Police reported spotting a 1956 model car near the campus early Wednesday before the surprising robbery. Late Thursday police and Nashville Detectives had not turned up any evidence on the identification of the robbers.

Detectives C. E. Stewart and C. O. Robinson said the robbery appeared to be the work of professionals.

"It was as clean a job as I've ever seen, "Stewart was quoted as saying.

Accountant Hawkins found a window open in the small room in which the safe was located when he arrived Wednesday morning, according to I. T. Creswell, school Comptroller.

Hawkins said the stolen money was an unusual amount for the school to have on hand. He added that it was due to the registration of about 700 students Tuesday.

Nashville authorities were still investigating the robbery late Thursday.

When the question was put before him later in his one-day visit to Kansas City, he said that the reports were "newspaper talk."

Over 40 Candidates Considered

Picking Fisk U. President Becomes Nat'l Problem

Courier Sat. 3-16-57 P. 6

14 e (1)

By ROGER DIDIER

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Fisk University's campus buzzes quietly these days about prospective candidates, or nominees, for the presidency of the institution. Some "40-odd" candidates are rumored to have thrown their applications into the hopper from which a leader may (or may not) be selected for Fisk's "new look" program.

A small committee of the board of trustees has been appointed to consider all applications and, eventually, to make nominations to the full board. So far, this committee is said to have reported "no progress."

Members of the committee are Dr. Philip Widenhouse, chairman; Dr. John Hope Franklin and L. Howard Bennett.

The committee has not only been directly approached by a number of applicants, but has received a number of suggestions from friends of men who have not applied.

When the executive committee of the board of trustees met in February, it is not believed that the nominating committee passed along any names.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

THERE HAVE been four names mentioned prominently. They are:

DR. JOHN HOPE FRANKLIN, head of the history department at Brooklyn College;

DR. IRA deA. REID, professor of sociology at Haverford College;

WILLIAM TRENT, director of the United Negro College Fund, and

ROBERT S. WEAVER, rent administrator for the state of New York and executive for the John Hay Whitney Fund.

BOTH DR. Franklin and Dr. Reid are said to have removed themselves from consideration.

Mr. Trent, when questioned by this writer in New York, was smilingly non-committal about "all this newspaper talk."

Dr. Weaver is reported to have told a friend that he had spent most of his life trying to get to New York and was not prepared to leave now.

INTERESTINGLY enough, one hears on Fisk campus the story that there are several members of the board of trustees who are angling for the appointment. This is probably untrue. If it is true, there is little sentiment on the campus for any board member.

Alumni, faculty and students all believe that Fisk is on the threshold of a great new day. There is much talk of a new program for the new times. They feel that the new president must be a man who can lead into the future.

That is one of the reasons that a majority of the alumni talked to and a majority of the faculty think the man selected should be the best qualified man for the post without regard to color.

Some thoughtful persons on Fisk campus believe that several of the men whose names have been bandied about have the necessary qualifications. When you ask them what the qualifications should be, they say:

"Of course, whoever is selected should have a certain measure of diplomacy and academic prestige, but most important are integrity and courage."

The Rempfers

Afro American

Fisk University is about to lose two of its ablest teachers. They are Robert Weir Rempfer and his wife, Gertrude Fleming Rempfer.

Sat. 4-27-57

Mr. Rempfer, associate professor of mathematics, holds a doctorate in this field from the University of Illinois, has worked with the Atomic Energy Commission and has done considerable research in applied mathematics.

Mrs. Rempfer, associate professor of physics, holds a doctorate in this field from the University of Washington, has served as consulting physicist for the Aircraft-Marine Products, Inc., and presently is doing research on the development of a mass spectrometer.

Both are well qualified, extremely competent teachers in subjects where admittedly there is a shortage in even the larger universities.

Baltimore, Md.

Why has Fisk seen fit not to renew their contracts?

Hold on to your seats; the answer will stun you.

14 e (1)

The Rempfers who are white, made the "mistake" of attempting to enroll their four children in the school nearest their residence, which happened to be colored.

They are also among the plaintiffs in the successful NAACP suit to integrate Nashville schools.

For this bold effort to abide by the law of the land, they are to be sacrificed on the altar of the great god, jim crow.

Their dismissal was recommended by President Charles Johnson and now that he is dead, the Interim Committee, headed by Ferris Bailey, a Nashville lawyer, appears determined to follow through.

We hope the Fisk board of trustees which meets April 26 to chose a new president, will pause long enough to correct this rank injustice for the good of the students, for the good of the school and for the good of the community.

By VICTOR GRANT BACKUS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — For four days next week, Fisk University will be host to an assemblage of eminent figures from the world of music, literature, art, religion and industry, and to hundreds of alumni and guests. The occasion is Fisk's 28th annual spring festival of music and art.

The festival will be opened officially on April 25 by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott leader, who has become a symbol of the struggle in the South for racial equality.

King was elected yast year by Fisk alumni to receive the first Fisk Distinguished Service Award.

• Following the Rev. Mr. King's address, an exhibition of paintings and wood sculpture by the Nigerian artist, Ben Enwonwu, will be opened by Mary Beattie Brady, director of the Harmon Foundation, New York City.

On the evening of April 25, the Fisk Jubilee Singers will give their first concert since their return from an eight-week goodwill tour of nine European countries. They will be directed by John W. Work, the noted composer-arranger-author, who heads Fisk's department of music.

THREE FAMOUS names will share the spotlight on April 26. In the morning, Carl Rowan of the Minneapolis Tribune will chair one of the several festive seminars that have been scheduled for the four-day celebration.

In the afternoon, Robert Hayden will conduct a seminar on creative writing. Hayden is associate professor of English at Fisk.

• Robert McFerrin, Metropolitan opera baritone, will give the principal festival concert on the evening of April 26.

On April 27, the Fisk Stagecrafters will present "The Girl From Samos" by Ida Ehrlich, which was reconstructed from a fragment by Menander, the Greek comic dramatist of the fourth century B. C. The production will be under the direction of Dr. Lillian Voorhees, chairman of Fisk's drama department.

• That evening, Pulitzer Prize Winner Mark Van Doren delivers the annual Hillman-Fisk lecture.

The Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, retired dean of chapel and professor emeritus in the Federated Theological faculty, University of Chicago, will deliver the sermon at the worship service on April 28. That afternoon, students in the music department will give a recital, and in the evening the Fisk choir will be heard in a memorial concert for the late president of the university, Dr. Charles S. Johnson.

The entire choir concert will be devoted to Brahms' requiem, and will be directed by Harry von Bergen, with Arthur R. Croley at the organ.

NASHVILLE—Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Bluefield State college, was elected seventh president of Fisk university Saturday. He succeeds the late Dr. Charles S. Johnson.

14e(1)

The announcement of Dr. Wright's appointment was made at a convocation of students and faculty.

Wright, 46, a native of Dillon, S. C., received a bachelor degree from Hampton Institute, master's degree from Howard university, and doctor of philosophy from New York university.

FORMER DEAN

Before his appointment as president of Bluefield State in 1953, he had been for eight years professor of education and dean of faculty at Hampton.

Dr. Wright has held administrative posts at North Carolina college at Durham, and in the public school systems of Centreville and Upper Marlboro, Md.

He served on a special investigating committee of the Virginia State board of education, and was a witness on educational problems in Durham and Wilmington.

WRITES ARTICLES

Dr. Wright, who is associate editor of the Journal of Educational Sociology, has authored numerous articles for professional education journals.

He is president of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes, former executive member of the American Conference of Academic Deans and the National Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars.

The Fisk trustees also elected Rev. Philip W. Widenhouse, executive secretary of the American Missionary association, as board chairman.

Fiskites Lash Column!

Courier p. 7

Pittsburgh, Pa.

THE TWO letters printed below disagree with a recent column on Fisk University.

Dear Mr. Ratcliffe:

In your column "Behind the Headlines," in the March 30 issue of your paper, entitled "A President for Fisk," you made several rash statements that I do not feel are true in any respect. First of all, you stated that Fisk a few months ago was begging for publicity and that the great days of our Jubilee Singers were over. Have you forgotten the recent tour of the singers? And the way in which they were accepted and sought after in Europe? Your paragraph concerning the dire need of dynamic leadership and that morale among students is not good, was quite true. But as far as Mr. King (Martin Luther King Jr.) capturing the imagination of students here at Fisk, I can freely say that this is untrue. The majority of students here know little more about Mr. King than what they have picked up through conversing on the Montgomery bus boycott, which is hardly enough to convince anyone that Mr. King is capable of handling the job of president. We do, however, respect the fact that Mr. King is a well-educated man. It is really amazing how you can print sides and opinions of Fisk students taken in matters, when they don't really know themselves.

Very truly yours,

GEORGE CODRINGTON PRYCE JR.
Sophomore, Fisk University,
Nashville, Tenn.

Dear Mr. Ratcliffe:

I would like to give you a direct quote from my 10-year-old son.

He said, "Mama, that article about Grandpa (Dr. Charles Johnson, late president of Fisk) isn't very complimentary. In fact, it is insulting."

I hope this is not the way Fiskites and members of my immediate family are feeling all around this great country of ours.

For many reasons, I have followed your career with much interest and, at some points, admiration. This article is not up to your usual standard. I do not wish to be blunt, but I do wish to be frank.

There is more to good journalism than just being sensational. In your article "A President for Fisk U.," you have not done my father nor yourself justice.

Very sincerely,

Fisk Student Protests Are Explained!!

Sat. 5-11-57

Pittsburgh, Pa.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Recent student demonstrations at Fisk University were described as protests against (1) those members of the university board of trustees who practice segregation and oppose integration, and (2) the "firing" by the administration of two professors.

There were two demonstrations and both were staged in "orderly" manner.

The first occurred in the university chapel, April 26, after the retiring chairman of the board of trustees, Leonard M. Reiser of Chicago, had announced that Dr. Stephen J. Wright, president of Bluefield State College in West Virginia, will be the new president of Fisk. (Dr. Wright succeeds Dr. Charles Johnson, first Negro president of the university, who died last October).

•Students began singing The Alma Mater when Ferriss Bailey of Nashville, member of the board of trustees and chairman of the Interim Committee which has been operating the school since Dr. Johnson's death, attempted to speak after the announcement that selection of the new president had been made.

Apparently, Bailey thought he remained standing until the stu- was being serenaded because he dents had finished singing the song. When he attempted to speak the second time, the students opened up with The Alma Mater again.

Bailey finally understood what was going on and returned to his seat.

THE SECOND demonstration came after students left the chapel. They rallied in behalf of a man and wife teaching team both of whom had been notified that they would not be members of the Fisk faculty next fall.

The two professors are Dr. Robert Rempfer, associate professor in the mathematics department, and Dr. Gertrude Rempfer, acting chairman of the physics department at Fisk.

•Since the Rempfers received notification of their dismissals, Dr. Nelson Fuson, chairman of the physics department at Fisk and now on leave at the University of Bordeaux in France, notified the university that he is resigning his administrative position in protest of action taken against the Rempfers.

New President for Fisk Named by Board Chairman

State Press Little Rock, Arkansas

Sat. 5-3-57

NASHVILLE—(ANP)—The new president of Fisk university will be Dr. [redacted] president of Bluefield State college. The announcement of the succession to the presidency of Dr. Charles S. Johnson, which has been awaited by the entire educational world, was made before a packed convocation of suspense-filled students and faculty members on Friday.

P. 8

Retiring board chairman Leonard M. Reiser of Chicago read the Board's decision, which had been made after a country-wide search for an educator capable of stepping into the great void left by the sudden passing of former President Johnson.

Dr. Wright, who is 46 and a native of Dillon, South Carolina, has had wide training and experience. He holds a B. A. from Hampton institute, M. A. from Howard university, and Ph. D. from New York university. He has been president of Bluefield since 1953.

Previously, for eight years, Dr. Wright had been professor of education and dean of faculty at Hampton institute. He has held administrative posts also at North Carolina college, Durham and the public schools at Centerville and Upper Marlboro, Maryland.

Dr. Wright has served on special investigation committees for the Virginia State Board of Education, and as an expert witness on educational problems for both Durham and Wilmington, Delaware.

He is the author of numerous articles in professional education journals, and has been editor of the Journal of Educational Sociology since 1949.

He is a former president of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools for Negroes and of the Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society. He is a former member of the executive committees of the American Conference of Academic Deans and National Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars.

No announcement has been made as yet when the new president of Fisk will take over his duties at the historic Nashville institution.

New Fisk President

Afro American

In Stephen J. Wright, Fisk University has selected for its president a young man of vision and vigor.

As first dean at Hampton Institute, then president of Bluefield State College, he demonstrated that he not only is an excellent administrator, but more importantly, a sound academician.

While not decrying the emphasis currently being placed on technical and scientific study, Dr. Wright feels that this trend should not overshadow the humanities.

Sat. 5-11-57

He contends, and we think properly, that both are important.

P. 4

A knowledge of history, literature and the arts is basic even to young people who would pursue careers in fields considered purely technical.

The July 1 date he has set for assuming his new post is none too early.

From all reports we have received, Fisk is in turmoil. It is badly in need of a strong guiding hand which we are confident Dr. Wright will give.

Faculty morale is at low point.

The student body has become so disturbed by recent events it was driven to the rude practice of singing the alma mater while a thoroughly disliked trustee was attempting to speak.

This is an unhappy state of affairs on any campus and for a school of Fisk's stature it borders on the tragic.

We hope that the new president will quickly put the situation back on an even keel.

Baltimore, Md.

Only 46, Dr. Wright, no compromiser on any of the issues fundamental to equality, freedom and human dignity, has many, many years of useful and dedicated work ahead.

A President for Fisk U.

. . . desk open

JUST A few months ago, Fisk University of Nashville, Tenn., was begging for publicity. The great days of Fisk's famous Jubilee Singers and powerful football teams were no more. The novelty of having its first Negro president had faded in the minds of the public. It's one remaining good feature, other than its high educational standards, was that Fisk still offered desirable young ladies the chance to latch onto well-qualified males.

But, now, the once publicity-hungry Fisk U. is back in the news again. She's making the headlines because of the excitement that goes along with the election of a new president for the university. Trustees, who will select the new president, are in a dither because most of the students, faculty and graduates are demanding that the next boss of Fisk be a leader and administrator as well as an educator.

. . . he's wanted

ALL OF this excitement began last fall when Dr. Charles Johnson, president of the university and a scholar, dropped dead. His death was quite shocking because most of the plans for the "new" Fisk were in Dr. Johnson's mind. One of the late Dr. Johnson's faults, if it can be called a fault, was that he operated the university pretty much like a one-man organization, with virtually no delegation of power.

Campus gossip says Fisk is in dire need of dynamic leadership. It also says that campus morale is not too good among students or faculty; that the faculty turnover is too great, and that old and powerful faculty cliques should be done away with (if that is possible).

R. WEAVER
. . . supported

DR. BUNCHE
. . not interested

DR. FRANKLIN
. . . doesn't want

DR. REID
. . . he's liked

THE BOYS who make presidents threw out their net for Dr. Ralph Bunche in their first try at landing a top figure for the Fisk presidency, but Bunche did a quick sidestep. Then they tried for the noted New York educator, Dr. John Hope Franklin, but he acted like he wasn't interested.

Then there was some talk of trying to snare another noted educator, Dr. Ira De A. Reid, and Bob Weaver, the New York housing man who once was a member of FDR's "Black Cabinet." Weaver appears interested, and he has a powerful group pulling for him.

AS MENTIONED here last week, the darkhorse in the presidential picture is Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., a Ph.D. from Boston University, a Morehouse College man, and the successful leader of the Montgomery (Ala.) bus boycott. Sentiment for King is mounting steadily among students and faculty.

The youthful Dr. King seems to have captured the imagination of the whole institution, including a number of people in high places. It is not known, of course, whether King would consider giving up his work in Montgomery, but there are many at Fisk who believe he could be induced to take the job and are convinced he is the man capable of handling it.

BIGGEST PROBLEM of King's supporters will be to convince the board of trustees. It is felt in some quarters that he may be considered too radical for the predominantly white, big-money board members. There is little doubt that he would be opposed by the three powerful white trustees in Nashville. However, they are hopeful that a majority of the board can be convinced that King is their man of the hour.

Fisk ready to erect $855,000 buildings

Pittsburgh Courier 4-14

Baltimore Md.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Plans for the construction of two additional buildings on the Fisk University campus have been announced by the university's interim administrative committee.

Sat. 4-13-57

These buildings are part of the $1,750,000 reorganization plan envisioned by the late President Charles S. Johnson and carried forward since his sudden death last October by the interim administration.

The new buildings will be erected at a combined cost of $855,000 and are being financed by a loan from the Communities Facilities Administration.

ONE OF THE PROPOSED buildings is a dormitory to house 150 students. Tentative plans adapt it for coeducational usage. This would become the first coeducational dormitory on Fisk's campus and one of the few of its kind in the nation.

The building would have separate wings for men and women, but common lounges and foyers. It would be used as a coeducational housing unit primarily during summer workshops and conferences, but would provide flexible housing accommodations during the regular school term also.

Significant economies in operating costs are expected to be realized with this new type of dormitory, it was revealed by Isaiah T. Creswell, university comptroller.

THE SECOND BUILDING will be a combined dining hall and student union. Its main dining room will accommodate 600 persons. It will house all food services for the campus, a bookstore, a post office, a snack bar, student lounges and office space for student organizations.

Both buildings will probably have air conditioning and will incorporate many recent advances in educational architecture. Work will begin about July 1 and the buildings are expected to be ready for occupancy by September 1958.

$855,000 loan granted Fisk U.

Pittsburgh Courier 4-14

Sat. 4-13-57

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — Fisk University Wednesday received approval from Commissioner John C. Hazeltine of the Community Facilities Administration of a loan of $855,000 for construction of a dormitory for 150 men students and a student center and dining hall to seat 600.

The dormitory will include two apartments for faculty members.

Baltimore Md.

The university reported that 50 prospective students were unable to enroll last fall because of lack of dormitory accommodations.

The present dining facilities were designed for a student body of 350 and are located in a girl's dormitory. The new dining hall will be more centrally located for the entire campus and will feed almost twice as many.

In addition to the dining hall, the student center will include lounges, recreation rooms, a snack bar, a book store and meeting rooms.

Dr. Stephen Wright New Fisk President

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Bluefield president since 1953

Sat. 5-4-57 p. 1

(Special to the AFRO)

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Stephen J. Wright, president of Bluefield State College, was elected president of Fisk University, here, Friday.

The announcement of his election as successor to the late President Charles S. Johnson was made before a packed convocation of suspense - filled students and faculty members by retiring board chairman, Leonard M, Rieser of Chicago.

Dr. Wright, who is 46, is a native of Dillon, South Carolina, and has been president of Bluefield State College since 1953.

SPEAKING FROM his campus residence in Bluefield, W. Va., Dr. Wright told the AFRO Sunday he expects to take over his new position at Fisk shortly after July 1.

"I was highly pleased at receiving the appointment," he said, "and I hope that I will live up to my responsibilities.

Admitting that he had been approached earlier this year, Dr. Wright declared, "I had no idea as to whom would be selected."

HE DECRIED the widely expressed belief of some educators that integration would spell the doom of private colleges such as Fisk University.

DR. S. J. WRIGHT
. Named Fisk's 7th president

"I firmly believe in the kind of education system that Fisk is carrying on," he asserted.

"I believe in the future of colleges like Fisk, Morehouse, Lincoln, and despite the present furor over integration, they will stand the test of time."

The sharp increase in college enrollments was seen by Dr. Wright as giving schools like Fisk an opportunity of being even more selective in their admission requirements.

"I AM extremely interested," he said, "in seeing that the resources of the university are put to the best possible use."

Afro-American

The new closed-circuit television program just introduced at Fisk will be continued and enlarged upon, he said.

The program allows Fisk students to be "exposed" to top flight lecturers and specialists in many fields, they otherwise would not be able to hear, Dr. Wright explained.

Sat. 5-4-57

"I SEE a great need in all of our schools for strengthening courses of study in the natural sciences," he said, adding that because of industrial interest it is always easier to receive financial aid in this field than it is for the humanities."

But both science and the humanities are of equal importance in a well-rounded institution, Fisk's new president believes.

Dr. Wright is well remembered in Maryland as one of the first plaintiffs during the initial attack through the courts on unequal teachers' salaries.

HE WAS teaching at Upper Marlboro, Md., at the time and his suit, filed by the late Charles Houston, then special counsel for the NAACP, set the pattern for a flood of suits throughout the South.

As a result, he was blacklisted as a teacher in Maryland, but salaries were equalized.

Dr. Wright holds a bachelor's degree from Hampton Institute; earned his master's at Howard University and was awarded his doctorate by New York University.

Before going to Bluefield he was, for eight years, professor of education and dean of faculty at Hampton Institute.

He has also held administrative posts at North Carolina College, Durham, and taught in the public school system of Centreville and Upper Marlboro.

* * *

HE SERVED on a special investigation committee of the Virginia State Board of Education, also as an expert witness on educational problems in Durham and Wilmington, N.C., and Wilmington Delaware.

Dr. Wright is the author of numerous articles in professonal education journals. He has been associate editor since 1945 of the Journal of Educational Sociology.

He is a former president of the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools and of Alpha Kappa Mu Honor Society, a former member of the executive committees of the American Conference of Academic Deans and National Association of Collegiate Deans and Registrars.

No announcement has been made as yet when the new president of Fisk will take over his duties at the historic Nashville institution.

The trustees also elected the Rev. Philip M. Widenhouse executive secretary American Missionary Association, chairman of the board.

Angry students 'sing' down Fisk U. trustee

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Five hundred Fisk students stood up and sang their school hymn here Friday, drowning out Ferris Bailey, white Nashville trustee, when he stood up to speak.

Sat. 5-4-57

Mr. Bailey, who is serving as interim committee chairman, until the new president, Dr. Stephen Wright, takes office did not understand the action of the students.

He tried to speak again after the students had sung one verse and sat down. The students stood up again and drowned out his remarks with song.

He made no further effort to speak.

* * *

CAMPUS OBSERVERS said the student body was angered by three things, for which they blamed Bailey:

1. He had refused to reconsider the discharge of Dr. Robert Rempfer, associate professor of mathematics and his wife, Dr. Gertrude Rempfer, associate professor of physics.

2. He had ignored the suggestion of Dr. Nelson Fuson, chairman of the department of physics, that the Rempfers be retained, causing Dr. Fuson to resign his administrative duties at the University.

3. He is a member of the Davidson (Tenn.) County school board which unanimously adopted the policy of continued segregation of public schools, despite the Supreme Court decision.

Afro-American

FOLLOWING the demonstration, Dr. John Hope Franklin, alumni trustee and chairman of the history department, Brooklyn College, chided the students for their "rudeness" to his fellow trustee, Mr. Bailey.

His remarks were greeted with a sprinkling of applause.

The Rempfers, who are white, had been notified that their contract would not be renewed after June, after they had attempted to enroll their children in school nearest Fisk University.

The school happened to be Pearl St., which is attended by colored children.

The later became plaintiffs in the successful NAACP suit to integrate Nashville public schools.

Sat. 5-4-57

WHITE SOUTHERN members of the Fisk trustee board became outraged and demanded their dismissal.

Curiously enough, the day before the demonstration, the students had listened to a stirring address by Dr. Martin Luther King, leader of the Montgomery bus boycott.

Dr. King did not deal with campus issues.

Fisk Music Festival To Last Four Days Beginning April 25

Dr. Martin Luther King Of Montgomery, Ala. "Boycott Fame" To Open Celebration; It Will Be 25th Observance Of Big Event; John W. Work, Head Of Music Department Will Direct Jubilee Singers; Just Returned From Abroad

By Victor Grant Backus

LOCAL—

For four days next week, Fisk University will be host to an assemblage of eminent figures from the world of music, literature, art, religion and industry, and to hundreds of alumni and guests. The occasion is Fisk's twenty eighth annual spring festival of music and art.

The festival will be opened officially on April 25 by the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., Montgomery (Ala) bus boycott leader who has become a symbol of the struggle in the South for racial equality. King was elected last year by Fisk alumni to receive the first Fisk Distinguish Servce Award, which carries with it an honorarium $500, and was cited as "the emoddiment of the spirit of the New Negro." He has spoken at Fisk four times previously before enthusastic audiences.

Following the Rev. King's address, an exhibition of paintings and wood sculpture by the Nigerian artist, Ben Enwonwu, will be opened by Miss Beatrice B. Brady, director of the Harmon Foundation, New York City. Enwonwu has previously exhibited in London, Paris, New York, Boston and Washington, and has been honored for his work by Queen Elizabeth II.

On the evening of April 25, the Fisk Jubilee Singers will give their first concert since their return from nine European countries. They will be directed by John W. Work, the noted composer-arranger-author who heads Fisk's department of music.

Thre famous names will share the spotlight on April 26. In the morning, Carl Rowan of the Minneapolis Tribune will chair one of the several festival seminars that have been scheduled for the four-day celebration. Last year, at the age of 30, he became the only newspaperman ever to win three consecutive awards from Sigma Delta Chi, the nation's foremost professional journalistic organization. He is the author of South of Freedom, The Pitiful and the Proud, and Go South to Sorrow.

In the afternoon, Robert Hayden will conduct a seminar on creative writing. Hayden, who is associate professor of English at Fisk, is a prolific poet. His works appear in numerous anthologies and have been translated into eight languages.

Robert McFerrin, Metropolitan Opera baritone, will give the principal festival concert on the evening of April 26. A former Fisk student, McFerrin's rise in the musical world has been meteoric since his college days. Appearing first in Broadway musicals, he soon made a neme for himself in opera circles. Two years ago, he made his Metropolitan debut and was given a concert as a regular member of the company. He is the second Negro to have sung with the Metropolitan, and the first of his race to become a regular member of the opera.

On April 27, the Fisk Stagecrafters will present "The Girl from Samos" by Ida Ehrlich. Which was reconstructed from a fragment by Menander, the Greek comic dramatist of the fourth century B. C. The production will be under the direction of Dr. Lillian Voorchees, chairman of Fisk's drama department.

That evening, Pulizer Prize Winner Mark Van Doren will deliver the annual Hillman-Fisk lecture. A professor of English at Columbia University, Van Doren is one of America's most eminent literary personages. He is the author or editor of over 25 books, the latest being the recently published collection of short stories, Home With Hazel.

The Rev. Charles W. Gilkey, retired dean of chapel and professor emeritus in the Federated Theological factuly, University of Chicago, will deliver the sermon at the worship service on April 28. That afternoon, students in the music department will give a recital, and in the evening the Fisk choir will be heard in a memorial concert for the late president of the university, Dr. Charles S. Johnson. The entire choir concert will be devoted to Brahms' Requiem, and will be directed by Harry von Bergen, with Arthur R. Croley at the organ.

Reaction at Fisk U.

Pittsburgh Sun 2-4-57

A SO-CALLED "dark horse" is the new president of Fisk University. Trustees went into a huddle Friday morning and came up with the name of Dr. Stephen J. Wright, now president of Bluefield State College in West Virginia. Only two other persons were considered as a successor to the late Dr. Charles Johnson, and their names were not made known to the public.

As soon as Dr. Wright was selected for the post, most of the trustees packed up and left town. Retiring board chairman Leonard M. Reiser of Chicago remained behind to break the news to students and faculty at the chapel hour.

The university, at present, is being operated by an interim committee, and when the chairman of this committee got up to comment on the trustees' decision, students (or, rather some of them) opened up with the school song, and kept on singing it until the committee chairman decided it just wasn't his day to make a speech.

Later, outside the chapel, some of the students staged a mild demonstration in behalf of a couple of professors who have been notified that they won't be working at Fisk next fall.

Selection of Dr. Wright was a surprise to everyone. His name had only been mentioned once or twice and then as a very, very dark horse.

Best of luck to Dr. Wright . . . and he'll need lots of it . . . because Ivy-League Fisk could be hard to handle . . . even for a Bunche or a King.

Floridians Show High Regard For Wisdom And Enterprise Of Popular Educator by Great Support Given Institution At Tallahassee—Graduate School, Divisions Of Law, Pharmacy And Engineering Added; 252 On Faculty; 2693 Students

Tallahassee—Dr. George W. Gore, Jr., nationally known educator and administrator, will begin his eighth year as president of the 70-year old Florida A&M University on April 1. 14e(1)

At the time that he accepted the duties and responsibilities of the then 62-year old institution on April 1, 1950, the school was officially designated as "college"; today it is one of the state-supported universities.

The eight sub-divisions are as follows: College of Arts and Sciences, College of Law, School of Agriculture and Home Economics, School of Education, School of Nursing Education, School of Pharmacy, School of Engineering and Mechanic Arts, and the Graduate School. With the establishment of these schools and colleges, the institution more than met the technical requirements for classification as a university.

The following undergraduate degrees are now offered: Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science. Professional degrees include the degree of Bachelor of Science in Nursing Education, Bachelor of Science in Pharmacy, and Bachelor of Laws. In the Graduate School, the degrees of Master of Arts, Master of Education, and Master of Science are granted.

In order to carry forward the University program of instruction, the staff has been upgraded and increased in size. The staff of 183 instructors in 1950 has been expanded to 252 in 1956-57. Practically all teachers hold the master's degree plus additional graduate and professional education. A large proportion hold the doctorate or its equivalent. Included on the staff are many persons who are authors of books, monographs, articles, and creative writings.

Others have achieved as artists, playwrights, sculptors, musicians. A representative number hold offices in major professional and educational association, appear frequently on professional programs, and are listed in educational and professional biographical dictionaries. Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, Phi Delta Kappa, Kappa Delta Pi, Pi Lamda Theta, Beta Gamma Sigma and other nationally recognized scholarly societies are represented by faculty members. The institution has chapters of Kappa Delta Pi, honorary society in education, and Alpha Pi Omega, a service fraternity compiled for former Boy Scouts.

Annually staff members are awarded diplomas, plaques, and citations by universities and special groups for outstanding achievements. During the last six years, staff members have held presidencies in such organizations as the National Association of Business Officers, the Southern Association of Dramatic and Speech Arts, the National Educational Association the Florida State Nursing Association, the American Teachers Association, the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Florida Negro Business League, the National Negro Business League, and the National Alumni Association.

The student enrollment in 1950 was 1,790, practically all of whom were undergraduate students. During the first semester of the current school year there were 2,693 students of whom 258 were in the Graduate School, 19 in the College of Law, 32 in School of Pharmacy, 145 in the School of Agriculture and Home Economics, 1027 in the College of Arts and Sciences, 919 in the School of Engineering and Mechanic Arts and 50 in the School of Nursing Education.

State Indepedent

In addition, there are students from 21 other states and the District of Columbia and two foreign countries. The summer session enrollment in 1950 was 1,968, it was 2099 in 1956 of whom at least one half were post-graduate students.

The student body has greatly expanded its activities and services. The athletic teams have continued to win sectional and national championships in football, basketball, tennis, track and baseball. The band has won national fame as an outstanding marching aggregation. Triumphs have been scored by students in music, dramatics and journalism. Student elections are conducted on regulation poting machines and the Student Government Association is the latest expression of student activity. Practically all university committees have student members serving jointly with faculty members. The student body is to be commended upon the selection of constructive and wise leadership.

Since 1950 the institution has discontinued the practice of requiring students to wear uniforms and march to chapel. It has also changed from family style to cafeteria style in student feeding. The ROTC Unit has been changer from Anti-Air Craft Artillery to Branch General to provide opportunity for our students to secure commissions in a variety of branches of Army Service. During the past six years the Orange Blossom Classic has become the largest Negro Bowl Game in America and the fifth largest bowl game in the nation.

The physical facilities of the institution have been greatly expanded during the past seven years. The following major additions have been made:

Dairy Barn, $87,500; two Faculty Duplex, $25,000; Building Construction Laboratory, $10,000 Law Wing of Coleman Library, $400,000. ROTC Building $250,000; addition to Nurses Home in Jacksonville. $12,000; Addition to Dininr Hall. $250,000; Maintenance Office Building, $25,000; Home Economics Building, $250,000; Guest House, $45,000; Men's Dormitory, $937,000; Science-Pharmacy Building, $1,000,000; Agriculture Building, $1,000,000; Student Union Building, $500,000; Classroom Building, $1,000,000; and Demonstration School Building, $500,000.

Currently excavations are being made so that construction can begin on the $366,000 football stadium and the $500,000 dormitory for women. Three hundred thousand dollars have been appropriated for landscaping the campus. Polkinghorne Village, the Band Hall, the Temporary Student Union Building and three minor housing facilities have been renovated since 1950.

Other major additions to campus facilities included the four-Manual Estey Pipe Organ valued at $70,000 and campus switchboards in the new hospital and Lee Hall. Also during the six-year period the $2,000,000 Hospital and Health Center was completed and fully equipped. New rolling stock included a new 40-passenger deluxe bus, station wagon, official cars and trucks. A Dempster Dumpster campus cleaning system has also been installed. The institution has acquired 98 additional acres of farm land that is being used for cattle, poultry and forestry.

In order to guarantee to the student the greatest possible return for his investment in education, the institution is striving to see to it that each of the sub-divisions of the University is recognized and fully accredited by the appropriate agency. At the present time the institution holds membership in the Association of Land Grant Universities which is concerned with programs of instruction in agriculture, home economics, mechanic arts and engineering.

The College of Arts and Sciences is fully accredited by the Southern Association of College and Secondary Schools. The School of Education has been accredited by the American Association of Colleges of Teacher Education. Graduates of the School of Pharmacy have passed the State Board examinations for licenses in pharmacy and are presently practicing in Florida and Georgia.

The College of Law has been accredited by the Section of Legal Education for admission to the Bar of the American Bar Association, and at this time three students have been admitted to the Florida Bar. The School of Nursing Education is fully accredited by the National Nursing Accrediting Service.

Florida A & M Testing Center For Teachers Exams

Tallahassee State Journal
Pg. 4
1-30-57

TALLAHASSEE. — Florida A and M. University has been designated as a testing center for the 1958 Nation-wide administration of the National Teacher Examinations next February, Dr. A. A. Abraham, director, test service bureau, Florida A. and M. University, announced today.

College seniors preparing to teach and teachers applying for positions in school systems which encourage or require applicants to submit their scores on the National Teacher Examinations along with their other credentials are eligible to take the tests. The examinations are prepared and administered annually by Educational Testing Service, Princeton, N. J.

The designation of Florida A. and M. as a testing center for these examinations will give prospective teachers in this area an opportunity to compare their performance on the examinations with approximately 10,000 candidates throughout the country who will be participating in the nationwide administration on February 15, 1958, Dr. Abraham said. At the one-day testing session a candidate may take the Common Examinations, which include tests in Professional Information, General Culture, English Expression, and Non-Verbal Reasoning. In addition each candidate may take one or two of the eleven Optional Examinations which are designated to demonstrate mastery of subject matter in the fields in which he may be assigned to teach.

BEGINS EIGHTH YEAR AT FAM-U - Dr George W Gore, Jr (insert) began his eighth year as president of the 70-year old Florida A and M University on Monday, April 1. His tenure at the institution has been characterized by growth in faculty and staff, an increase in student body, and expansion of the physical plant. Among the structures which have been completed are the four above. Atlantan H. R. Partridge Named Florida A&M Business Manager

Atlanta, Ga. 14e(1)

BY MARION E. JACKSON

H. R. Partridge, well known Atlanta businessman and former operator of a Westside bakery and catering service, has been named business manager of Florida A. and M. University, succeeding J. R. E. Lee, Jr.

Mr. Partridge successfully operated a food service firm on West Hunter Street before accepting a position as director of food services at FAMU. His family is active in Atlanta civic, church and business circles.

The Atlantan was elevated to business manager following an announcement by Dr. George William Gore, that Mr. Lee had been promoted to the post of vice-president in charge of University Affairs.

Partridge joined the A. and M. staff in [illegible]mber of 1955 as director of fo[illegible] services. He was graduated from Tuskegee Institute in 1936 with the master of science degree in economics and business management and he was a special student in hotel administration at Cornell University during the academic years 1936-37 and '38-39.

Mr. Partridge successfully operated Partridge's Bakery and Catering Service here. He is a former assistant director of commerical dietetics at Tuskegee Institute and also at one time served as assistant manager of the Tuskegee Institute Cafeteria.

Mr. Partridge succe[illegible] a nationally-recognized aut[illegible] when Mr. Lee was elevated.

A graduate of Lincoln University (Pa.), class of '24, Vice-President Lee joined the A and M staff as business manager in 1924. He has long been active in national business circles and is presently serving as registrar for the National Business League. Vice-President Lee is the son of the late J. R. E. Lee, Sr., president of A and M from 1924 until his death in 1944.

Vice-President Lee has become a national figure as a result of his founding of subsequent development of the famed Orange Blossom Classic, which has come to be recognized as the nation's top Negro athletic attraction and which for the past four years has drawn more than 40,000 fans through the turnstiles of the famed Orange Bowl. In 1955, the 100 Per Cent Wrong Club of Atlanta selected Vice-President Lee for its coveted "Citizen of the Year" award. He has been the recipient of numerous other civic, fraternal, and business awards.

Nashvillian Took Post In Florida In 1950; Pilots Institution To Enviable Position Among Highest Grade Educational Institutions; Globe Gives Public Latest Information About Real "Accreditation" Of Schools

Here in Nashville, the "talk of the town," especially "the town" represented by folk who take a vital interest in higher education and the emergence of Negro colleges and universities into consideration for accreditation by the powerful Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, whose report was released on Friday of last week to the newspapers.

Globe p1

Quite naturally there was widespread joy over the A-rating which was given Fisk University. And there was some regret being expressed by the public over the fact the accrediting association did not included Tennessee A&I University in its list of "A" institutions.

But there was almost as much rejoicing in Nashville, as there was in Tallahassee, Fla., over the fact that the accrediting association did include among the A-rated institutions, directed by Negro educators, Florida Agricultural and Mechanical State University.

Nashville Tenn.

The newspapers of Tallahassee and other Florida cities are not failing to emphasize what the A-rating given Florida A&M means. They are saying that it means that the Tallahassee institution is the one and only Negro state-supported school, with university status, which made the grade, unquestionably.

What enthuses Nashvillians, naturally, is that the President of Florida Agricultural and Mechanical University is Dr. George W. Gore, Jr., and Nashvillians are politely asking the Floridians to quiet down a bit and let some Nashville Tennesseans do some of the cheering.

Dr. Gore is a native of Nashville and was educated, to a large extent here, having graduated at Pearl High School; later he went to DePauw University at Greencastle, Ind., where he graduated with the Bachelor of Arts degree; this was followed by graduation with the degree of Master of Arts and Doctor of Philosophy at Columbia University in New York.

DR. G. W. GORE, Jr.

His teaching and school administration experience were acquired at A&I State College here in Nashville.

In 1950, Dr. Gore was elected president of Florida A&M State College following a brilliant career as teacher and dean at Tennessee A&I State College. As an educator, he has held a number of important positions, including the executive secretaryship of the Tennessee Negro Educational Association and vice president of the National Education Association; he having been the first educator of his race elected to that position. His success as the president of Florida A&M is attested by the fact he has guided that Land-Grant college to its university status and to its present position of accreditation, no, not a "Negro A-Rated" institution, but to the full statups of A-rated University, period.

Dr. Gore for a number of years has been on the board of directors of the Citizens Savings Bank and Trust Co., here, of which splendid bank Dr. Henry Allen Boyd is the president.

Globe p1

Dr. Gore's family consists of his wife and daughter. Mrs. Gore is the former Miss Pearl Winrow who was born in Kansas City, Mo., later "grew up" in Bowling Green, Ky., and after finishing the public schools of Bowlin Green, Matriculated in Tennessee A&I State College, from which she graduated and later served notably for several years on the secretarial staff of A&I.

Aug 12-13-57

The daughter is Miss Pearly Mayo Gore, who was a precocious youngster in Nashville. She graduated from its public schools and later graduated Summa Cum Laud at A&I. This was followed by graduation with the master's degree at Ohio State University. Miss Gore is at present a member of the faculty of Meharry Medical College.

Nashville Tenn.

All three of the Gores are faithful church workers. They were affiliated with Mt. Olive Baptist Church while their home was in Nashville. Miss Pearly Mayo Gore is still a good "paying member" of Mt. Olive and is regular in her attendance.

Mrs. Gore is finding plenty to do as the presiding genius of "Sunshine Manor" the president's hospitable home on the campus of Florida A&M at Tallahassee.

The Associated Press had quite a lengthy story dealing with the examination and accreditation of Negro institutions of higher education. The story listed a total of eighteen colleges accepted for A-Grade accreditation. They are as follows:

Albany State College, Albany, Ga.; Atlanta University, Atlanta, Ga.; Clark College, Atlanta; Bennett College, N. C.; Fisk University, Nashville, Florida A&M University Tallahassee; Fort Valley State College, Fort Valley, Ga.; Hampton Institute, Hampton, Va.; Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn.; Morehouse College, Atlanta; North Carolina College, Durham, N. C.; Talladega College, Talladega, Ala.

Tougaloo Southern Christian College, Tougaloo, Miss.; Tuskegee Institute, Tuskegee, Ala.; Virginia State College, Petersburg, Va.

The foregoing are all senior colleges. The Junior colleges that were accredited were Daniel Payne College, Birmingham; St. Phillips College, San Antonio, Texas, and Vorhees Junior College, Denmark, S. C.

The Associated Press story about the meeting at which the accrediting procedure was gone into, and settled was datelined Richmond, Va. It emphasized that this year was the first meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, (known as high schools) where Negro colleges were considered after due examination.

The Globe has applied for a full elucidation of "accreditation" and has found out that it is no easy task for schools taking the name of "university" to make the grade. There follows what the Globe is able to give its readers as a faithful appraisal of what came from the 62nd annual meeting of the Southern Association of Colleges and high schools. It is to be remembered that the Southern Association operated what has been something "exclusive" for Negro universities, colleges and high schools. They were merely Class A's B's and so forth among Negro colleges. But as of December 1957 we now have 18 colleges that have made the grade representing "equality in education." Our report follows:

Information Concerning Accdeditation by the Southern Association Of Colleges and Secondary Schools

Beginning in 1930 the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools entered upon a program of rating Negro colleges and secondary schools in the Southern region. Schools thus rated were placed on a separate list apart from the roll of active (white) members of the Association.

At the December meeting of the Association in 1956, it was decided that colleges and universities for Negro youth might apply for membership in the Association and would be admitted as of December, 1957, provided they could meet fully the rigid standards of membership.

Of the sixty-seven Negro institutions formally rated as Class "A" on the Negro list, the Association's secretary informed thirty-three that they might be able to qualify for admission in December, 1957. After reports were received from these institutions, a screening committee had examined and visited the institutions concerned, a final report was made to the Association with the result that a total of eighteen institutions were formally admitted into full membership at the Richmand, Va., meeting on December 5, 1957. Of this number, three were junior colleges and fifteen were four-year colleges or universities.

It is of interest to note that each institution accredited was evaluated in terms of the type of program which it proposed to offer. In short, those institutions offering work primarily in arts and sciences and education were rated only by standards in these fields, whereas more complex institutions offering work in such fields as engineering, law, pharmacy, nursing, etc., were required to meet minimum standards not only in arts and sciences and education but also in the professional fields.

14e(1)

Several institutions that were unusually strong in certain fields were not admitted into membership because of a deficiency in one or more of its various subdivisions. As a result of this procedure, the larger institutions encountered more difficulty in qualifying for membership than the smallar institutions.

Opportunity will be given for re-evaluation and re-submission of additional applications at the next meeting of the Association in Louisville, Ky., in December, 1958.

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., March 31—Dr. George W. Gore Jr., nationally known educator and administrator, will begin his eighth year as president of the 70-year-old Florida A&M University on April 1.

Montgomery Ala.

At the time he accepted the duties and responsibilities of the 32-year-old institution on April 1, 1950 the school was officially designated as "college"; today it is one of the state-supported universities.

Advertiser 4-1-57

The eighth sub-divisions are as follows: College of Arts and Sciences, College of Law, School of Agriculture and Home Economics, School of Education, School of Nursing Education, School of Pharmacy, School of Engineering and Mechanic Arts, and the Graduate School. With the establishment of these schools and colleges, the institution more than met the technical requirements for classification as a university.

The following undergraduate degrees are now offered: Bachelor of Arts and Bachelor of Science. Professional degrees include the degree of Bachelor of Science in Nursing Education, Bachelor of Science in Pharmacy, and Bachelor of Laws. In the Graduate School, the degrees of Master of Arts, Master of Educaton and Master of Science are granted.

In order to carry forward the university program of instruction, the staff has been upgraded and increased in size. The staff of 183 instructors in 1950 has been expanded to 252 in 1956 - 57. Practically all teachers hold the master's degree plus additional graduate and professional education.

A large proportion hold the doctorate or its equivlent. Included on the staff are many persons who are authors of books, monographs, articles, and creative writings. Others have achieved as artists, playwrights, sculptors, and musicians. A representative number hold offices in major professional and educational associations, appear frequently on professional programs, and are listed in educational and professional biographical dictionaries. Phi Beta Kappa, Sigma Xi, Phi Delta Kappa, Kappa Delta Pi, Pi Lambda, Theta, Beta Gamma Sigma and other nationally recognized scholarly societies are represented by faculty members.

The institution has chapters of Kappa Delta Pi, honorary society in education, and Alpha Pi Omega, a service fraternity compiled of former Boy Scouts.

Annually staff members are awarded diplomas, plaques, and citations by universities and special groups for outstanding achievements. During the last six years, staff members have held presidencies in such organizations as the National Assn. of Business Officers, the Southern Assn. of Dramatic and Speech Arts, the National Education Assn., the Florida State Nursing Assn., the American Teachers Assn., the Assn. of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the Florida Negro Business League, the National Negro Business League, and the National Alumni Assn.

1,790 STUDENTS

The student enrollment in 1950 was 1,790, practically all of whom were undergraduate students. During the first semester of the current school year there were 2,693 students of whom 258 were in the Graduate School, 19 in the College of Law, 32 in School of Pharmacy, 145 in the School of Agriculture and Home Economics, 1,027 in the College of Arts and Sciences, 919 in the School of Education, 237 in the School of Engineering and Mechanic Arts, and 56 in the School of Nursing Education. In addition, there are students from 21 other states and the District of Columbia and two foreign countries. The summer session enrolment in 1950 was 1,968 it was 2,099 in 1956 of whom at least one-half were post-graduat students.

The student body has greatly expanded its activities and services. The athletic teams have conmuted to win sectionaly and national championships in football, basketball, tennis, track and baseball. The band has won national fame as an outstanding marching aggregation. Triumphs have been scored by students in music, dramatics and journalism. Student elections are conducted on regulation voting machines and the Student. Governemtn Assn. is the latest expression of student activity. Practically all university committees have student members serving jointly with faculty members. The student body is to be commended upon the selection of constructive and wise leadership.

Since 1950 the institution has discontinued the practice of requiring students to wear uniforms and march to chapel. It has also changed from family style to cafeteria style in student feeding. The ROTC unit has been changed from Anti-Aircraft Artillery to Branch General to provide opportunity for our students to secure commissions in a variety of branches of Army service. During the past six years the Orange Blossom Classic has become the largest Negro Bowl game in America and the fifth largest bowl game in the nation.

The physical facilities of the institution have been greatly expanded during the past seven years. The following major additions have been amde: Dairy barn $87,500; two faculty duplexes, $25,000; building construction laboratory, $10,000; law wing of Coleman Library, $400,000; ROTC building, $250,000; addition to Nurses Home in Jacksonville, $12,000; addition to dining hall, $250,000; Maintenance office building, $25,000; Home Economics building $250,000; guest house, $45,000; men's dormitory, $937,000; science-pharmacy building $1,000,000; agriculture building, $1,000,000; student union building, $500,000; classroom building, $1,000,000 and demonstration school building, $500,000. Currently excavations are being made so that construction can begin on the $366,000 football stedium and the $500,000 dormitory for women. Three hundred thousand dollars have been appropriated for landscaping the campus. Polkinghorne Village, the band hall, the temporary student union building, and three minor housing facilities have been renovated since 1950.

Other major additions to campus facilities included the four-manual Estey Pipe Organ valued at $70,000 and campus switchboards in the new hospital and Lee Hall. Also during the six-year period the $2,000,000 hospital and health center was completed and fully equipped. New rolling stock included a new 40 passenger delux bus, station wagon, official cars and trucks. A Dempster Dumpster campus claening system has also been installed. The institution has acquired 98 additional acres of farm land that is being used for cattle, poultry and forestry.

In order to guarantee to the student the greatest possible return for his investment in education, the institution is striving to see to it that each of the sub-divisions of the university is recognized and fully accredited by the appropriate agency. At the present time the institution holds membership in the Assn. of Land Grant Universities which is concerned with programs .of instruction in agriculture, home economics, mechanic arts and engineering. The College of Arts and Sciences is fully accredited by the Southern Assn. of College and Secondary Schools. The school of Education has been accredited by the American Assn. of Colleges of Teacher Education.

Graduates of the School of Pharmacy have passed the State Board examinations for licenses in pharmacy and are presently practicing in Florida and Georgia. The College of Law has been accredited by the section of Legal Education for admission to the Bar of the American Bar Assn., and at this time three students has been admitted to the Florida Bar. The School of Nursing Education is fully accredited by the National Nursing Accrediting Service.

To Probe Financial Practices At FAMU

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 5-4-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — "It's the worst I've ever seen. It either reflects criminal negligence, hopeless incompetency or deliberate dishonesty."

That is what Fred Kent of Jacksonville, a member of the board of control of Florida Agricultural and Mechanical University had to say of a state audit report examined this week.

The audit said records at the Florida A. and M. Hospital hadn't been posted for some time and that accounts receivable in the school scholarship fund were out of line. The audit recommended a complete overhauling of auditing procedure.

The report, which was made public last Thursday, criticized certain accounting procedures and financial practices of the university.

* * *

SIGNIFICANTLY, Mr. Kent was the only member of the seven-man board to comment strongly about the audit despite the fact that each member had received a copy of the report prior to the regular monthly meeting which was held in Tallahassee.

(Kent took time out during his surprise tirade to say that the institution was "splendidly" run from an educational point of view.)

The board set up a three-man committee to investigate financial conditions at the school and make some recommendations at the next board meeting in Tallahassee May 16.

IT IS unfortunate that an audit reflects "history" rather than "news."

This was the reaction of a Florida A. and M. University spokesman when asked to comment on tne State Auditor's report covering the fiscal operations of the instution during the period July 1, 1954-June 40, 1956.

University President George W. Gore Jr. stated that "there have been a lot of resignations in the school's business department and we are left holding the bag."

Board member James Love of Quincy said as he understood it the audit "didn't infer dishonesty but that the records were so bad a complete audit couldn't be made."

* * *

THE FOCAL point of Kent's blast regarded the audit's comments pertaining to some of the operational practices of the university's hospital and health center business office, even though there was some criticism of operations of the university's business office per se.

President Gore said that corrective measures have been taken in each of the warranted instances.

Rap at FAMU Based on Old Audit Report

Courier St. Petersburg, Fla. Sat. 4-27-57

TALLAHASSEE, Fla.—An official spokesman for Florida A. and M. University charged Board of Control member Fred Kent with giving an "inaccurate" picture of the status of the school's business department.

Kent, a Jacksonville attorney, only member of the seven-man board to publicly criticize the institution, had stated that the department was grossly "incompetent or dishonest."

THE SPOKESMAN for the university said, "It is too bad that an audit reflects history rather than news." The audit was for the period from "July 1, 1954 through July 1, 1956."

Focal point of criticism in the report was the Florida A. and M. University Hospital and Health Center and not the university itself, although newspaper reports did not convey this fact.

Kent, himself, took time out from his tirade against the university to commend that the institution was "splendidly run from an educational point of view."

Construction begins on A&M student union unit

Afro-American Sat. 1-5-57

Baltimore, Md.

14e(1)

TALLAHASSEE — Construction has begun on the second unit of the student union building at Florida A and M University. The unit which will cost approximately $250,000 is being built by the Ruscon Construction Company of Jacksonville, and when completed, will bring the total cost of the union building to approximately a half million dollars.

P. 17

This building is but one of several which have been added to the ever growing skyline of the palm-dotted campus during the past seven years during which time construction totaling more than $7,000,000 has been undertaken.

PRESENTLY, THE Ruscon firm is completing work on the $1,000,000 structure which will house units of the school of agriculture and home economics. On the drawing board are plans for the $366,000 foott all stadium, a $100,000 cafetorium for the demonstration high school, and a $500,000 women's dormitory.

Recently, students attending the demonstration high school moved into the new $450,000 demonstration school building. And at the beginning of the current school term, university students began using for the first time the $1,000,000 classroom building.

Fla. Negro College Band In Pre-Inaugural Concert Honoring Gov. LeRoy Collins

Event Marks Historic First For State

Tallahassee, Fla., Jan. 14 (Special)—Tallahassee — "A historic first" occured here last Tuesday when the 132-piece Florida A and M University band participated in the pre-inaugural concert prior to the inauguration of the Honorable LeRoy Collins as Governor.

More than 10,000 persons in attendance at the inauguration gave a thunderous ovation when the band, under the direction of Dr. William P. Foster, played its last selection.

Advocate P. 6

The occasion also marked the first time that the bands from Florida's three state-supported institutions of higher learning—A and M. Florida State University and the University of Florida—had performed on the same program.

The three bands were seated in front of the Supreme Court Building facing east towards the Capitol Building, "site" of the inaugural ceremonies. The A and M band was in the center, flanked on the left by the University of Florida band, and on the right by the FSU band.

14e(1)

The three bands, under the direction of the FSU band director, played together "in mass formation," three selections.

The A and M band played the following numbers — "E Pluribus Unum," Jewel; "Italian In Algiers Overture," Rosini; "Fam-U on Parade March," Phillip Cooper, associate director and arranger of the Fam-U band; and "Carribean Fantasy," Morrisey.

The band and the crack ROTC unit of the university also appeared in the two-hour parade which was witnessed by some 40,000 persons. Both units occupied prominent places in the parade and drew the plaudits of the persons who lined the parade route.

Florida A & M dedicates new university theatre

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 3-27

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. — One of the finest educational facilities of its kind — if not the best — is the recently dedicated Charles Winter Wood Theatre at Florida A. and M. University.

It serves as an auditorium for the college of arts and sciences of the university and as a classroom and laboratory for the department of speech and drama.

The auditorium, which seats 701 persons, is beautifully decorated in pastel shades of green gray, and tan.

THE THEATRE which is joined to the new million dollar Tucker Hall classroom which was dedicated on the same day (March 8), was named in honor of Charles Winter Wood, a veteran actor and dramatic reader who was understudy to Richard B. Harrison in "The Green Pastures."

Wood, after the run of the play, directed drama at the Florida institution for a number of years before he died a few years ago.

FAMU Director Edmonds Tops in Theatre

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 3-30-57

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Randolph Edmonds, director of drama at Florida A&M University, presided at the Southeastern Theatre Conference during its seventh annual meeting at the University of Louisville. A member of the organization since its beginning, Edmonds succeeded Fred Koch of the University of Miami.

Under Edmonds' leadership and frequently at his suggestion, the program of the interracial theatre organization expanded to include national projects and the attempt to solve some of the fundamental problems of the theatre.

MR. EDMONDS is a graduate of St. Paul Polytechnic Institute, Oberlin College and Columbia University. During the war he was a captain in the Special Service Division of the U. S. Army. He studied at the Yale University Department of Drama on a General Education Board Fellowship, and made a study of amateur drama organizations in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales on a fellowship granted by the Rosenwald Fund.

He is the author of three published books of plays: "Shades and Shadows," "Six Plays for a Negro Theatre" and "The Land of Cotton and Other Plays."

Mr. Edmonds' pioneering work in the educational theatre has been commented on in many books and histories.

Pres. H. V. Richardson Reports Outstanding Progress To Gammon's Board of Trustees

When the Trustees of Gammon Theological Seminary met in annual session on Thursday, March 7, Dr. Harry V. Richardson, President of the Seminary, reported that during the past year the school has made exceptional progress in practically every area.

He announced that the Seminary had received a grant of $15,000 from the General Education Board, a Rockefeller agency, to finance a study of possible cooperation in theological education among the three schools of religion in Atlanta and any other schools for religious bodies that might care to join.

Dr. Richardson said progress had been made in the following areas: (1) largest number of students on the professional level in the history of the institution; (2) largest budget in the school's history; (3) largest number ever to graduate with the B.D. degree, and (4) largest and most varied curriculum.

Of the new courses offered, he listed as outstanding a course in human relations, dealing with the current situation in the South. He also listed a course in clinical training for student ministers who work in cooperation with doctors and nurses at Grady Memorial Hospital, and an intensified program in supervised field work, as effective additions to the instructional program.

Dr. Richardson said that financially, while the expenditures of last year were the heaviest in the school's history, they still were able to "just about" balance the budget. "More than $20,000 was awarded to students in scholarships and grants-in-aid. This was the largest single amount ever awarded in this way," he said.

The president reported further that there are eight denominations represented in Gammon's student body. They come from all sections of America and three foreign countries, including South America and Korea.

Dr. Richardson stressed the "excellent accommodations which are now available to married students." One-third of the present student body are married. A large number of these have children, and the seminary has provided recreational and play facilities for the children.

The president also revealed that the institution is expecting an increase in enrollment during the coming year. He said a large number of applications have already been received.

"Gammon with its present enrollment is by far the largest seminary of its kind in the country," said President Richardson. "We have 81 students of whom two are women working for the master's degree in religious education. All are full-time candidates for the B.D. higher degrees."

"Twenty students received bachelor of divinity degrees last year. A larger class is expected to be graduated May 19," continued the president.

Bishop J. W. E. Bowen is Chairman of the Trustee Board. He expressed gratification at the pro-

DR. HARRY V. RICHARDSON

Gammon President To Visit Africa

Dr. Harry V. Richardson, president of Gammon Theological Seminary will leave for Africa December 7, it has been disclosed.

The prominent leader and educator will visit parts of Liberia, Southern Rhodesia, Ghana, Belgium Congo, Angola, parts of the Holy Land and several other countries on the continent.

Dr. Richardson is making the trip in interest of native church activities in Africa. He will be gone for eight weeks and will make an analysis of the social conditions affecting the Africans as they move fromthe rural to urban areas, in Africa in connection with the overall church program.

For many years now, Gammon Seminary has maintained a program in Rural Religious Education. Dr. Richardson's trip to Africa will be in line with the overall Gammon program.

Dr. Richadson is being sent to Africa by the Methodist Board of Missions. His visit, which involves a study into the moral and spiritual program of the Church will also be concerned with the development of Christian leadership in that area.

Negro Private Colleges Must Consolidate, Hastie Tells Baptist Meeting

Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat 11-23-57

RICHMOND, Va.—Combination or consolidation provides most private Negro colleges with hope for survival, U.S. District Court Judge William H. Hastie proposed here in a speech before the American Baptist Home Missionary Society's 125th anniversary convocation.

14e(1)

• Judge Hastie asserted that private Negro colleges "must either find enough new revenue from outside sources so that they can keep tuition and fees low, or find much more money for private scholarships for worthwhile students, or even do both.

General

"I do not see how the present Negro colleges can long survive without new money and lots of it."

THE JUDGE maintained that private Negro colleges must face up to the "painful prospect" of combination or consolidation, adding, "This will require the swallowing of institutional pride.

• "It will mean all sorts of mutual concessions in order that two or three struggling colleges can be merged into one strong, vital institution. But, in some cases, there will be no practical alternative.

"Some institutions will surely die if they continue to go their separate ways. Yet they represent real material and educational value which can be saved if there is willingness in the years immediately ahead to explore the economic and educational possibility of merger and combination."

• Judge Hastie was listed among a number of prominent educators who addressed the sessions.

JUDGE W. H. HASTIE
. . . pride must be swallowed

Dr. Frederick D. Patterson, president of the United Negro College Fund and one of the speakers, maintained, "Colleges for Negro youth must continue for some time to come to provide the bulk of the educational opportunities available to Negro youth beyond high school."

Students Choose Their Way

Gill, Nashville, Tenn.

Colored students of Tennessee have more than an ordinary interest in the news item coming from the East Tennessee town of Maryville telling about the student strike at Maryville College.

Nov 29 57 p. 4

At one time in its history Maryville College, a Presbyterian school was "Co-educational" from the standpoint of the "racial complexion" of its student body. That is, they had both colored and white students. Later, like Berea College in Eastern Kentucky, Maryville College seems to have dispensed with its colored students and went into the production of white graduates, only.

14e(1)

But it does not see that the move added to the stature of the Maryville institution of learning, judging by what the papers say is the big grievance the students now have. They have hanged and burnt in effigy their president. They have a student council at the college, but its leaders say they have no influence over the students as far as "personal rights" of the students are concerned. Among these rights, so the declaration of the students seem to declare, are the following:

1. The right of students to "protest pharisaical legalism now in control at the college.

2. The right of students to freedom in class attendance.

3. The right of women students to remain out after 10:30 at night.

4. The right to tell the president and faculty the present system "is in every respect contrary to concepts of religious moral and political liberty for which the nation stands."

It looks like "Juvenile delinquency" has gained a foothold at Maryville College.

You wonder if it is born of any phase of Adult delinquency. You wonder if the moral behavior of any faculty members have inspired the desire of the students for increased freedom, and where will the demanded new order for students, to come and go to classes, at will and for "women" students, formerly known as "girls," to stay out after 10:30 at night lead them.

Says Negro Colleges Must Live Till School Segregation Is Dead

14e(1) General

GREENSBORO, N. C. — "Institutions such as Bennett College will be needed until there is complete integration in all aspects of American life and in the world," Dr. Ira De. A Reid told the Founders' Day audience in Pfeiffer Chapel here Sunday.

Dr. Reid, head of the department of sociology at Haverford College, Haverford, Pa., spoke on "Adventures in Faith, or the Philosophy of a Fool."

p. 18

Paying tribute to the founders of the 84-year-old institotion, Dr. Reid referred to them as "radicals, rebels and dreamers who were willing to take a calculated risk because they realized that they, themselves, were expendable."

Kansas City

The speaker called attention to the many new nations that have been born in the past three decades referring to developments in Africa, India and Japan. All of these changes, he said, have come about because of the burning desire of these people to be free. He referred to recent developments in Russia and to the U. S.

Kansas City

"The Supreme Court decision on school segregation" he declared, "came after a fight of over 30 years, but even then, it found parts of the nation unready to receive it. We live in a world that is full of collisions — a world that is torn asunder because of fear, and for the first time in world history, color has moved to the fore as a threat to the status quo."

Dr. Reid stated that the saddest words of Biblical literature are: "And they sat and watched Him there," a description of the public attitude at te time that Christ was crucified.

"With all that is going on in Little Rock, in Greensboro and in Charlotte," he said, "many of us are just sitting and watching when there is so much to be said and done."

Urging the Bennett students not to sit idly but to be the rebels and dreamers of the future. Dr. Reid cited seven qualities of a leader as follows:

1. He recognizes the danger of obedience.

2. He possesses a certain insolence of spirit.

3. He abhors the ruthless use of powers — no matter what the weapon.

4. He recognizes that he is expendable, yet

5. He learns and builds by doing

6. He lives dangerously and without fear

7. He ever takes the calculated risk.

"Until we can remove the quarantine signs of inequality from our social worlds," he concluded, "institutions like Bennett will be needed. They will be needed to provide meaning for the disinherited, certainty for the insecure and participation for the ignored."

Private Schools, Here And In Philadelphia

advertiser

THREE weeks ago State Supt. of Education Meadows warned that many lawyers and educators doubt that the device of converting public schools to nominally "private" ones would stand a chance in the federal courts.

He quoted from a legal opinion prepared by a Nashville attorney for the Southern Regional Council, the organization formed in 1949 by 14 Southern states to provide for professional, technological, scientific, literary and other specialized training. 14e(1)

The paper said in part:

Wed. 5-1-57 P. 4

Any so-called private school system devised in an effort to avoid the requirements of the segregation decisions supported by public funds in the form of grants or subsidies to parents of school children will be a transparent subterfuge and as such will be held subject to the requirements of the 14th Amendment.

Montgomery, Ala.

Monday this opinion and that of Dr. Meadows were vindicated, and then some, when the Supreme Court went even further—holding that Girard College of Philadelphia, though privately endowed under an ancient will in which the founder said only "poor white male orphans" could be admitted, could not bar Negroes. Reason: the board of directors of City Trust of Philadelphia, which administers the school, is an agency of the state and the state is barred from racial discrimination by the 14th Amendment.

If this is far-fetched reasoning, it is nonetheless an indication of how far the Supreme Court will go in detecting "state action" to determine whether or not schools are private or public. And it augurs ill for such "private school" plans as the one proposed by State Rep. Gregory Oakley of Wilcox County.

OAKLEY'S plan is in the form of three bills. The first would permit a school board or commission to abolish a school or schools in their district if a majority of school patrons approves. The second would allow the school boards to lease school property to private corporations with the provision that property could only be leased for school purposes. The third would allow the school authorities to contract with private schools to educate children in the areas where schools are "abolished." Money for this would come from school funds under the board's control.

Running through all of this is, it seems, a higher degree of state action—that is, governmental control through local agencies—than is apparent in the Girard College case.

The Girard College decision was actually predicted more than two years ago by a University of Alabama law professor who questioned the private school plan in a tract entitled Can Public Schools Be Private?

Although granting that a state can "go out of the business of education," Prof. Jay Murphy said it would have to be complete and actual, not a fiction of "abolition." He commented:

> . . . If [the state] did go out of the business and aided private groups in continuing segregated education, as by donating buildings and facilities to them, then such aid clearly would appear to be state action prohibited by the 14th Amendment.

THE Supreme Court went even further than this Monday, extending a line of decisions which Prof. Murphy discussed at great length. For instance:

In Smith vs. Allwright the Supreme Court had held unconstitutional the denial of Negroes participating in primary elections where the Texas legislature had granted to the Democratic Party of the state the power to make its own rules concerning the holding of elections. In Rice vs. Elmore the Supreme Court ruled similarly on a South Carolina statue repealing all primary legislation and empowering the Democratic Party with the right of making its own private rules. In Terry vs. Adams, the Supreme Court invalidated an arrangement in a Texas county whereby a private association of white persons conducted private nominations for public office, and the officers selected always ran in the Democratic primary and always won.

"It is difficult to see," Prof. Murphy said, "how the same court would approve a similar effort [conversion of public schools to "private"] to circumvent the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment."

BEYOND these decisions was the 1948 case of Shelley vs. Kramer in which the court prevented the state judiciary from enforcing racial restrictive covenants preventing sale of property to Negroes. "This reveals," Murphy commented, "that the court is prepared to go to extreme limits in discovering state action which might in any way cause racial discrimination." In none of the cases cited, he said, is there > the remotest indication that, with the separate but equal doctrine now abolished in public education, the state might simply change the names of its schools [from public to private] and keep on functioning on a segregated basis, or provide funds to private schools and permit them to function on a segregated basis, or provide funds to students to provide funds to private schools . . . The judiciary will look beyond the statute to see an unconstitutional purpose.

DEPLORE this trend though we may, it is still the attitude of the Supreme Court, the rulings of which we have not yet succeeded in nullifying—as witness the recent bus and Lucy decisions.

Even as methods to buy time, such plans as the private school proposal are of decreasing value because of the rapidity with which the Supreme Court is now batting them back. Under the "freedom of choice" amendments which the voters approved last year, the legislature already has the authority to abolish schools if forced to as a last resort.

It would seem risky in the absence of such extreme necessity to set up legal targets ripe for attack by the NAACP.

The year 1956, one of many changes in the public school picture due to integration, was also one of an unprecedented number of deaths, retirements or transfers of heads of colleges and universities.

At least 14 institutions listed changes in administration during the year, of which at least seven were caused or soon followed by death.

* * *

TWICE HIT was Fisk University, whose president, Dr. Charles S. Johnson, internationally known sociologist and author, died suddenly in late October.

General

Only a few weeks earlier, a first-year member of it's faculty, Dr. Cecil D. Halliburton, was fatally stricken with a heart attack as he walked across the campus.

Dr. Halliburton, former dean of St. Augustine College, Raleigh, N.C., had served immediately prior to coming to Fisk as president of Vorhees Jr. College at Denmark, S.C., where he was succeeded by Dr. John F. Potts.

In North Carolina death came during the year to a president and president emeritus of two neighboring institutions, Dr. F. D. Bluford of North Carolina A and T College, and Dr. David D. Jones of Bennett College, both in Greensboro.

Dr. Bluford was succeeded by Dr. Warmouth T. Gibbs, while Dr. Jones was succeeded by Dr. Willa B. Player, the first woman to become president of Bennett.

In the same state, Dr. Hardy T. Liston, veteran president of Johnston C. Smith University at Charlotte, died and was succeeded by Dr. J. W. Seabrook as acting president.

Dr. Seabrook himself had retired only a few months earlier, in June, and came out of retirement to serve his alma mater. He was succeeded at Fayetteville by Dr. Rudolph Jones.

In Raleigh, capital of the state, Dr. Harold L. Trigg was succeeded by Dr. James A. Boyer, for whom inaugural rites were held at the start of the school year.

In neighboring South Carolina, Dr. S. R. Higgins, former president of Allen University at Columbia, was elevated to a bishopric in the AME Church and was succeeded by Dr. Frank R. Veal, whose inauguration is scheduled for March 30. Dr. Veal formerly headed Paul Quinn College, Waco, Tex.

AT CLAFLIN COLLEGE, Orangeburg, the Rev. Hubert V. Manning succeeded Dr. John Jarvis Seabrook as president following the latter's transfer to Huston - Tillotson College at Austin.

Dr. Seabrook was formally inducted into the presidency of the latter institution on Oct. 30, to succeed President Matthew Davage.

In Maryland, Dr. Miles W. Connor retired as the president of Baltimore's Coppin State Teachers College after 30 years at the helm of that institution. He was suceeded by Dr. Parlette S. Moore, former president of Carver Junior College at Rockville.

OTHER CHANGES were indicated at Oakwood College, Huntsville, Ala., where President Frank L. Peterson was succeeded by Garland J. Millet; Paine College, Augusta, Ga., where Edmind C. Peters was succeeded by E. C. Calhoun; Tougaloo College, Tougaloo, Miss., where A. A. Branch was named acting president to succeed Samuel A. Kinchloe, and Clinton Jr. College, Rock Hill, S.C. where President B. T. Medford succeeds President Sallie V. Moreland.

Negro Colleges Improved In Standards, Expert Says

Daily World Thurs. 1-31-57 P. 1

Atlanta, Ga.

BY WILLIAM GORDON
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

Negro colleges and educational institutions have shown tremendous improvement during the past decade, an expert said Wednesday at the Butler Street YMCA.

Dr. Donald C. Agnew, executive secretary of the Commission on Colleges and Universities said that since 1929, there has been an upward trend in the improvement in the field of education for Negroes.

WAS WITNESS 14e(1)

He was a volunteer witness at the recent hearings of the famous Horace Ward case. It was Dr. Agnew who testified as to the qualifications of Negro colleges and their status in the area of Southern education.

General

Dr. Agnew pointed that all Negro colleges in the Atlanta University System were recognized and accepted with'n the standards of the Southern Association.

The educator said that during recent survey and study of the colleges in the Southern area, 37 out of 63 Negro colleges checked have been given top accreditation.

STUDY PROGRAM

An intensive study program directed at all colleges within the Southern area began in 1951. The purpose of such a study, Dr. Agnew pointed, is to upgrade the standards of the institutions and education generally.

He called the growth of education as being a gradual process while adding that some of the problems back of accreditation can be traced to faculty levels and its physical equipment.

One of the major problems in evaluating schools and institutions was maintaining a faculty that meet the requirements, he said.

The increase in student population was also called a factor that figured into the program. He also called attention to the shortage of teachers and limited funds.

He said that back of this, his organization was doing a lot to inspire legislatures and public officials to appropriate more facilities for education.

Dixie students do better in college

Afro American Sat. 2-23-57

Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK — It was reported here last week that a scholarship project study revealed that southern high school pupils tend to do better work in college than in high school.

The report said that aptitude tests for these children who attended segregated schools show what "they have learned rather than what they can learn."

It was added that those who went to college make up for lost ground rapidly and make much better grades, "especially those who take part in college activities and social life."

* * *

THE STUDY was based on a project by the National Scholarship Service and Fund for Negro Students set up for the advancement of education by the Ford Foundation.

Some 3,000 high school pupils were tested in 78 all-colored high schools in 45 cities. A follow-up study was made a year later. Some $170,000 was alloted for the project.

The report pointed out that a considerable number of the pupils showed up way below the national school averages "as a result of inexperience with such tests."

THERE IS strong evidence from the follow-up study of the college records of these students that those of culturally deprived groups are likely to do better in college than their aptitude tests predicts.

"Further more, the evidence is equally strong that aptitude tests for deprived students tend to measure what they have learned rather than what they can learn."

The arbitrary actions last week of Mississippi officials against government-controlled schools should go a long way toward opening people's eyes to the libertarian role that privately owned colleges can play and opening their purses to the United Negro College Fund.

By their very nature, government schools are political schools dependent upon the whims, caprices and prejudices of public officials.

Where Negro political power is slight, the educational hierarchy subservient to white politicians can successfully block not only desegregation but sports competition and even free discussion.

Private Colleges Still Have Primary Role, Dr Nabrit Says

Informer Sat. 3-30-57

HOUSTON — Despite the fact that a large number of educational institutions have thrown open their doors to Negro students, the Negro private colleges still have a primary role to play in the education of youth, Dr S M Nabrit, president of Texas Southern University, told an audience in the TSU Student Union Lounge Friday night.

Dr Nabrit was speaking at the 14th annual kickoff dinner meeting of the United Negro College Fund campaign.

He said that the private colleges, with their basic objectives of building leadership among Negro youth, will have "many more years of usefulness for that original dedication."

"I can not accept that the suggestion that the usefulness of the name itself (United Negro College Fund) has passed. The primary orientation and education for Negroes will long continue despite the fact that most of the institutions have thrown their doors open to Negroes."

Dr Nabrit commended the chairman of the drive, Dr I B Bryant, and his workers as one of the "best staffs anywhere in the USA" and set forth the pressing need of support for the colleges from the general public for decades to come.

"Even with the universal good of complete desegregation, it will be 10 to 25 years before the pattern of our enrollment will show any appreciable change," he said.

Colleges Have 473,000 GI Students On Roll

Journal + Guide Sat. 1-19-57

Norfolk Va.

WASHINGTON, D. C. — The veteran still is a potent force on the American collgee campus, according to the Veterans Administration. There were 473,000 GI college students in the fall.

Approximately one out of very four males in the nations colleges and universities is a veteran, enrolled under the Korean GI Bill, VA said. Further, large numbers of veterans are expected to be attending schools of higher learning for at least the next five or six years.

14e.1.

THE NUMBER of Korean GI Bill fall college students is 12 per cent above last fall's GI college enrollments of 416,-600 and eight per cent higher than the previous record of 436,600 reached in the spring of 1956.

This year, males on the campus — veterans and non-veterans together — number 1,916-000.

GI STUDENTS in college probably never again will be as numerous as they were shortly after World War II, when three out of four males in school were World War II veterans, and veteran college enrollments totaled more than 1,000,000 for three successive years.

Yet the current number of Korea veterans in college still is high enough to exert a real impact.

IN ADDITION the 473,-000 GI college students this fall, VA said there were 287,-00 other Korea veterans enrolled in schools below the college level, on-the job training and on-the-farm training.

The 760,600 total — highest in the four-year history of the Korean GI Bill — surpassed most predictions.

Last year, total Korean GI fall enrollments numbered 707,000, and the number went up in the spring of 1956 to 735,-000 — a record which has just been broken.

The Korean GI Bill education and training program doesn't come to an end until 1965.

Georgia Only State of 8 in Region Not Taking U.S. Loans for Colleges

Constitution Atlanta, Ga. p. 32
File 6/2/57

BY GENE BRITTON

Georgia is the only state in an eight-state region that has not applied for low interest loans under a federal college building program, the Housing and Home Finance Agency disolosed Thursday.

The announcement came as state-supported colleges in Georgia face a growing student housing problem in the coming fall term.

14 e(1)

Paul Harris, coordinator of the HHFA's college housing program, said that the seven other states in the Southeastern region have dipped $48,403,000 out of the federal pot for state-supported schools.

Georgia

The loans are made on bond issues by the institutions and may be repaid at an interest rate of two and seven-eighths per cent over a period of 50 years.

State school authorities said Georgia has not taken part in the program partly because it has been able to get bids at equal interest rates from private bidders.

Bylaws of the State Building Authority also set a limit on the amount of indebtedness that may be incurred, and most of the funds are already earmarked for school building projects other than housing.

Four private colleges and universities in Georgia have made loans totaling $4,917,000.

The total lent to both private and state institutions in the eight states comes to $90,786,000. More than half that amount has gone to state schools in all states except Georgia.

Meanwhile, J. H. Duberry, director of Plant and Business Operations for the University System of Georgia's Board of Regents, said there is an annual increase in enrollment in most of the state's colleges and a growing shortage of housing for the students.

CURB ADMISSIONS

Some schools are having to limit their admissions of resident students because of the shortages for the fall quarter of this year, he said.

The University of Georgia in Athens is limiting admissions for that reason, he said. The university can provide housing for 3,500 students outside of fraternity and sorority houses.

A spokesman for the university's housing office said there are some 400 married students on a waiting list for veterans housing. Dormitories for unmarried women students are already completely filled and main campus dormitories for men are filled.

Georgia Tech has never been able to house more than the freshman and part of the sophomore classes in its facilities, Duberry said.

Frank Wilson, housing coordinator at Tech, said he has had a waiting list for some 220 apartment units for married students since the buildings were first opened.

Duberry said that the Georgia Teachers College at Statesboro is "filled and overflowing." Students will be doubled up in dormitory rooms this fall, he said.

West Georgia College at Carrollton is full, but Georgia State College for Women at Milledgeville, and Valdosta State College still have a few vacancies for resident students.

JUNIOR COLLEGES

The state supported junior colleges—South Georgia at Douglas, Abraham Baldwin at Tifton, Georgia Southwestern at Americus and Middle Georgia at Cochran—are all expected to have reached their housing capacities by the opening of fall quarter.

North Georgia College at Dahlonega is booked to capacity for fall quarter already.

The HHFA coordinator said Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina and Kentucky have eliminated at least part of their college housing headaches through the loan program.

For state supported institutions alone, Florida has received $11,126,000; Alabama, $4,427,000; Mississippi, $12,083,000; Tennessee, $1,875,000; South Carolina, $1,000,000; North Carolina, $7,425,000, and Kentucky, $10,467,000.

Harris denied that the loans come under the category of "federal aid to education," since federal aid usually comes in the form of a grant. The loans are made on the basis of security pledges.

Girard Ruling Warns Dixie

(Other Stories Inside)

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—If an arm of government has anything to do with operation of any facility or if it receives any public funds, there can be no discrimination based on race, color, or creed.

That is the interpretation being placed in some quarters, especially in the South, on the Supreme Court's decision in the Girard College (Philadelphia) case, its latest ruling on discrimination in schools.

Commenting on the decision last week, Dr. A. R. Meadows, Alabama superintendent of education, expressed the opinion that the decision indicates that the court is moving toward eventually outlawing segregation in private as well as public schools.

Baltimore, Md.

OTHERS SEE the decision as sounding the death knell of plans by southern legislators and school officials to get around the school segregation ban by channeling state funds into so - called "private schools."

Pointing out that the ruling may in time be extended to other private schools, Dr. Meadows warned that any further legislation aimed at abolishing public schools could "speed up integration, instead of delaying it."

He interpreted the ruling as a step toward an ultimate decree forbidding segregation in other private schools, especially if Alabama or any other state endeavors to substitute them for public classes.

* * *

ALABAMA VOTERS — like those in Virginia and several other southern states—have already adopted a constitutional amendment giving the State Legislature power to abolish the public school system.

Without referring specifically to that amendment, Dr. Meadows said the enactment of any new laws could hasten integration because they "blanket everything covered in the laws."

Pointing out that existing private colleges are exempt from state taxes (which is nothing more than state aid through the back door), he said they could be construed as functioning under state control for that reason.

And, if the Supreme Court decided that they were agencies of the state (because of the tax exemptions), he said, it might well rule that they cannot segregate colored and white students.

THE SUPREME Court did not rule on whether Girard College is a public or private school. It merely held that the board which operates the college is an agency of the state and as such cannot discriminate on racial grounds.

In Philadelphia Friday, the board of directors of the city trusts, which operates Girard College, voted 12 to 1 to ask for a rehearing of the Supreme Court decision opening the college to all pupils.

Overriding the objections of Mayor Richardson Dilworth, who cast the lone dissenting vote and refused to make it unanimous, the board heeded an appeal by George F. Norton, retired Pennsylvania Railroad treasurer.

In Tallahassee, Fla., the Inter Civic Council, which spearheaded the local bus integration campaign, called up-

MR. NORTON, treasurer of the college, said "Some of my best friends are colored people, but I don't think it would be doing them a favor by breaking down the finest institution that Philadelphia has—that Pennsylvania has."

P. 2

Speaking less than three weeks before the third anniversary of the Supreme Court's 1954 school decision, Mr. Chambers praised the court for its "long, slow and careful" handling of the case testing the legality of school segregation.

"The South cannot win following its present determination to fight these issues out to the last inch," Mr. Chambers declared.

He criticized caustically the actions of southern states in threatening to close public schools in the face of litigation, submerging the forces of moderation and excluding the counsel of "the entire colored race as if it did not count."

MR. CHAMBERS traced the separate courses followed by southern states since the 1954 decision, concluding that there are "many Souths." These he defined as:

"A Deep South region of stern resistance to change, a border area where legally and technically desegregation in the colleges is a fact today, and a middle region which is part one way and part the other."

He expressed the opinion that a "collision" between the courts and state governments will be over "modest changes" involving little mixing of the races, but conceded the possibility of "flareups."

* * *

"THIS I KNOW: That the South and the nation need most of all a bridge to cross the gap which separates the Federal judiciary and the political lead-on Leon County school authorities for a start toward integration of the public schools.

The council said it was sending a resolution to the county school board inquiring what plan of action has been formulated to carry out the Supreme Court's decree banning segregation in public schools.

The resolution pledged the council's support to any move that the county school authorities may take to carry out the Supreme Court's directive.

In St. Louis, Mo., the U.S. Court of Appeals upheld a decision by District Judge John E. Miller of Little Rock, Ark., last August to the effect that a proposal to desegregate schools by stages was within the law as laid down by the U.S. Supreme Court.

THE COURT held that the school superintendent had given "convincing testimony" at the trial of the case in District Court "to the effect that under existing conditions, gradual integration of the schools was administratively advisable."

The District Court's approval of the three-phase plan, it said, was based on its finding of "good faith on the part of the school authorities, which finding is not challenged in these proceedings."

It directed that the District Court retain jurisdiction in the case "to insure full opportunity for further showing in the event compliance at the earliest practicable date ceases to be the objective."

In other action on the school desegregation front, Lenoir Chambers, editor of the Norfolk Virginian-Pilot, called for a "bridge of statesmanship" between the Federal courts and eight "resolutely prosegregation" states.

Court lowers bars at Girard College

PHILLADELPHIA

Four years ago, the Girard College student body included 189 boys "from outside Pennsylvania." They came from 15 states in addition to the District of Columbia.

P. 10

Overruling the objection of Mayor Richard Dilworth, the Board of Directors of the City Trusts, Thursday, voted to appeal the U.S. Supreme Court decision opening the college to colored pupils.

By a vote of 12 to 1 it instructed the board's solicitor, Joseph P. Gaffney, and its special counsel, Owen B. Rhoades, to file a petition asking the Su-

New Jersey was represented by 102 youths; and New York State by 30. The college had difficulty in finding enough local boys to enroll, so it welcomed those from other states.

This was in 1953, the same year that the college denied admission to two Philadelphia youngsters — simply because of their race. Admittedly, they met all other requirements.

This was the same year on the date of July 23, 1953 that Councilman Raymond Pace Alexander introduced in City Council a resolution which, in effect, was sanctioned by the U.S. Supreme Court on Monday.

By a unanimous 9-0 ruling, the High Tribunal lifted the bars which for 125 years banned colored youths from the institution.

The Supreme Court decision came just six weeks after briefs were filed with the Court on March 18. This represented unprecedented speed. Usually three months elapse before such action is taken.

Founder of Girard College was Stephen Girard, noted philanthropist. His will, dated February 16, 1830, left about $6,000,000 to establish a school for "poor, white male orphans."

This is the clause which brought about court action on behalf of the two colored boys who were denied admission to the college.

THEY ARE William A. Foust, 10, son of Mrs. Guinivere Foust of 4814 Regent St.; and Robert Felder, 9, son of Mrs. Bertha Felder of 2619 N. 29th St. The boys' fathers are dead.

The Girard estate, now estimated at more than a billion dollars, is administered by the Philadelphia Board of Directors of City Trusts. His will had named the city as trustee of the legacy.

The board contended that it must abide by provisions of Girard's will in limiting the college students to white boys only.

This opinion was upheld by the Orphan's Court in 1954. It was also sustained by the State Supreme Court in November, 1956.

These decisions were based on the contention that when a governmental body acts in a trusteeship capacity, as in the case of the Girard estate, its actions are not limited by the 14th Amendment.

Attorneys for the two boys argued that the board of city trusts is an agency of the city and state. That in rejecting these applicants, they are practicing discrimination which is forbidden by the 14th Amendment.

This is what the U.S. Supreme Court said Monday as it reversed the decision of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court.

The case therefore was remanded to the Pennsylvania Court for "further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion."

This means that within 30 days, the Pennsylvania Supreme Court must reverse itself and direct the Orphans Court to instruct the Board of City Trusts to change its policy regarding admissions to Girard College.

* * *

IN THE meantime, the board has the right to appeal for a rehearing on the issue. Seldom are such appeals effective.

The next board meeting is set for May 17. Joseph P. Gaffney Sr., solicitor for the board, said that it will most likely take some action at that time.

President of Girard College, Dr. E. Newbold Cooper was non-committal about the Supreme Court ruling, pending further instructions from the board. He indicated however, that he is prepared to integrate the student body if and when directed to do so.

In his four-year court battle against the racial bars at Girard College, Councilman Alexander was joined by the city and state as party to his action.

Basking in victorious limelight, Mr. Alexander gave full credit for legal and moral support to the battery of attorneys who labored with him.

These included Attorney-General Thomas D. McBride, Assistant Attorney - General Lois G. Forer, who was appointed by former Atty.-Gen. Herbert Cohen, now a Pennsylvania Supreme Court justice;

Abraham L. Freedman, former city solicitor who was special counsel for the city in this case; present city solicitor David Berger; and deputy city solicitors, William T. Coleman Jr., David E. Pinsky and Thomas Masterson; and Louis Pollack of the Yale Law School.

The U.S. Supreme Court ruling which makes this idea a possibility was widely hailed in Philadelphia on Monday.

By the mayor of the city; b civic and educational leaders; by the attorneys who fought its race ban for four years; by the individual families whose sons were test-case applicants to the school.

The college, surrounded by a massive stone wall, covers 42 acres in the heavily populated colored community at Corinthian and Girard Aves., in North Philadelphia.

The institution was opened in 1848 with about 100 students. In accordance with Stephen Girard's will, it served "poor white male orphans between the ages of 6 to 10 years."

Today, its enrollment is 1,051, with boys ranging from 6 to 1 years. Many of them have incomes which take them out of the "poor" -class.

The college can accommodate comfortably approximately 1,700 students. Because of a dwindling number of applicants in recent years, officials had conducted spirited campaigns among the alumni to enroll students from other states.

The two youngsters who figured in the history-making decision of the Supreme Court are Robert Felder, 9, son of Mrs. Bertha Felder of 2619 N. 29th St.; and William A. Foust, 10, son of Mrs. Guinivere Foust of 4814 Regent St.

Their fathers are dead which qualifies them for admission to the school unless they outgrow the age limitations before being processed.

Mrs. Felder, a widow for 9 years, is the mother of five children. She hailed the court decision as "one of the greatest opportunities that has ever come our way."

Robert is a 4th grade pupil at Walton School, 28th and Huntingdon Sts. At this particular stage, he wants to be a doctor; likes ball playing and the Cub Scouts.

He has a 17-year-old sister, Joan; and three brothers, Samuel, 16, who attends Eddison High School; Herbert, 14, of Vaux Junior High; and Ivan, 12, a Walton School pupil.

The family attends Miller Memorial Baptist Church. Mrs. Foust is a clerk with an insurance company. Simply bubbling with excitement she called the victory "just thrilling."

Her son, William is an only child. He is a 5B pupil at the Comegys School, 51st and Greenway.

He reads a lot, likes sports and wants to be an electrical engineer. They attend Mt. Carmel Baptist Church.

Within two hours after the Supreme Court decision was made known, Mayor Richardson Dilworth issued the following statement of approval:

"In providing the funds for the establishment and operation of Girard College, it was Stephen Girard's intention to benefit the city of Philadelphia.

"The effect of the court's decision will, I am confident, do just that, in that it affirms the view of an enlightened society that educational opportunities should be provided without discrimination by reason of race, creed or color."

Flushed with well earned success and excitement, Councilman Alexander was swamped with congratulations throughout the day.

"I am the happiest man in the world," he declared. "The speed with whch the Supreme Court acted almost stunned me and the decision has stupendous impact.

"Such quick action shows clearly the genuineness and justness of our cause. The court ruled our attitude proper and correct — which was my thinking all along.

"Some fellow members of the bar criticized, ridiculed and even ostracized me. They asked how dare I challenge the traditional polices involving a great estate, laws and operations which they considered inviolate.

"But I am opposed to having deadened hands regulate huge estates which affect the civil rights of people. These deadened hands must be made to conform with the general welfare, progressiveness and changing attitudes."

Mr. Alexander revealed that he had spent some $2,500 of his own money in court expenses attending this case—"and thousands of hours of hard work.

"This victory climaxes 33 years of my strong, bitter fight for civil rights," he exclaimed.

Supreme Court ruling in Girard College case

afro american Sat. 5-11-57

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

Following is the U.S. Supreme Court opinion in the Girard College case: P.10

Pennsylvania vs. Board of City Trusts of Philadelphia.

The judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania is reversed. The cause is remanded for further proceedings.

The motion to dismiss the appeal for want of jurisdiction is granted. 28 U.S.C. No. 2517 (2). Treating the papers as a petition for writ of certiorari. 28 U.S.C. No. 2103, the petition is granted. 28 U.S.C. 1257 (3).

Stephen Girard in a will probated in 1831 left a fund in trust for the erection, maintenance and operation of a "college."

'WHITE MALE ORPHANS'

The will provided that the college was to admit "as many poor, white male orphans between the ages of 6 and 10 years as the said income should be adequate to maintain."

The will named as trustees the City of Philadelphia.

The provisions of the will were carried out by the State and the city and the college was opened in 1848. Since 1869, by virtue of an act of the Pennsylvania Legislature, the trust has been administered and the college operated by the "Board of Directors of City Trusts of the City of Philadelphia." Pa. Laws of 1869, No. 176. P.S. Pa. Annotated 1957. Title 53 No. 1365.

ADMISSION REFUSED

In February, 1954, the petitioners, Foust and Felder, applied for admission to the college. They met all the qualifications except that they were Negroes. For this reason the board refused to admit them.

They petitioned to the Orphans' Court of Philadelphia county for an order directing the board to admit them, alleging that their exclusion because of race violated the 14th Amendment of the Constitution.

The State of Pennsylvania and the City of Philadelphia joined in the suit, also contending that the board's action violated the 14th Amendment. The Orphans' Court rejected the Constitutional contention and refused to order the applicants' admission. 4 D. and C. 2d, 671 (Orphans' Court of Philadelphia.)

AGENCY OF STATE

This was affirmed by the Pennsylvania Supreme Court 386 Pa. 548. The board which operated Girard College is an agency of the State of Pennsylvania.

Therefore, even though the board was acting as a trustee, its refusal to admit Foust and Felder to the college because they were Negroes was discrimination by the State. Such discrimination is forbidden by the 14th Amendment; Brown V. Board of Education. 347 U.S. 483. Accordingly, the judgment of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

DISCRIMINATION

Negroes Claim Court Violated Amendment

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 15 (AP) — Attorneys for two Negro boys denied admission to Girard College charged today that the Philadelphia Orphans Court violated the 14th Amendment to the Constitution in naming a private board to administer the school.

Girard College was created in the will of Stephen Girard, early American banker, merchant and philanthropist, who stipulated that admission was for "poor white orphans" only. He stipulated that the Board of City Trusts should run the institution which today has assets valued at more than 100 million dollars.

The U.S. Supreme Court ordered the two Negro boys admitted as long as the public agency runs the school.

The Orphans Court, which originally had denied admission to the Negro youngsters, then removed the public trustee and set up a private one instead.

It is this action that attorneys Raymond Pace Alexander and William T. Coleman, Jr., are appealing to Pennsylvania's Supreme Court. The state's highest tribunal originally had upheld the Girard will, and the city trustee, until that decision was upset by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Alexander and Coleman said in a brief filed with the State Supreme Court, which they released publicly themselves, that the lower court's action in substituting a private trustee would "provide a blueprint for those who seek to thwart the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which have rejected the separate but equal doctrine" on treatment of the races.

The case is expected to be argued before the State Supreme Court next week.

Segregation: Private vs. Public

(From The Christian Science Monitor)

Way back in 1831 wealthy Stephen Girard set up a $2,000,000 trust to esetablish a school for "poor white, male orphans." That seemed reasonable in Philadelphia 125 years ago if he wished it that way. But he stipulated that the school should be administered by the City of Philadelphia, which made it quasi-public. And the terms of the trust thus came in conflict with the 1954 Supreme Court decision on school segregation.

The Pennsylvania court which had jurisdiction might have solved the problem in either of two ways: By declaring the terms of the trust unenforceable under the law and striking out the segregation clause. Or by removing the city-appointed trustees and replacing them so as to turn the school into a private activity. It chose the latter.

Its choice could be the subject of honest debate both as to its bearing on today's public policy and on yesterday's intent of the testator. And the case is being appealed. But the decision points to the probability that racial biases and preferences expressed thorugh private institutions, though subject to esthical judgments, will not be subject to legal compulsions one way or the other.

Appeal taken vs. Girard College

PHILADELPHIA

The Girard College case went back to the Pennsylvania State Supreme Court on Monday, this time to void the Orphan's Court action in naming a private board of trustees.

The Orphans Court had removed the city Board of City Trusts and named 13 business and professional persons to operate the college.

This action was taken to circumvent a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that a public board of trustees may not maintain the college for "poor white male orphans" as decreed in Stephen Girard's will.

UNDER THE Supreme Court directive, colored youngsters who are otherwise eligible, would have to be admitted to the institution.

Of the 13 new trustees, six are members of the Board of City Trusts. The Orphans Court directed them to resign from that body in order to serve in their new capacity.

Joined by city and state attorneys, Raumond P. Alexander who fought the case to the U.S. Supreme Court on behalf of two colored applicants, appealed the Orphan's Court action to the State Supreme Court.

Their petition asked a Supreme Court order to serve as a "supercedeas."

Such an order would hold up all actions taken by the Orphans Court in the appointment and service of a new trustee board, and all operation of the college under a new private administration.

In conjunction with replacing the board of trustees, the Orphans Court had also dismissed appeals by Mr. Alexander, the city and state for reopening the case.

Filing the appeals were Mr. Alexander and William A. Coleman, on behalf of the student applicants; David Berger, city solicitor and Abraham Freedman, special counsel, on behalf of the city; and Thomas P. McBride, attorney - general; and Lois Forer, deputy, as counsel for the state of Pennsylvania.

THE NEW trustees were named in a decree handed down by all six judges of the Orphans Court.

The trustees are: Revelle W. Brown, board chairman of the Reading Co. executive committee; John A. Diemand, president of the Insurance Co. of North America; Dr. Gilson Colby Engel, president of staff, Lankenau Hospital;

Walter S. Franklin, former president, Pennsylvania Railroad; Walter B. Gibbons, former chancellor of the Philadelphia Bar Association.

Also, Hubert J. Horan Jr., president of the Broad Street Trust Co.; Louis P. Hoyer, former superintendent of Philadelphia public schools; Frederick H. Levis, vice president, Lionel D. Edie and Co., investment consultants;

David F. Maxwell, immediate past president of the American Bar Association; Mina F. Oliver, former N.Y.C. public school teacher and wife of Common Pleas Judge L. Stauffer Oliver.

Also, Roland Rodrock Randall, real estate counselor; Harry G. Schad, vice president, Atlantic Refining Co., and Morris Wolf, attorney.

The court directed six of those named who are presently members of the Board of City Trusts to resign from that body.

They are Brown, Diemand, Gibbons, Horan, Schad and Wolf.

Dieman, who is president of the Board of City Trusts, and Schad are graduates of Girard College.

THE DECREE stated that the 13 trustees shall serve for three years, or until such time as their successors are appointed.

They shall serve without pay. They shall not acquire any personal interest or make any profit or gain from administration of the $100 million estate, the court said.

The trustees are to be known as the "Trustees of The Estate of Stephen Girard Deceased."

Orphans' Court ordered the trustees to select one or more approved banks or trust companies as the depositories of the estate's funds.

It ordered them to make a complete audit of their books annually.

Finally, the judges directed the trustees to enter security in the amount of $3 million with approved corporate surety as a bond for the performance of their duties.

The court filed four separate opinions dismissing the various petitions taken against its order of Sept. 11.

That order held that the primary purpose of Girard's will was to benefit "poor white male orphans." It ruled that this provision should prevail over the one establishing a public trustee.

* * *

IN THEIR appeals, the city and state argued that the reverse is true.

The Board of City Trusts has administered Girard College ever since its creation by the State Legislature in 1869.

In replacing the board after 88 years, the Orphans' Court responded to the U.S. Supreme Court stricture against a state agency barring colored applicants to the college.

Such a bar, said the highest court on April 29, constituted racial discrimination in violation of the 14th Amendment. It returned the case to the State Supreme Court "for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion."

On June 28, the State Supreme Court returned the case to Orphans' Court.

Orphans' Court on September 11 removed the board as trustee and said it would name another. There followed appeals by the city and state for reopening of the case—appeals which the court rejected.

Negroes Claim Court Violated Amendment

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 15 (AP) — Attorneys for two Negro boys denied admission to Girard College charged today that the Philadelphia Orphans Court violated the 14th Amendment to the Constitution in naming a private board to administer the school.

Girard College was created in the will of Stephen Girard, early American banker, merchant and philanthropist, who stipulated that admission was for "poor white orphans" only. He stipulated that the Board of City Trusts should run the institution which today has assets valued at more than 100 million dollars.

The U.S. Supreme Court ordered the two Negro boys admitted as long as the public agency runs the school.

The Orphans Court, which originally had denied admission to the Negro youngsters, then removed the public trustee and set up a private one instead.

It is this action that attorneys Raymond Pace Alexander and William T. Coleman, Jr., are appealing to Pennsylvania's Supreme Court. The state's highest tribunal originally had upheld the Girard will and the city trustee, until that decision was upset by the U.S. Supreme Court.

Alexander and Coleman said in a brief filed with the State Supreme Court, which they released publicly themselves, that the lower court's action in substituting a private trustee would "provide a blueprint for those who seek to thwart the recent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States which have rejected the 'separate but equal doctrine' on treatment of the races.

The case is expected to be argued before the State Supreme Court next week.

Girard College integration case up again

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 23—(AP)—The constitutional right of Negro boys to enroll in privately endowed Girard College despite a will restriction to "poor, white male orphans" was attacked and defended this week, both legally and emotionally, before Pennsylvania's Supreme Court.

The state's highest tribunal—with only five of the seven justices hearing the racial issue—last year held that the will of Merchant-Financier Stephen Girard flatly excluded Negro students in the school founded in 1831. It ruled the will must be upheld.

THIS RULING was reversed by the U. S. Supreme Court in April, on the ground that the Board of City Trusts of Philadelphia, described as a state agency, operated the private school and that any discrimination because of race, color or religion violated the 14th Amendment to the federal constitution.

Back came the case to the state Supreme Court, which promptly passed it along to the Philadelphia Orphans Court for final action. The original attack on the will was launched nearly four years ago by two fatherless Negro boys seeking admission to Girard College.

The Orphans Court removed the Board of City Trusts, appointed a new group of private trustees and said the will's provision for white orphans only was still valid.

The state of Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia blasted this view today, charging that it permits the continuance of racial discrimination.

Not so, argued the attorney for the new trustees, pressing this point: "This is in no sense a segregation or discrimination case. It is a case of charitable trusts."

ATTY. GEN. THOMAS D. McBride contended that many laws have been passed by city and state, under requirements of Girard's will, and that the public has a vested interest in this estate.

McBride said that in 1831 the Girard estate was worth four millions whereas today, under management of a public agency, its value is nearly 100 millions.

"No legal fiction or legerdemain can cancel 126 years of history of active state and city participation in the administration of the trust," McBride said.

ARTHUR LITTLETON, former president of the Pennsylvania Bar Assn. who represented the new trustees, said "everyone has been asserting his rights in this case—the city, the state, the Negroes. But what about the beneficiaries of this estate, the poor white male orphans?"

He said their rights, too, must be protected—"plus the rights of a person making a will and leaving his property to those he pleases."

Raymond Pace Alexander, attorney for the two Negro boys seeking admission, addressed the court entirely on what he called the "social and moral aspects of this case."

Alexander, a Philadelphia councilman, said if Girard were making his will today he would not discriminate against Negroes, that he would include them among the beneficiaries of his estate.

Littleton said that wasnt' the issue at all.

"WHAT IS IMPORTANT though," he went on, "is that what Stephen Girard did was lawful. If the principles of private trusts are jettisoned, if they can be attacked as discriminatory, then all charitable philanthropies will be in jeopardy."

The court took the case under advisement. Under normal procedures a decision is not expected before next year.

14e(1) Discrimination

ATLANTIC CITY—A $300,000 estate case which, the lawyers involved said, poses the identical legal and racial problems raised in the famous Girard College case in Philadelphia by Raymond Pace Alexander, noted attorney, will be argued in the Superior Court here on Dec. 81.

The case stems from racial stipulations in two trust funds set up in the will of Mrs. Laura E. [illegible] of Ventnor, who died July 13, 1956, at the age of 81.

She left her residuary estate in trust, and directed that one-half income be used to provide food and clothing for "needy, white, American - born wives and children of felons confined in the Eastern Penitentiary in Philadelphia.

* * *

MRS. TYLER directed that the balance of the income be used to provide free hospitalization at Hahnemann Hospital in Philadelphia for "needy, white, American-born children under 14 years of age, with an intelligence quota of not less than 75."

Complainants in the case are Allen M. Mills of Haddonfield and Joseph M. Hamilton of Philadelphia, executors of the estate.

The defendants are the Philadelphia Board of City Trusts, which was named to handle both trusts; Hahnemann Hospital and various beneficiaries.

EDWIN G. SCOVEL of Camden, attorney for the executors, said Thursday that doubts exists as to the legality of the trusts in the restrictions placed on the eligibility of beneficiaries in view of the Girard College case.

He has asked Superior Court Judge Vincent S. Haneman to make a legal construction of the will in view of its racial restrictions.

In the Girard College case, Stephen Girard left his estate in trust for the education of "poor, white orphans" to be administered by the Philadelphia Board of City Trusts.

TWO COLORED students who were denied admission to Girard College, through their counsel, Mr. Alexander, appealed to the Pennsylvania State Supreme Court which upheld the action of the trustees.

Mr. Alexander carried the case to the U.S. Supreme Court which held, in substance, that as long as the Girard trust was being administered by a public or governmental agency, no discrimination could obtain.

Decision opened the way for possible admittance of Robert to the college. Mrs. Felder has been trying to have one of her sons admitted since 1954 when she tried to have son, Ivan, 12, (left) enrolled, but he had passed the age limit when the matter reached the court in 1955. Robert then fell heir to the opportunity. Also shown is a third son, Samuel, 16, 2nd from left. (INP Soundphoto)

Justice Overtakes Mr. Girard

Pittsburgh Pa.

Wherever Stephen Girard may be, he must have felt last week that justice had finally overtaken him when the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that Negroes must be admitted to the school in Philadelphia which his $6 million provided for "poor, white, male orphans."

Girard College

He certainly never planned it that way because he had a sense of deep guilt over the millions of dollars he stole from the estate of the Haitian liberator, Toussaint L'Overture, which was intended for the latter's family.

It looked like everything was so fixed that a Negro child could never enter, and when the ban was contested, the Pennsylvania courts went along with Girard's program laid down in 1831 and thought to be valid 125 years later.

We are glad to note that Dr. Newbold Cooper, president of Girard, is now ready to admit Negroes if told to do so by the board of city trusts, and we congratulate brilliant Atty. Raymond Pace Alexander for a great legal victory.

We cannot help thinking how much better it would have been, however, if the authorities of the City of Brotherly Love had had the grace to have kept pace with the times and not waited to be forced to do the decent thing.

After all, it would not have been the first time that a will had been overridden.

College Gets $11,000 In Farm Equipment

GRAMBLING, La. — (ANP) — With the acquisition of nearly $11,000 worth of mechanized farm equipment from the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co., more emphasis can be given to the farm mechanics phase of the new technical agriculture program at Grambling college here, according to Dr. C. C. Lewis, head of the Agriculture department at the school.

The equipment was secured on a percentage lease basis renewable each year and will be used with the 14 students currently enrolled in the farm mechanics. In all will benefit from practical experiences with the equipment through operations on the college's 300 acre demonstration farm.

PRACTICAL PROGRAM

The program in technical agriculture at Grambling college was course under instructor Samuel V. Walton. Approximately 30 students approved by the State Department of Education in Sept., 1956 and first put into operation at the college during the second semester of that session. The program is designed, Dr. Lewis stated, to prepare for the newer type of agriculture job opportunities such as farm mechanics; food preservation, processing, and production; soil conservation; and extension workers, specialists, and commercial agents.

Students pursuing work in Technical Agriculture will be prepared to fill jobs as dairy plant assistants, herdsmen, farm foremen and managers, crop and livestock farmers, milk testers, farm implement operators and repairmen, hatchery assistants, and nursery growers and gardeners.

High school graduates are eligible for the work in technical agriculture and may secure majors in general agriculture, poultry husbandry, animal husbandry, horticulture, and floriculture. A 2-year terminal program in the above fields along with farm mechanics is also available for the semi-skilled worker. Scholarship aid is being made possible for students who wish to enter the agricultural professions.

Mrs. R. Parks hired as Hampton Hostess

HAMPTON, Va.—Mrs. Rosa L. Parks, the catalytic agent in the historic Montgomery bus boycott, began work last week as hostess at Holly Tree Inn guest house on the Hampton Institute campus.

Mrs. Parks came to Hampton from Detroit where she'd been living since moving from Montgomery. Her husband, a barber, hopes to join her here soon.

"After so much turbulence, ill will, heartache and uprooting, I am looking forward with great pleasure to my work on this serene, beautiful college campus," she declared.

During most of World War II, Mrs. Parks was employed at the guest house at Maxwell AFB in Alabama. Her duties at Hampton include supervision of campus rooms for 34 faculty members and operation of Trustee House, which provides accommodations for campus visitors.

She replaces Mrs. Alice Leedham, who recently resigned after 22 years' service.

Despite her experience of being held by authorities in Alabama, the court trial and the boycott of her husband when he tried to get work, there was not a trace of bitterness in Mrs. Parks' manner.

"I was born in Tuskegee, graduated from Alabama State High School, Alabama is my native home, and I am looking forward to going back some day to visit my many friends here," she stated.

MRS. ROSA PARKS

ARTHUR HOWE, JR., director of admissions at Yale University, was elected chairman of Hampton Institute's board of trustees at their regular fall meeting in New York City. Though he is a graduate of Yale and has served on its faculty since 1951, Howe has long been identified with the Virginia college whose board he now heads. His grandfather, General Samuel Chapman Armstrong, was Hampton Institute's founder and Howe's father was the college's fifth president, serving from 1931 to 1940. He is married to the former Margaret Mayo Burke, of Washington, D. C.

Blasts Smear

Hampton Head Raps News Story

HAMPTON, Va.—Hampton Institute's president, Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, lashed back at attempts by a Virginia evening daily paper to impute to him guilt by association as a result of his speaking at an integration seminar at the Highlander Folk School.

The Times Herald, Newport News, published reports of investigation of the Georgia Commission on Education which characterized the Monteagle, Tenn., school as "a Communist training school." The story was carried prominently under four column headlines.

IN AN endeavor to justify the accusation against the school, the Georgia commission issued a newspaper-sized broadside that set forth the supposedly communistic background of a number of those at the seminar over the Labor Day week-end.

Reportedly, 100,000 of these folders were printed and their mailing has been extensive—throughout the South and elsewhere.

The publication of the Georgia Commission's "disclosures" took place during the time President Moron was in New York City attending the semi-annual meetings of the college's board of trustees. He answered the charges, after his return to campus.

Hampton Charts $5,000,000 Fund Raising Drive

HAMPTON, Va. — New emphasis on scientific education, a new building and increased faculty salaries are among the goals of a $5,000,000 Centennial fund-raising drive approved by the Hampton Institute trustees in their fall meeting.

Hampton's President, Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, met last week with the executive committee of the college's Board of Trustees to blueprint actual implementation of the fund-raising program, voted by the Board at a meeting last month in New York.

Money raised will serve as the economic foundation for a ten-year development program designed bring the Hampton curriculum in line with current and future educational needs.

Hampton Maps Ten-Year Plan

HAMPTON, Va. — New emphasis on scientific education, a new building and increased faculty salaries are among the goals of a $5,000,000 centennial fund-raising drive approved by the Hampton Institute trustees in their fall meeting.

Hampton's president, Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, met last week with the executive committee of the college's trustees to blueprint actual implementation of the fund-raising program, voted by the board at a meeting last month in New York.

TEN YEAR PROGRAM

Money raised will serve as the economic foundation for a ten-year development program designed to bring the Hampton curriculum in line with current and future educational needs.

According to Dr. Moron, about 40 per cent of the $5,000,000 fund will be added to the Institute's endowment, assuring increased yield for future improvements.

Nearly $3,000,000 is earmarked for new teaching and research in the sciences and for a large classroom building now in the design stage.

Dr. Moron said that the Board of Trustees has voted to raise student tuition as a step toward meeting the continuing deficit faced by the college. The increase of $83.50 will raise the total yearly costs, including tuition, board, room, activities, to $900 beginning next fall.

HAMPTON OFFICIAL.—Arthur Howe Jr., director of admissions at Yale University was elected chairman of Hampton Institute's Board of Trustees at their regular fall meeting in New York last week. MORON and FINLETTER

Sat. 6-22-57

HAMPTON, Va.—The proposal for an academic center to study world-wide integration made here by Thomas K. Finletter, former secretary of the Air Force, in the commencement address at Hampton Institute was accepted by the college president, Alonzo G. Moron.

1409

Moron regards Finletter's proposal as "a challenge and a step that can be taken by our country towards the solution of the twin problems: peace and the achievement of human equality."

FINLETTER SUGGESTED that a group of distinguished social scientists be brought together to conduct research into the problem of world-wide integration. In evaluating the speech, President Moron compared it to that made by General George C. Marshall, at Harvard, in which he outlined the Marshall Plan.

Finletter stated that his proposed center for the study of integration on a world-wide basis would "most appropriately originate in the South . . . because . . . it would be free of any charge that there was meddling by people of the North or the other parts of the country."

Hugh V. Brown Elected Hampton Alumni Head

Journal & Guide p. 19
Norfolk, Va.

HAMPTON, Va. — Hugh V. Brown, of Goldsboro, N. C., was elected president of the National Hampton Alumni Association at its 41st annual meeting.

6-22-57

The 87th annual commencement of the Association's home college, Hampton Institute, was the occasion of this annual reunion. Doswell E. Brooks, retiring president of the Association, announced the other officers elected for a two year term:

First vice president, Nathaniel White, Durham, N. C.; second vice president, Mrs. A. D. P. Williams, Hampton, Va.; third vice president, Junious Rhone, Philadelphia, Pa.; treasurer, Walter R. Brown, Hampton, Va.; recording secretary, Laura V. Billups, Hampton, Va.; parliamentarian, Lorenzo C. White, Hampton Va.; auditor, Presley Reed, Washington, D. C.; and chaplain, J. Alexander Williams, Newport News, Va.

HIGHLIGHTS OF the annual reunion included the report by the college president, Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, and the address by Donald E. Smith, director of Development, Washington and Lee University, was elected president of the sity, Lexington, Va.

Smith spoke on the reunion theme: "Techniques for Building an Effective Alumni Association." He defined the common goal of the college and the association to be imparting strength to the educational institution to enable it to succeed in its task of equipping men and women for life. He stated that the alumni association should endeavor to create opportunities for the volunteer alumni worker to serve his college. This, like many other parts o fthe program, should be a mutual endeavor between college and alumni.

PRESIDENT MORON'S report to the alumni association outlined some of the accomplishments of the college in the year past. Notable among the items he pointed out to the 400 persons attending was the response which greeted the resumption of a program of graduate study at Hampton Institute.

"It is now possible, during summer and regular sessions, to earn the Master of Arts degree in Education here," explained the president. Speaking of the school's finances, he noted that Hampton has become the first college in the country to repay a loan granted by the Housing and Home Finance Agency. This was the loan secured to erect a new men's dormitory, Harkness Hall.

DR. MORON concluded his remarks by outlining some of the needs of the college and pointed out the ways that alumni could assist the school to meet these needs.

Among the resolutions adopted by the representatives of the thirty chapters from around the U. S. who attended was to organize a scholarship fund. The association set a goal of $60,000 to be raised in a two year period.

THE TEN CLASSES, each five years dating from 1907, at the reunion donated over $2,000 to their alma mater. In addition, over $4,000 was received from all other alumni through the reunion activities. This latter amount is for the Scholarship Fund.

Mrs. Laura Jackson of Portsmouth, Va., represented the oldest class in attendance at the reunion — 1895. In the past she was active in fund raising activities with the Hampton Institute choir.

Dr. Ambrose Caliver To Speak Feb. 3 At Hampton Inst.

Chattanooga Independent Fri. 2-1-57

HAMPTON, Virginia (Special)— Dr. Ambrose Caliver, Assistant to the Commissioner and Chief, Adult Education Section, Office of Education, U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare, will be the main speaker at the annual Founder's Day Exercises at Hampton Institute on Sunday, February 3. Preceded by the usual Sunday Worship Service at 11 a.m., during which Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of HI, will deliver the Founder's Day sermon, DDr. Caliver will speak at 3.30 p.m in Ogden Hall on "Education for a Changing World."

Dr. Caliver, a native of Virginia, and a former Dean of Fisk University, received his B.A. degree from Knoxville College in 1915, the M.A. from the University of Wisconsin in 1920, and the Ph.D. from Columbia University in 1930. He also holds four honorary degrees.

A former Director of the Office of Education Literacy Education Project (1946-50) and summer instructor at Hampton Institute (1931) Dr. Caliver has published articles in School Life, The Harfard Educational Review, Phylon, Opportunity, The American Teacher, and many other professional and learned journals. He has also published some 20 books and bulletins for the U.S. Office of Education.

Founder's Day has been observed annually at Hampton Institute since January 28, 1894, the year following the death of General Samuel Chapman Armstrong, HI founder, on May 11, 1893. General Armstrong was born in the Hawaiian Islands on January 30, 1839, and it has become the custom to celebrate Founders' Day on the Sunday nearest his birthday. After graduation from Williams College in 1862, he was appointed Captain in the 125th New York Volunteers, and later became Colonel of the 9th Colored Troops. From 1866-1868 he was in charge of the Freedmen's Bureau at Hampton, Va., and in 1868 he founded Hampton Institute, and served as its principal for 25 years until his death.

The exercises are open to the public.

"Big Jeff" Quitting At Hampton; Not Saying Why

Sat. 3-2-57 Norfolk, Va.

HAMPTON — Reports that Harry "Big Jeff" Jefferson, head grid coach at Hampton Institute, is planning to terminate his tenure at the college were confirmed here this week by the popular grid mentor.

However, the reasons for his departure are not being disclosed by the administration or the veteran coach.

IT WAS LEARNED by the Journal and Guide, however, that Coach Jefferson, who has been Hampton's head football coach since 1949 and athletic director since 1951, and the administration have been unable to agree on the school's athletic policy.

As yet, no official announcement of the termination of Coach Jefferson services has been made but, according to information received by the Guide, he will announce his resignation within the next two weeks.

COACH JEFFERSON has been coaching grid teams for the past 33 years in five colleges and over the 33-year period, his teams have won 179 games, lost 79 and tied 17.

COACH HARRY JEFFERSON
Quitting At Hampton

At Hampton, the Jefferson-coached grid squads have posted a 31-35-1 mark, the poorest of his career. He began his coaching career at Kelley Miller High School in Clarksburg, W. Va. in 1922. During his collegiate coaching career his grid teams have compiled the follownig records:

Wilberforce (4-2-0), Bluefield (28-6-3), A. and T. (5-7-1), Bluefield (11-4-1) and Va. State (100-25-11). His 15-year tenure at Va. State College (1934-49) was highlighted by a four-year stretch, 1936-39, in which the Trojans lost only one game — to Morgan State College in 1937. Jefferson-coached Va. State teams won CIAA titles in 1936, '38, '39 and '45. In 1927-'28 he coached unbeaten teams at Bluefield.

Hampton Afro-American pays 20-Yr. loan in 5

Sat. 4-6-57 Baltimore, Md.

HAMPTON, Va. — Hampton Institute recently became the first college in the country to repay in full a loan made to it under the College Housing Program, it was announced last week by Housing Administrator Albert M. Cole.

"I congratulate you and Hampton Institute on winning this distinction," Mr. Cole told President Alonzo G. Moron in a ceremony in the Housing Administrator's office.

"The repayment of this loan, many years ahead of its due date, is a credit to your institution and releases funds that now become available to meet other pressing housing needs in our colleges and universities."

A LOAN of $775,000 was made to Hampton Institute by the Housing and Home Finance Agency on Dec. 12, 1951, to be used together with $112,996 of the college's own funds to build a dormitory for 257 men students.

The building was occupied in Sept. 1954 and was dedicated on Oct. 30, 1954 at a ceremony in which Housing Administrator Cole participated.

Although the loan was to be repaid over a period of 20 years, Hampton Institute accelerated its retirement of bonds and made the final payment a little more than five years after approval of the loan.

Undergraduate courses include: child and adolescent psychology; principles of guidance; organic chemistry; general zoology; history and philosophy of education; English literature; science for children; college algebra; state and local government; children's literature; backgrounds and history of American civilization; along with some 40 other education and liberal arts courses.

Hampton First US College To Repay Govt.

Sat. 4-6-57 Norfolk, Va.

Special to Journal and Guide

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Hampton (Va.) Institute set a "first" in school and college financing here this week by becoming the first college in the nation to repay in full a loan to the Housing and Finance Agency.

During a brief ceremony in the office of Housing and Finance Commissioner Albert Cole, Hampton paid the entire remaining part of a loan of $775,000 used in the construction of Harkness Hall on the institute campus. Representing Hampton at the ceremonies were Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president, and Dr. Saul Purdue, Hampton board member and principal of a Baltimore school.

THE LOAN TO Hampton was made n 1951 and was to have been paid in full by 1971. The institute, however, was able to meet the obligation in only six years.

Loans to colleges and institutions are made from a fund set up for the purpose within the Housing and Finance Agency. Such loans are earmarked for the construction of dormitory facilities for students and faculty.

* * *

HAMPTON WAS one of the first colleges in the nation to avail itself of one of these loans, and in Wednesday's ceremonies became the first college in the nation to repay the loan in full.

Harkness Hall is the ultra-modern new men's dormitory on the Hampton campus. The building was dedicated in 1954.

Hampton Summer Session Offers Fifty Courses

World P. 2 Wed. 4-10-57 Birm. Ala.

HAMPTON, Va. — Both 6-week and 9-week terms of Hampton Institute's Summer Session, offering more than 50 different courses, will open simultaneously on Monday, June 17, according to an announcement by Dr. Hugh M. Gloster, Director of the Summer Session.

The Summer Session is an integral part of the college program and is administered by regular faculty members and visiting professors who offer courses and workshops designed primarily to meet the need and interests of students and in-service teachers. The curriculum of the 1957 Hampton Institute Summer Session is designed to meet the needs of three distinct groups:

1) Graduate courses for students and teachers-in-service working towards a Master's Degree in (a) educational administration and supervision; (b) teaching in the secondary school, with emphasis on English, the natural and social sciences; and (c) teaching in the elementary school.

2) Undergraduate courses for students and teachers-in-service working toward (a) a Bachelor's degree in business, general studies home economics, nursing, teacher education and technology; and (b) taking courses to certify in teaching in elementary or secondary schools.

3) Pre-College courses for high school graduates interested in (a) well-planned guidance toward college adjustment and success; and (b) preliminary studies of fundamental college subjects: English and mathematics, with 3 semester hours of college credit in each, if the student maintains an average of "C" or above. These pre-college courses have been most effective in a more successful transition from high school to college, offering both a better command of basic subjects and a greater measure of personal maturity.

Registration for the 1957 Summer Session will take place on Monday, June 17, in the Old Gymnasium. All questions relating to courses, schedules, and credits, which are not answered clearly in the catalog free for the asking, should be referred to the Director of the Summer Session.

Hampton sues gets $250,000 for 53 acres

Afro-American p. 13

Baltimore, Md.

HAMPTON, Va. — Hampton Institute, which sought an immediate injunction last September against the Virginia State Highway Department to halt construction of the Hampton Roads bridge-tunnel access road across its property, has reached an agreement deeding 53.93 acres to the state for $250,000.

In the petition for an injunction, the institute originally named Nello L. Teer and the Bower Construction Co., both of North Carolina, as co-defendants.

The school based its action on an old state statute that prevents condemnation for highway purposes any education institutional land with 500 feet of a building used for educational purposes.

* * *

AFTER THE suit was filed, Hampton Circuit Court Judge Frank J. Kearney granted the state highway commissioner the right to intervene as a party defendant in the suit against its contractors.

The upshot of the matter was a deed recorded last week in the office of C. M. Gibson, Hampton clerk of courts, which shows the state bought the property "for $1 and other good and valuable considerations."

The bridge-tunnel access road now will become the east boundary of Hampton Institute.

DISCUSSING THE settlement price, Hampton Institute's President Alonzo G. Moron said that consideration was given to the fruit trees and to the dairy farm on the land in question.

The dairy farm was part of the agriculture school, discontinued two years ago. Dr. Moron said that the dairy will be abandoned, but the adjacent land will be maintained as a horticultural farm.

Hampton Gets $10,000 For Science Study

Journal & Guide Sat. 5-18-57 Norfolk, Va.

HAMPTON, Va. — For support of an In-Service Institute for Secondary School Teachers of Chemistry and Mathematics, the National Science Foundation, Washington, D. C. has awarded to Hampton Institute a grant of $10,000 to cover a period of approximately thirty-two weeks, beginning with the academic year 1957-1958, as announced by Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of HI.

Hampton Institute is one of fifteen colleges to receive such a grant, and its project is aimed at (1) improving the subject-matter competence of the participating teachers; (2) strengthening the capacity of these teachers to motivate students to consider careers in science; and (3) bringing these teachers into personal contact with the competent scientists who make up the staff of the institute, with the view of stimulating interest and increasing their prestige professionally.

PARTICIPANTS shall have their tuition, fees and travel expenses paid from the grant, and the program is so arranged as not to interfere with their own teaching schedules.

The program will be under the direction of Dr. Frederick D. Inge, chairman of Dept. of Natural Sciences, and the personnel designated for the courses are drawn from HI's regular faculty: Dr. Victor H. Fields, professor chemistry, and Professor Severin R. Beyma in mathematics.

For Fourth Year!

Hampton To Sponsor Special College For Virgin Islands Youths

HAMPTON, Va — This summer will mark the fourth session of the Virgin Islands Experimental College to be conducted under the sponsorship of Hampton Institute. Alonzo G. Moron, Hampton Institute president, announced last week that the 1957 session will be held from July 8 to August 16 at the Christiansted High School, St Croix, V.I.

Dr Moron explained that the program was originated in 1953 by Hampton Institute with the support of the Fund for the Advancement of Education. The continuation of his program is being made possible by appropriations for this purpose from the local government funds. The goal of the entire program, of which the summer session is but a part, is to assist in improving the quality of teaching available to students in the public schools of the Virgin Islands. It is hoped that this program will markedly improve their opportunities for equality in education with other citizens of the U.S.

In the operation of the program, Hampton Institute has provided professional leadership for a study of the educational program of the public schools of the Virgin Islands and of the achievement of the graduates of the high schools there. An in-service training program is being administered for the Islands' teachers during the school terms, as well as in the summer period. Another phase of this program involves the training at Hampton Institute of a selected number of Virgin Island students for work in the public schools there after graduation.....

The hardship of having no college or other institution of higher learning in he Islands partly explains the fact that, before the Hampton Institute program was begun, only about one-third of the public schhool teachers had college training. Some had not had opportunities for any work beyond the high school level and thirty of the 185 teachers employed in 1951-52 had not completed high school.

Since the Hampton Institute's in-service training program was launced in October 1953, 21 college courses have been offered to the Islands' public school teachers. In addition, this summer's session will include eight different colege courses. These courses have been taught by distinguished members of the faculties of Hampton, Howard, Haverford, Atlanta University, the University of Chicago and other colleges. An effort has been made to always secure those persons best qualified in their academic area from throughout the U.S.

The faculty for this summer's session of the Experimental College has been announced by President Moron. Dr Wilcomb Washburn, of the history department of William and Mary College, will offer courses in economic geography and national government.

William Kearney, associate professor and director of Audio-Visua Aids in the Communications Center of Hampton Institute, will conduct courses in English and Audio Visual Aids. Mrs Lelia Washburn Assistant Professor of History at Hampton Institute, will offer courses in American history. Courses in music appreciation and musicianship will be given by Hugo Bornn, assistant professor of Music at Hampton Institute.

Twenty-five scholarships are expected to be made availabale from their local government to Virgin Island teachers. They will be awarded on the basis of scholarship, need and tenure in the school system there. Preference will be given to those taking the maximum load of three courses.

Ex-AF Head Seeks Study Of Integration

HAMPTON, Va., June 1 (AP)—A former Air Force Secretary has proposed that an academic center be created for the study of integration "on a world-wide basis" and was told Virginia's Hampton Institute might be a suitable site for such a center.

The proposal by Thomas K. Finletter, Air Force secretary from 1950 to 1953, in a speech to Hampton Institute graduates was promptly accepted as a "challenge" by Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, president of the college.

Dr. Moron said Hampton Institute "seems to qualify for consideration as a location for the kind of center proposed by Mr. Finletter."

"Hampton stands ready to accept this challenge because of our 90 years of history as an interracial facility for education," the college president told the audience attending the commencement exercises at the Institute.

Finletter had told the graduates that such a research and study center ideally should be located at some Southern college or university. A center of the type suggested, he said, would be in a position to cope with a major foreign policy problem facing the United States—its position with the peoples of Asia, Africa and the Near East.

"I envision this center, too, as an integrated microcosm of those societies in which our young people will be working. I believe that living in such a setting will better equip Americans to divest themselves of those preconceived stereotypes that will bar them from their new assignments abroad from communicating our essense—our policy—to the new free people of the world," he told approximately 190 seniors at the Institute, a predominantly Negro institution overlooking Hampton Roads.

LETTER FROM HAMPTON

Afro-American Sat. 5-11-57

Match Fisk?

Baltimore, Md.

By ALONZO G. MORON

President Hampton Institute

It is difficult to answer that question:

"Do distinguished living graduates of Hampton Institute match Fisk's?" particularly after reading that one of the classmates for distinguished women is that they be wives of college presidents.

We cannot match Fisk in this regard. We should much prefer our women graduates to achieve distinction on their own; and, I think, even though Hampton has been a college for a much shorter period than Fisk, we have our share of distinguished graduates.

Our women graduates include Dorothy Maynor, Hilda Simms, Odile Sweeney of the National YWCA, Flemmie Kittrell.

THREE OF THE four presidents of Tuskegee Institute have been Hampton graduates, although only the present incumbent is a graduate of the college.

Booker T. Washington and Robert Moton graduated from the elementary and high school program at Hampton. In the field of journalism, we have produced men like William Gibson, P. L. Prattis, the Young brothers of Norfolk, and Abbott and Sengstacke of Chicago.

* * *

I think any judgment as to which college has turned out more distinguished Americans than any other "colored" college should take into consideration the length of time they have been turning out college graduates and also some more acceptable standards for deciding who is distinguished.

It is awfully easy to fall into a trap and do to ourselves what we complain about when others do it.

For example, when we say that the wives of Negro presidents are distinguished, we must also say that the wives of white college presidents are distinguished.

If we disagree with the latter, then we are using different standards in judging the former.

Choir Directors, Organist Guild To Meet June 24-28

Journal & Guide

Norfolk, Va.

HAMPTON, Va.—The 1957 Choir Directors and Organist Guild Workshop, which is a separate but integral part of the Hampton Institute Ministers' Conference and is composed of the organists and choir directors of all denominations throughout the United States, will meet with the ministers June 24-28 at Hampton Institute.

Sat. 6-15-57

The basic purpose of the Guild workshop is the encouragement and improvement of choral singing and organ playing through an intensive, dynamic instruction and performing program. The workshop will be under the direction of Charles Flax.

MR. FLAX graduated from Hampton Institute with the B. S. degree in 1933, did further study at the Eastman School of Music and the Carnegie Institute of Technology. He has taught at Phenix and at Hampton Institute. Mrs. Hattie Bright, accompanist for the Guild workshop, is a graduate of Hampton and teaches music in the public schools of warwick, Va.

The president of the Guild is Charles Butts of Portsmouth, organist of Grove Baptist church, Churchland, where the Rev. C. G. Campbell, is pastor. Mr. Butts is an active churchman and civic leader. He is founder of the Portsmouth branch of the Tidewater Organist and Choir Director's Guild.

The annual concert by the Guild will be in Ogden Hall, Thursday, June 27, at 7 p. m.

Put It At Hampton

Afro-American

Hampton Institute, through its progressive president, Dr. Alonzo G. Moron, called a conference of social scientists in New York last week.

Purpose of the meeting was to establish an academic center to study the processes of integration on a world-wide basis.

Such a center was proposed by Thomas K. Finletter, Secretary of the Air Force in the Truman cabinet, while delivering a brilliant commencement address at Hampton.

Baltimore Md.

Sat. 6-22-57

Mr. Finletter expressed belief that such a center could be in a position to cope with a major problem of foreign policy facing the United States in its relations with the uncommitted colored millions of the world.

We think the Finletter idea has considerable merit and are glad to see Dr. Moron follow through with the meeting in a private home in New York.

Summoned for the initial session were such recognized authorities on race and color as Dr. Gordon Allport of Harvard, Dr. Kenneth Clark of City College, N.Y.; Dr. Otto Klineberg and Dr. Robert Merton of Columbia; Dr. Ira De A. Reid of Haverford, and Dr. St. Clair Drake of Roosevelt University.

More than likely one or two of the philanthropic foundations would be interested in lending financial aid to such a project.

Our hope is that this center will be established at Hampton itself.

As much as any other place in the world, Virginia and its backward-looking politicians need it.

Ford fund gives Howard Medical school $400,000

Wed. 4-24-57

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Howard university has announced receipt of two grants totalling $450,000 from the Ford Foundation.

A grant of $400,000 was made to the College of Medicine, and will be used for instructional purposes; $50,000 went to the College of Liberal Arts and the Graduate School to help finance the University's expanded African Studies Program.

The medical school grant was the second of two gifts to Howard by the Foundation since September, 1956. At that time the school received $500,000. According to the terms of the grant, the money will be held by the University as an invested endowment for 10 years, during which time the income from the investment may be used for instructional purposes. After 10 years, the university will be free to use the principal sum.

The gift to Howard was one of 45 made to private medical schools in the United States in the Foundation's $900,000,000 program to strengthen medical instruction.

The gift for African Studies was also the second made to the university by the Foundation. In 1954 a grant of $29,000 enabled the program, which is an inter-departmental project, to be expanded.

It is designed to provide increased opportunities for students to study Africa and its problems, and to train graduate students to continue their studies of Africa or to work in the African field. The program is directed by Dr. E. Franklin Frazier, professor of sociology.

cine, and will be used for instructional purposes; while a $50,000 award went to the College of Liberal Arts and the Graduate School to help finance the University's expanded African Studies Program.

THE MEDICAL school grant was the second of two gifts which the Foundation announced in September, 1956. At that time the school received $500,000. According to the terms of the grant, the money will be held by the university as an invested endowment for 10 years, during which time the income from the investment may be used for instructional purposes. After 10 years the university will be free to use the principal sum.

The gift to the College of Medicine was one of 45 made to private medical schools in the United States in the Foundation's $90,000,000 program to strengthen medical instruction.

THE GIFT for African Studies was also the second made to the university by the foundatoin. In 1954 a grant of $29,000 enabled the program, which is an inter-departmental project, to be expanded. The new grant will assure the continuation of the expanded program for another five years.

Conference Optimistic On Negro Employment

Sunday Star 5 Sept A Washington D.C.

An optimistic note for the employment of Negroes in various fields, due to manpower shortages and economic growth, was sounded yesterday at a Howard University conference.

"I firmly believe that nearly all the necessary incentives and opportunities for future employment of Negro youth in all occupations are present today or soon will be," Dr. Joseph H. Douglass, program co-ordination officer, Office of the Secretary, Department of Health, Education and Welfare, told the meeting.

He laid down this program:

1. Help youth see the "golden opportunities and magnificent future which await them."

2. Help them accomplish through education, apprenticeship and guidance the necessary personal and job qualifications required for adequate preparation.

3. As citizens, help remove "current stumbling blocks by persuading industry and other employers, as well as the community at large to see the benefits to be derived by the Nation as a whole as well as themselves through encouraging and assisting Negro youth as with all other youth to write their own success stories in our democracy."

Julius A. Thomas, director, Industrial Relations, National Urban League, declared. "The way in which the economy is expanding and the obvious need for capable people to perform thousands of jobs make it impractical to tolerate any form of discrimination in employment.

"Industry and labor in their own self interest have the responsibility for creating a climate in which barriers, based on race or religion, will be completely and forever removed," he asserted.

"We are making excellent progress," he declared.

He said the concept of division of work by race must be overcome so that Negroes will not be confined to certain traditional work.

The conference, attended by 50, was held in the auditorium of the School of Engineering and Architecture. It was under the auspices of the District Federation of Civic Associations, the Washington Urban League and the university's School of Social Work.

Julius W. Hobson, chairman of this Second Annual Institute on Employment, is vice president of the association, whose president, Barrington D. Parker, welcomed the audience.

Frank Snowden To Speak At Spelman

Daily World Atlanta Ga.

Spelman College will present Dr. Frank Snowden in a lecture Friday January 11, at 8:00 p. m. in Howe Hall, Rockefeller Hall, Spelman College campus.

Dr. Snowden returned to Howard University, where he has been a member of the classics department since 1940 and professor of classics since 1945, as dean of the college of liberal arts in October, 1956. From October 1954 until last fall he served as cultural attached to the American Embassy in Rome where he was in charge of exchange programs between students and professors of the United States and Italy, made a detailed study of European education at all levels, and lectured not only at Italian Universities but in Yugoslavia Holland, and elsewhere in Europe.

In 1953 he was leaders and specialist lecturer for the International Information Administration of the Department of State in French West Africa, the Gold Coast, Nigeria, Libya, Italy, Greece and Austria.

Before going to Howard University, Dr. Snowden was for four years instructor in classics at Spelman College and Atlanta University. He is the author of numerous scholarly articles. In the March, 1956. Saturday Evening Post there appeared an article by Dr. Snowden as told to Leigh White entitled "They Always Ask Me About Negroes."

Bob White picked as H. U. coach

Afro-American Sat. 8-24-57 Baltimore Md.

WASHINGTON — Dr. Frank M. Snowden, chairman of the Committee on Intercollegiate Athletics at Howard University, on Sunday announced the appointment of Robert M. (Bob) White as instructor in physical education and coach of the varsity football team for the 1957-58 school year.

As football coach, White replaces Thomas F. (Tom) Johnson who asked to be relieved of the assignment following the 1956 season. During his four-year tenure as coach, Johnson compiled a record of 12 wins, 22 losses and 2 ties. Johnson will remain at Howard as instructor in physical education and coach of the varsity baseball team.

WHITE COMES to Howard from New Haven, Conn., where he served as program director of the city's Community School recreation program for the past year.

Prior to accepting the New Haven position he spent four years as football coach and athletic director at Elizabeth City (N.C.) State Teachers College.

At the North Carolina school White's teams compiled at 28-6-2 record, winning the Eastern Intercollegiate Athletic Conference championship each year during his tenure. White was also selected as EIAC "Coach of the Year" for four consecutive years.

THE 45-YEAR-OLD mentor entered the coaching field in 1939, serving as assistant coach to the late Henry A. Kean at Kentucky State. He was named head coach at the Frankfort school in 1947 and served for one year. His next two years were spent at Maryland State College where he served as line coach under Vernon E. (Skip) McCain.

On leaving the Maryland school White accepted the position of head coach at Delaware State College where he remained for the 1950 and 1951 seasons. From Delaware he moved on to Elizabeth City.

Howard Choir In World Premiere

The principals in the recent series of three recitals performed by the Howard University Choir and the National Symphony Orchestra are shown together at a luncheon given in their honor at Howard last week. They are Dr. Howard Mitchell, director of the Symphony (3rd from left); Dean Howard Hanson, of the Eastman School of Music at Rochester (to Dr. Mitchell's right); and Dean Warner Lawson, of the Howard School of Music and director of the Choir (to Dean Hanson's right).

The Orchestra and the Choir gave the world premiere performance of Dean Hanson's "Song of Democracy," a composition which has been commissioned by the National Education Association as its official 100th anniversary song. Others shown are (l. to r.) Harold Spivacke, chief of the music division of the Library of Congress; Harrison Sasscer, NEA official; Milt Berliner, music critic of the Washington Daily News; Dean Frank Snowden, of the College of Liberal Arts at Howard; and Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, president of Howard University.

Howard U. Dedicates New Law School

WASHINGTON — Howard University dedicated its new law school built at a cost of $1,400,000.

The school can accommodate 200 students with its classrooms and library. One of its features is a moot courtroom seating 250 spectators, court officers, jurors, and attorneys.

Dr. George M. Johnson is dean of the school which numbers 100 students, and there are six full time associate professors and one instructor. The new school is regarded as a particular achievement because it was less than three years ago that the American Bar Association recommended its closing because of lack of proper facilities.

The school is noted for its outstanding graduates and teachers, more than 75 percent of whom worked on the research in the school segregation cases or either argued directly.

Among them are Thurgood Marshall, James E. Nabritt, secretary of the university; George E. C. Hayes and W. Robert Ming, newly elected chairman of the American Veterans Committee.

Sen. Wayne Morse of Oregon was the principal speaker at the Dedication Day.

Middle States Association Reaffirms Howard Accreditment

WASHINGTON, D. C. — Howard University President Mordecai W. Johnson announced Monday that the Commission on Institutions of Higher Education of the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools has reaffirmed the accreditment of Howard in language strongly commending the progress of the institution.

The action was taken in a letter from Ewald B. Nyquist, Commission Chairman, dated May 9th and received at Howard yesterday (Saturday). The letter stated in part:

"It is a most gratifying responsibility for me to report to you that the Commission voted to accept your Report and to reaffirm the accreditation of Howard University.

"This recognition by Howard University's peers in the Middle States community of higher education is well deserved. We appreciate the spirit in which you have cooperated with the Commission and achieved the commendable and, in some respects, even remarkable improvements which have been called to our attention."

The action of the Commission was taken as a result of a three-day joint evaluating survey of Howard conducted by the Commission and nine accrediting agencies related to particular schools, colleges and departments in the University. The survey covered the entire University including (1) the organization and general administration of the University; (2) the finances, plant and equipment of the University; (3) the student personnel services, admissions, registration and records and (4) the program of all 10 of the schools and colleges and of the libraries of the University.

260 to Map Howard U. Fund Drive

More than 260 volunteer workers of Howard University's $30,000 scholarship drive will meet at the University at 11 a. m. today to plan the campaign. The campaign starts Monday.

Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, University president, will speak on the need for increased student aid. Other speakers will include Frank Coleman, professor emeritus of physics and general chairman of the campaign here, and James M. Nesbit Jr., director of public relations at Howard.

About 3000 alumni in the Washington area will be solicited by volunteers for contributions to supplement the University's scholarship and student loan fund. At present, 11 per cent of Howard students receive scholarships. This compares to 20 to 30 per cent in other private schools throughout the country, Nesbit said.

Howard U. to Cite Three on June 7

The Rev. Martin Luther King, Patrick Murphy Malin and Jackie Robinson will receive honorary doctor of laws degree at Howard University's 89th commencement June 7.

The ceremony for 600 graduates will take place at 5:30 p. m. on the upper campus. In case of rain, it will be held in Constitution Hall.

Malin, executive secretary of the American Civil Liberties Union, will be the commencement speaker. Mr. King led the successful bus boycott for integration in Montgomery, Ala., last year. Robinson, former Brooklyn Dodger infielder and first Negro in major league baseball, is chairman of the NAACP annual Freedom Fund drive.

Informer Sat. 6-1-57 Houston, Texas
P. 2

WASHINGTON, D C — Howard University will confer honorary degrees on three distinguished citizens at its 89th annual Commencement Friday, June 7. They are Dr Martin Luther King of Montgomery, Ala; Patrick Murphy Malin, director of the American Civil Liberties Union; and John Roosevelt Jackie) Robinson, former Brooklyn Dodger star. Each will receive the Doctor of Laws degree.

The commencement address will but delivered by Mr Malin.

Commencement exercises begin at 5:30 p m, and will be held on the main campus in front of Frederick Douglass Memorial Hall.

Dr King came into the national spotlight last year as president of the Montgomery Improvement Association. Under his leadership the Negro citizens of Montgomery waged a boycott against the public busses in that city in protest against discriminatory seating and treatment. The boycott, which proved 90 per cent effective, was lifted later during the year when the U S Supreme Court outlawed segregation on public carriers.

The 28 year old Dr King holds the Bachelor of Arts degree from Morehouse College, the Bachelor of Divinity degree from Crozier Theological Seminary (Pa.), where he was named the school's outstanding student, and the Doctor of Philosophy degree from Boston University.

Mr Malin had headed ACLU since 1950. Prior to that time he was a faculty member in the Department of Economics at Swarthmore College Pa.) for 20 years.

He holds the Bachelor of Science degree from the Wharton School of Finance, University of Pennsylvania. In 1952 Swarthmore conferred the Doctor of Laws degree upon him.

Mr Robinson, who until this year was member of the Brooklyn Dodgers baseball team, was the first Negro to enter organized baseball since the 1880's. After one year (1946) in the International League, where he was the leading batter, Robinson moved up to Brooklyn. His feats with the Dodgers included Rookie of the year (1947), and National League batting champion and Most Valuable Player (1949). He also set a major league record for fielding by second basemen and led the league in stolen bases on several occasions. One of the game's most versatile performers Robinson played every position in the infield as well as left and right field for the Dodgers.

Robinson attended the University of California at Los Angeles, where he starred in football, basketball, baseball, and track and field. In 1956 he was awarded the Spingarn Medal, the highest award conferred by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, "for his superb sportsmanship, his pioneer role in opening a new field of endeavor for your Negroes, and his civic consciousness."

Robinson retired from baseball prior to the 1957 season.

Some 600 degrees will be conferred upon the graduates of Howard's 10 schools and colleges during commencement exercises.

Ike wants $4.4 million for Howard

Afro-American Sat. 1-26-57

WASHINGTON (NNPA) — President Eisenhower Wednesday sent to Congress budget estimates totaling $4,412,000 for Howard University for the fiscal year beginning July 1.

Current appropriations for Howard total $3,686,200.

Of the total amount recommended for the university in the Federal Budget, 4 million dollars is for salaries and expenses. The sum of $3,300,000 was appropriated for this purpose for the current fiscal year.

Federal funds provide about 57.3 per cent of the university's operating costs. Total budget estimates for the university amount to $6,984,435. Some $2,670,938 is expected from non-Federal sources and $313,507 are advances and reimbursements from other accounts.

INCLUDED IN the budget estimates is $150,000 for the preparation of plans and specifications for construction of a physical education building and a home economics building on the Howard campus.

A master development plan and plans and specifications for nine building projects and one alteration project have been authorized and completed.

Plans and specifications for the auditorium-fine-arts building will be completed this year.

SINCE 1945 the Federal Government has financed a major construction program at Howard. The program includes the erection of a number of new buildings and alterations and repairs to the existing physical plant.

Appropriations in the amount of $11,160,004 have been made to liquidate the total of $11,994,529 in contract authority, leaving an estimated balance of $834,325 to be financed.

An additional amount of $262,000 is estimated in 1958 under direct appropriations to complete the equipping of the new dental building.

As you might have suspected, it stirred up quite a controversy. In an effort to provide "equal time," here's Howard University's view of the controversy:

James M. Nabrit Jr., secretary of Howard, writes:

Sat. 12-23-57

"I CERTAINLY would not be inclined to agree with your statement that Fisk University has probably educated more distinguished Americans than any colored college.

"I might be inclined to suggest two or three other schools which in my judgment equal or excel Fisk in this respect, but offhand, I would say that Howard University is clearly in front in any category which one may select.

"Without any research, I would suggest:

Howard University Honors 4 Alumni In Observing Its 90th Anniversary

Post + Times Herald Sat. 3-2-57 P.7-b

Washington D.C.

Howard University paused yesterday to observe the 90th anniversary of its founding and to honor four outstanding alumni at ceremonies in Andrew Rankin Memorial Chapel.

The annual Charter Day assembly was presided over by Dean William Stuart Nelson officiating for President Mordecai W. Johnson, who is in Africa attending the creation of the new state of Ghana formerly the Gold Coast.

Those receiving the annual alumni awards of bronze medallions for distinguished post-graduate achievement included the husband and wife team of Kenneth B. and Mamie Phipps Clark, New York City, for their work in psychological research and civic activity.

Dr. Eugene H. Dibble, jr. of Tuskegee, Ala., received the award for work in medicine and hospital administration and Attorney Clayborne George, of Cleveland, received the award for work in law and civic activity.

Clark is a member of the faculty of the College of the City of New York and serves as an assistant to his wife who is director of New York's Northside Center for Child Development. Their citation referred to a study by Clark on psychological effects of segregation on children.

Dr. Dibble is a graduate of Howard's College of Medicine and is director of Andrew Memorial Hospital at Tuskegee. He alternates between Andrew and the Veterans Administration Hospital in medical and administrative positions. His work with Dr. Jack Kenney was cited in the development of the Andrew Clinical Society which brings medical scientists together each spring.

George has been a practicing attorney in Cleveland since 1920. He has served on the City Council and is in his fourth six-year term as president of the city's Civil Service Commission. He has sponsored an organization for teenagers and is active in other affairs.

Principal speaker was Frank M. Snowden, jr., newly appointed dean of the College of Liberal Arts, who discussed the European view of American education. The annual Charter Day dinner was held last night in Baldwin Hall.

The Clarks, who will receive a joint award, will be cited for work in psychological research and civic activity. Dr. Dibble will be honored in medicine, and Mr. George in law and civic activity. Dr. Mordecai W. Johnson, Howard president, will present the citations.

2 Ford Foundation grants bring H. U. $450,000

Afro-American Sat. 4-20-57 Baltimore Md.

WASHINGTON

Howard University officials last week announced the receipt of two grants totaling $450,000 from the Ford Foundation of New York City.

A grant of $400,000 was made to the college of medicine and will be used for instructional purposes; while a $50,000 award went to the college of liberal arts and the graduate school to help finance the university's expanded African studies program.

The medical school grant was the second of two gifts which the foundation announced in September 1956. At that time the school received $500,000.

ACCORDING to the terms of the grant, the money will be held by the university as an invested endowment for 10 years, during which time the income from the investment may be used for instructional purposes. After 10 years the university will be free to use the principal sum.

The gift to the college of medicine was one of 45 made to private medical schools in the United States in the foundation's $90,000,000 program to strengthen medical instruction. The gift for African studies was also the second made to the university by the foundation.

ILLINOIS INSTITUTE OF TECHNOLOGY

23 Institutions Join in Special Engineering Plan

CHICAGO (AP)—St. Joseph's College of Collegeville, Ind., has become the 23rd liberal arts college to join with Illinois Institute of Technology, Chicago, in a five-year plan to provide students with a liberal arts and engineering education.

"The combined program is designed to help meet the need for trained engineers with broadened educational backgrounds," according to Dr. John Day Larkin, head of the program at Illinois Tech.

Under the program a student follows a liberal arts course at St. Joseph's, or one of the other cooperating colleges, for three years. Then he studies at Illinois Tech in one of the eight engineering fields for two years.

After the fifth year the student receives a bachelor of arts of science degree from the liberal arts college and an engineering degree from Illinois Tech.

Negro Team Drops Out of NCAA Tourney

Wed. 3-6-57 P. 4-C

Washington D.C.

JACKSON, Miss., March 5 (AP)—Jackson State College for Negroes abruptly pulled out of the NCAA small college basketball tournament today, four days before it was scheduled to play a white team.

Dr. Jacob L. Reddix, president of the state-supported school, said he was withdrawing the powerful quintet after state authorities advised that their policy is against play "under the present conditions."

Jackson State, which had a 22-2 record during the regular season, defeated Philander Smith, a Negro team from Little Rock, 93-65, in the first round of midwest regional play last Saturday night. The Jackson school qualified for the NCAA by winning the championship of its own Negro league, the Midwest Athletic Conference.

They were to have played this Saturday night in South Dakota, against either Monmouth, Ill., South Dakota University or South Dakota State—all of them white schools.

Mississippi has no state law against inter-racial athletes. But the board of trustees of institutions of higher learning, commonly called the college board, has made clear that such play is against their policy."

Dr. Reddix' announcement said the college board "has advised that it is the policy of the board that state institutions of higher learning shall not participate in national athletic tournaments under the present conditions. Under the present circumstances, our basketball team will not compete further in the NCAA."

Students and players were obviously disappointed.

Dr. Jacob L. Reddix, president of the state-supported school, said he was withdrawing the powerful quintet after state authorities advised that their policy is against play "under the present conditions."

Jackson State, which had a 22-won 2-lost record during the regular season, defeated Philander Smith, a Negro team from Little Rock, 93-65 in the first round of Midwest regional play last Saturday night. The Jackson school qualified for the NCAA by winning the championship of its own Negro circuit, the Midwest Athletic Conference.

They were to have played this Saturday night in South Dakota, against either Monmouth, Ill., South Dakota University or South Dakota State—all of them white schools.

Mississippi has no state law against inter-racial athletics. But the board of trustees of institutions of higher learning, commonly called the college board, has made clear that such play is against their "policy."

Dr. Reddix' announcement said the college board "has advised that it is the policy of the board that state institutions of higher learning shall not participate in national athletic tournaments under the present conditions. Under the present circumstances, our basketball

Jackson College Commencement History Making In Institution's Progress Towards Higer Education

Advocate Sat. 6-5-57

Jackson, Miss.

First To Receive Masters Degree In Graduating Class

It was a history making commencement program for Jackson College, held at the College Park Auditorium, before a jam-packed audience Monday night, because among the 234 candidates for graduation, two who received the Master's Degree, the first in the 80-year history of the college and the first degree in Higher Education to be conferred by an Institution of Higher Learning for Negroes in the entire history of the state.

The honors for being the first to receive the Master's Degree from the college went to Prof. Jerome Stampley, Principal of Stone Hill High School of Vicksburg, Miss., and Prof. T. R. Sanders, principal of the High School, Hollandale, Miss.

President Jacob L. Reddix obviously moved by the history making occassion, before his welcoming the college's first two master's into the Alumni of the College, asserted that the college had entered into the preparation for such a program after prayerful consideration, and "we are not afraid." Advocate

The President indicated during his remarks that the conferring of the Master's Degree on the two candidates was only the beginning in the progress of the College towards University status. P. 3

The two candidates received the degree of Master of Science in Education.

More history was made at the College leading up to the historic event Monday night. The two candidates were awarded the degree, after receiving the first oral examination in the history of Negro education in the state.

The oral examination was conducted by Dr. C. C. Mosley, Dr. A. C. Blank, Dr. J. B. Eubanks, Dean H. T. Sampson of the College faculty and Dr. Lamar Fortenberry of the State Department of Education.

The commencement address was delivered by Dr. H. Council Trenholm, President of Alabama State College, who in a well presented and well received speech challenged the class to meet and do honor to the privileges and responisibilties of a college graduate.

Dr. Sherman Lawrence Greene, Jr., Head of the Department of Education of the African Methodist Episcopal delivered the commencement sermon at the College Park Auditorium Sunday afternoon.

He told the graduates that they could make the greatest use of their education by taking the name of Jesus with them in all their life's work.

Jackson College Faces Loss Of Accreditation

Daily World Thurs. 8-22-57

Atlanta Ga.

JACKSON, Miss.—Jackson State College, Mississippi's largest Negro institution of higher learning, faces impending loss of accreditation by the Southern Association of College and Secondary Schools.

The institution, generally accepted as the capstone of education among Negroes in Mississipi is headed by Jacob L. Reddix. P. 1

The plight of Jackson State has provoked long and serious discussion following a report that the college had gone too far and of doing too much with too little.

President Deddix says there is nothing wrong with the college that adequate financing won't cure.

One o fthe main points of contention by the Southern Association is the low expenditure for instruction, a situation which was aggravated by a program of graduate study five years ago. The probationary period imposed on the college by the Southern Association of Secondary Schools during its 1956 annual meeting is a period in which Jackson State is expected to get its house in order."

PRESIDENT EXPLAINS ; ; ;

Concerning the Southern Association rating of the 80-year-old college, President Reddix explained: "For three years, Jackson State College has had full rating by the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, the association sent a survey committee to the campus to make a thorough appraisal of our program.

"The committee found the college did not meet the minimum requirements outlined in the Standards of the Association as follows: Standard 4, training of faculty; Standard 6, remuneration of faculty; Standard 8, educational expenditure; Standard 9, library; Standard 10, physical plant and equipment; and Standard 17, graduate work. In light of these defi-

In order to put the college on firm footing, President Reddix has asked the Mississippi legislature to provide for increased appropriation "in order to strengthen the program of the college sufficiently to meet the standards of the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools."

ciences, the college was placed on probation in Dallas, last December.

Dr. Reddix reveals since the committee's report definite improvement has been made in science facilities (Standard 9), library (Standard 9), and remuneration of faculty (Standard 6). Under Standard 10, the college has completed a new science building, but does not have adequate teaching apparatus and equipment.

Out of Bounds—Members of the student body and basketball teams at Jackson State College (Miss.) stage a protest rally against the State of Mississippi order which prevented their quintet from participating in the current interracial NCAA basketball tournament. The Jackson team had compiled the best record in Mississippi, losing but one of 28 games.

JACKSON, Miss.—Faced with a crackdown from Mississippi's Board of Trustees of Institutions of Higher Learning, Jackson State College was forced to withdraw its once-beaten quintet from the second round playoffs in the Interracial National Collegiate Athletic Association's basketball tourney.

A statement from Jackson officials asserted that "it is the policy of the board that state institutions of higher learning shall not participate in national athletic tournaments under the present conditions. Under the circumstances, our basketball team will not compete further in the NCAA tournament."

President Jacob Reddix sent a wire to Walter Byers, executive director of the NCAA in Kansas City which read "Regret circumstances beyond our control force us to withdraw our basketball team from further competition in the playoffs of the NCAA Basketball Tournament. Letter follows."

The Jackson team had won 27 and lost one besides holding the best season's record of any school in the state.

Houston, Texas

HAWKINS, Texas Jarvis founders and sons shared the spotlight as Jarvis Christian College celebrated its 45th Anniversary Saturday and Sunday, March 23, 24. The Founder's Day Banquet in the new dining hall Saturday afternoon opened the two-day celebration. De Cleo W. Blackburn, Jarvis' President was the Sunday morning speaker. He recounted the achievements of Jarvis and paid tribute to the spirit which led the founding fathers in this momentuous venture.

The future of Jarvis in he field of Fundamental Education was projected as a challenge to those who choose careers of community and Christian service. Dr E. W. Rand, Alumnus of Jarvis College and Chair of the Department of Education, Southern University, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, delivered the Founders' Day address Sunday afternoon. He recalled the spirit of Jarvis as unfolded through the years and his early days on the campus. He lauded the growth and achievements of the institution and said the role played by Jarvis in the field of education is an enviable one and that the program of Fundamental Education is a real asset to East Texas.

K. J. Frost, Jarvis Alumnus and staff member, was honored with a presentation following the address. Mr Frost is the son of the late T. B. Frost who began the pioneer work on the site which was to become Jarvis Christian College.

C. A. Berry, who came on the Jarvis scene to start the work of clearing the grounds and erecting buildings, was present for all the sessions. Mr Berry has been in continuous residence at Jarvis and in the Community since 1912.

Mrs V. Carney addleton, Recorder, in giving the occasion, reviewed the enthusiasm and energy of the dynamic personalities in Jarvis History. The Department Heads held Open House for the Alumni and friends of the College from 2 - 6:00 p m Sunday afternoon Departmental exhibits were on display in the Emma B. Smith Building. A reception in the Student Fellowship Building followed the Founders' Day exercise.

A recital featuring Miss Irene Henderson, an alumnae of Jarvis was the closing feature of the celebration. Mrs Henderson, a contralto teaches in the Public School System at Beaumont, Texas.

Large Enrollment Brings Fund Need At Negro College

ST. PETERSBURG, Sept. 19 (AP) Enrollment at the state-supported Negro junior college here so greatly surpassed expectations that the school will need more operating money.

Floyd T. Christian, Pinellas County school superintendent, said from 80 to 110 students had been expected for the opening of school but 210 showed up.

Christian is going to Tallahassee to seek more money from the Community College Council. More teachers also will be needed.

Fifty per cent of the students are from Pinellas County, 40 per cent from adjacent Hillsborough and the remainder from various sections of Florida including Jacksonville and Fort Lauderdale.

Classes now are held at night in a Negro high school building. That will be changed when a new building will be ready for the next semester.

Hate and Violence Will Only Hurt Cause, Famed Minister Tells Kentucky State Seniors

By ALLAN M. TROUT
The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., June 2.—Graduates of Kentucky State College were told this afternoon their competition ahead will not be with colored people, but with people.

It is imperative, then, that they strive for excellence, not as Negro men and women, but as men and women.

The advice was given by the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr., the noted Negro leader of Montgomery, Ala., who was commencement speaker at the 69th annual graduation exercises of the senior Negro college.

Moved to Larger Gym

Dr. King's fame as organizer of the Negro boycott against the Montgomery bus system had preceded him to Frankfort. The soft-spoken but eloquent advocate of nonviolence addressed perhaps the largest crowd of his race ever gathered in this city.

Usually, graduation exercises are held in Bell Gymnasium on the Kentucky State campus. But the event was moved today to the new and much larger gymnasium of Frankfort High School. The crowd filled it to capacity.

Dr. King based his commencement sermon upon the biblical reference to a new Heaven and a new earth, coming down from God. He applied this imagery to the Negro today, standing between the old world of yesterday and the new world of tomorrow.

'There Comes A Time'

He represented the old world as colonial oppression of 1,600,000,000 colored peoples of Asia and Africa by the Dutch, Belgians, French, and English.

"But there comes a time," he said, "when people get tired of being trampled, get weary of being pushed out of the sunshine of July into the chill of Alpine November.

"So we have broken loose. We have thrown aside the Egypt of colonialism and are traveling toward the promised land of social integration, of freedom, and justice."

The Negro's door closed on the old, and opened on the new, May 17, 1954, when the Supreme Court ordered the states to abolish compulsory racial segregation in the public schools, Dr. King said.

'Lifted Up His Face'

"The Negro lifted up his face and saw a new Heaven and a new earth descending from God. He began to feel like somebody. Nothing can stop him now. But let me admonish you graduates that the new world brings new challenges."

Dr. King made three groupings of the new challenges. First, he said, the one world of the jet age must be made one world in a spiritual sense.

Second, the Negro will be forced to compete with people in the new world, not with colored people.

"This is no time to be a good Negro anything," he said. "You simply have to be a good teacher, not a good Negro teacher—a good preacher, not a good Negro preacher. Doors will be opening to you now that were closed in the past. You have got to resolve, therefore, to do your job so well it cannot be excelled."

Stresses Need of Good Will

For his third point, Dr. King stressed that the Negro must enter his new world with understanding in his mind and good will in his heart, and must keep Christian virtues in the forefront of his life.

"Hate and injustice in the new world ahead will do nothing but duplicate our sorrows in the old," he said. "That is why I believe so strongly in nonviolence. Violence never solved a problem. It only creates new ones."

Dr. King was introduced by Frank L. Stanley, editor and publisher of The Louisville Defender. Dr. Rufus B. Atwood, president of Kentucky State, presided at the program that combined the various features of commencement and convocation.

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—Some 69 graduates and over 1,500 other persons heard Dr. Mordecai Wyatt Johnson, president, Howard University, Washington, deliver an unusual commencement address on the front campus lawn at Knoxville College. President James A. Colston presided.

The speaker's discourse was unusual for this occasion because to these graduates, instead of recommending to them the life of a successful formally eduated man, he chose as an example the harmonious life of an illiterate, Mississippi farmer.

Dr. Johnson showed these grads that successful living was not assured by the degree alone, but that a man who had only the wisdom of God could enjoy a more contented, purposeful and prosperous life.

Dr. A. K. Stewart, general secretary, Board of American Missions, United Presbyterian Church, North America, gave the invocation; the Rev. Frank Gordon, pastor Shiloh Presbyterian Church, Knoxville, scripture; Dr. William C. Latta, president Board of American Missions, benediction; Dr. Lee L. Campbell, presentation of candidates for degrees; music by college choir, directed by Dr. Newell C. Fitzpatrick.

Kansas City, Mo.

JACKSON, Tenn. — Nationwide interest is being manifested in the 75th anniversary of Lane college scheduled to be held here at the college on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 5, 6 and 7. CME leaders and other denominational leaders will be here to pay respect to the Founding Fathers of Lane college and celebration of Lane's 75 years of educational aid to the Negro race in this section of the nation.

Bishop J. Arthur Hamlett, senior bishop of the CME church, who is a product of Lane college, is the presiding bishop of this area. Of the approaching 75th anniversary convocation, Bishop Hamlett says: "We've come a mighty long way and Lane college is fortunate in that she has sent forth some of the outstanding leaders—not only of the Christian Methodist Episcopal church, but likewise of the entire race." In addition to Bishop Hamlett Lane college has sent forth some notable religious leaders. Among them is Bishop W. Y. Bell, who holds the Ph.D. degree from Yale university.

Nine Bishops Programmed

The nine active bishops of the CME church are programmed to appear and to deliver addresses. Among the speakers and the subjects to be discussed are the following: "The Rights And Responsibilities Of The Church College," Bishop W. Y. Bell, South Boston, Va.; "The Responsibility Of The Church College To The Christian Missionary Enterprise,' Bishop Luther Stewart, Hopkinsville, Ky.; "The Responsibility Of The Church College In Developing Church, National And World Leaders," Bishop Henry P. Porter, Louisville, Ky.; "The Relation Of The Church College To National Problems,' Bishop B. Julian Smith, Chicago; "The Relation Of The Church College To International Problems," Bishop Arthur W. Womack, Indianapolis; "The Responsibility Of The Church College To Business, Industry And Labor," Bishop Bertram W. Doyle, Nashville, and "The Role Of The Church College In The Global Fight For Freedom,' Bishop J. Arthur Hamlett. Two special addresses will be delivered by Bishops F. L. Lewis, Shreveport, La., and J. Claude Allen, Gary, Ind.

Marian Anderson To Sing

According to Dr. Chester A. Kirkendoll, president of Lane college, "one of the largest gatherings in the long history of Lane college is expected. The mere fact that we shall be graced with the presence of Marian Anderson who will appear in a special program will draw nation-wide interest. We shall do our utmost to make it pleasant for all who come. A great time is in store for all who will be here for the anniversary convocation, which will be culminated by the appearance of Marian Anderson in one of her topflight programs.'

Among other notable CME leaders expected here during the anniversary convocation are: Doctors E. P. Murchison, editor of the Christian Index, official organ of the Christian Methodist Episcopal church, Chicago; Grover H. Carter, general publishing agent; J. B. Boyd, secretary of superannuated preachers, widows and orphans, Memphis; L. Q. Brown, secretary of Christian Education, Washington, D. C.; J. L. Tolbert, New Albany, Miss.; F. T. CME Educational Institution Began As One-Teacher School In Jackson, Tenn., In 1882; Diamond Jubilee Celebrated With Rendition Of Elaborate Program Feb. 5, 6, 7—Marian Anderson, Bishops Bertram Doyle, Luther Stewart, Porter, Allen And Other Participants

By WILLIAM R. JOHNSON, JR.

The 75th Anniversary of Lane College and the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church's Educational Program was celebrated last week, February 5th, 6th and 7th, at Lane College.

14e(1)

Using the general theme: "The Church Related College—It's Nature, Function and Responsibility in the American Educational System," hundreds of CME's students of Lane and well wishers crowded into the college Health Building for each of the seven sessions.

The seed of the church's educational program was sown in 1876 during the Tennessee Annual Conference held at Capers Chapel CME Church, Nashville, Tenn., which was presided over by Bishop W. H. Miles, first bishop of Colored Methodism. It was at this meeting that the Rev. J. K. Daniels presented a resolution calling for the establishment of a CME school. The resolution was enthusiastically approved and machinery was set in motion for its implementation. During the great epidemic Bishop Isaac Lane kept alive the idea and gained encouraging support from ministers and laymen throughout his district. In 1880 four acres were purchased in Jackson, Tenn., as the sight of the CME Institute. Two years later, with the first building completed, the CME High School opened its doors in November, 1882 for its first academic session.

From this meager beginning of a one teacher school the CME High School has grown to the present Lane College, with a 42 faculty-staff an "A" rating and with ten beautiful well equipped buildings, valued at over one-million dollars.

The CME Church has the following institutions that stand as monuments of the vision, wisdom and courage of the founding fathers: Payne College, Augusta, Ga., established in 1883 by the CME Church and the former Methodist Episcopal Church South; Texas College, Tyler, Texas, founded in 1894; Mississippi Industrial College, founded in 1905 by Bishop Elias Cottrell; Miles College, Birmingham, Ala., established in 1907 by the merger of two schools supported by the Alabama and North Alabama Conferences; Holsey-Cobb Institute, Cordele, Ga., the church's only secondary school; and Phillips School of Theology, Jackson, Tenn., founded in 1944 by Bishop J. Arthur Hamlett, senior bishop of the CME Church and Chairman of the Board of Trustees at Lane for over twenty-five years.

President C. A. Kirkendoll, in greeting the persons who jam-packed the auditorium, during the first session stated that "the Diamond Jubilee Celebration of the founding of the church's educational program finds us in a process of critical self-evaluation. The church's educational objective, curricula, extra-curricular programs and means of financing are being re-examined and re-analyzed in light of present demands, standards and resources."

He went on further to say "the greatest heritage of Lane College was the philosophy of the Founding Fathers. "It was the belief of the Founding Fathers," he said, "that all men and women increase their usefulness by learning, that mere learning without the Christian religion is incomplete, and that the college must keep pace with the changing times and needs of the people."

During the Symposium the Anniversary theme was discussed by leading churchmen and educators from many view points. In the first session, with President Kirkendoll presiding, two stimulating addresses were delivered by two of the church's bishops. Bishop W. Y. Bell who presides over the Third Episcopal District spoke on the topic, "The Rights and Responsibilities of the Church College," and Bishop Luther Stewart presiding prelate of the Fourth Episcopal District spoke on the subject, "The Role of the Church College in Christian Movements."

The Rev. A. Ralph Davis, president of the Ministers' and Laymen Council presided over the evening session. The scheduled speaker, Bishop H. P. Porter was unable to attend the anniversary celebration. However, his speech on the subject, "The Responsibility of the Church College in Developing Church, National and World Leaders," was read by Dr. L. Q. Brown, general secretary of the General Board of Christian Education.

Also in the evening session, Bishop J. Claude Allen delivered a sermon on the topic, "The Great Challenge—Lord Teach Us."

The Third session with the Rev. N. S. Curry presiding convened Wednesday morning. Rev. Curry is pastor of Phillips Temple CME Church, Los Angeles, Calif. The addresses were made by Bishop B. Julian Smith, presiding bishop of the Eighth Episcopal District and Dr. E. C. Calhoun, president of Paine College, Augusta, Ga. Bishop Smith spoke on the topic, "The Relation of the Church College to National Problems," and Dr. Calhoun spoke on the subject, "The Relation of the Church College to International Problems."

As presiding officer of the Fourth Session, Dr. G. H. Carter, Publishing Agent of the CME Publishing House, introduced two more of the leading churchmen who gave inspired messages to the audience.

Bishop B. W. Doyle, presiding prelate of the Sixth Episcopal District spoke on the subject, "The Responsibility of the Church College to Business, Industry and Labor."

The sermon for the night was delivered by Dr. M. L. Breeding, general secretary of the Board of Kingdom Extension. Dr. Breeding preached on the theme, "The Great Commission—Go. . . . Teach."

Thursday morning, Dr. E. P. Murchison, Editor of the Christian Index, presided. Bishop J. Arthur Hamlett, Senior Bishop of the CME Church and presiding prelate of the First Episcopal District spoke on, "The Role of the Church College in the Global Fight for Freedom."

During all of the sessoins the Lane College Choir, under the direction of Prof. C. H. Jones, rendered the music and various solos were sung by members of the choir.

The sixth session, with Dr. L. Q. Brown, general secretary of the General Board of Christian Education, presiding was held at 2 o'clock in the College auditorium.

The program consisted of a "Parade of CME Schools" with a school administrator from each of the CME related schools giving ten minutes talks of their history, present program and future goals. Representing the schools were Mr. E. K. Hall, principal of Holsey-Cobb Institute, Prof. Frank Pearson, Director of Instruction of Miles College; Mr. E. E. Rankins, Jr., Administrative Officer of Mississippi Industrial College; The Rev. J. C. Jay, Public Relations Director of Paine College; Dr. U. Z. McKinnon, Executive Dean of Phillips School of Theology and Dr. Allen C. Hancock, Dean of Instruction of Texas College.

Also in the afternoon session, Prof. Charles M. Jones, chairman of the Department of Music at Lane presented an operetta written especially for the celebration of the 75th Anniversary of Lane College. The operetta was entitled "Fair Lane." Bernard Clay, a freshman at the college sung the prologues to each scene. Fannie Walker, Robbie Foster, Freddie Clark, Carene Jenkins, Barbara Brooks, Romona Robinson, Mae Hoye, Annie Reddick and Edward Brown characterized persons that have contributed to the history of Lane.

The final session of the 75th Anniversary Symposium was devoted fully to a captivating recital given by Miss Marian Anderson, internationaly renowned concert singer. This recital, it was said by some, was the greatest program ever witnessed by the citizenry of this area. Miss Anderson and her accompanist Mr. Frank Rupp along with the Bishops of the CME church were honored with a reception after the concert.

Other meetings that were held in conjunction with the 75th Anniversary Symposium were The Annual Convocation of the Women's Connectional Council of the CME Church. The president, Mrs. E. W. F. Harris, was in charge; the meeting of the College of Bishops of the CME Church with Senior Bishop J. Arthur Hamlett presiding; the meeting of the Board of Christian Education of the CME Church with the Rev. L. Q. Brown, general secretary officiating; and the meeting of the Ministers' and Laymen's Council of the CME Church with the president, the Rev. A. Ralph Davis, presiding.

Through these activities Lane College took advantage of the 75th Anniversary year to: (1) highlight the college's traditional interests, emphases and accomplisments; (2) consider current problems in high education; and (3) to determine Lane's role in the life of the CME Church and the nation.

Distinguished Alumni—Three of Lane's outstanding alumni stand in front of the historical marker at the entrance to Lane College, Jackson, Tenn. Left to right: President C. A. Kirkendoll, senior Bishop of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, J. Arthur Hamlett (also chairman of the board of trustees of Lane College for over 25 years), and Bishop W. Y. Bell, one of the two members of Lane's first college graduation class of 1907.

Over 5 Thousand Attend Lane College 75th Anniv

JACKSON, Tennessee — The 75th Anniversary celebration of Lane College drew more than 5000 people during the three day event which took place February 5, 6 and 7 here at Lane College. Dr Chester A. Kirkendoll said "this was one of the largest and most momentous gatherings in the history of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church.

The opening session was held Tuesday morning with Dr C. A. Kirkendoll as presiding officer. Dean P. R. Shy, college pastor, was worship leader. The big audience joined in the opening hymn Faith of our Fathers' which was sung with tender effect.

Two Bishops Speak

The opening address was delivered by Bishop W. Y. Bell, Ph.D, Presiding Bishop of the Third Episcopal District, South Boston, Virginia. Bishop Bell spoke on "The Rights and Responsibilities of the Church College.'

The second address of the opening session was delivered by Bishop Luther Stewart Presiding Bishop of the Fourth Episcopal District, Hopkinsville, Kentucky. Bshop Stewart gave a penetrating analysis on "The Role of the Church College in Christian Movements."

The Rev L. Q. Brown General Secretary of Christian Education Washington, D.C., read an address for Bishop H. P. Porter of the Second Episcopal District, who reportedly was ill.

At the Wednesday morning session Dr N. S. Curry, minister of Phillips Temple Los Angeles was the presiding officer in the absence of Dr D. R. Glass, President of Texas College.

One of the most, thought provoking addresses of the three day activities during the 75th Anniversary Celebration was delivered Thursday morning by Bishop J. Arthur Hamlett on "The Role of the Church College in the Global Fight for Freedom'. Bishop Hamlett was given great acclaim and the audience stood and cheered at the close of his address.

Rev R. B. Short, Atlanta, Georgia, one of the persons arrested in the Atlanta situation for refusing to take a back seat on the bus, was invited to the rostrum.

The concluding even of the 75th Anniversary Celebration was the Anniversary recital by Marian Anderson word renown contralto.

Lane Looks Back on 75 Years of Its Services

Courier Sat. 6-29-57 p.3

BY HERMAN STONE JR.

Pittsburgh Pa.

JACKSON, Tenn. — Organized in 1882 as the CME Institute, Lane College today looks back with pride on its glorious 75 years of service.

14e(1)

Originally designed to train Negro youth who were not far removed from slavery, to read and write, and to help prepare young men to interpret and preach the Christian gospel, the institution is now a fully accredited four-year liberal arts college with a well-trained faculty and a physical plant valued in excess of one-million dollars.

The diamond jubilee celebration, which was observed throughout the year, has been highlighted with numerous cultural and educational programs. Foremost among these was the 75th anniversary symposium held in early February.

The symposium was in observance of the anniversary of the college and also the beginning of the educational program of the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church (formerly Colored Methodist).

DURING THE three-day convocation members of the College of Bishops of the Church, distinguished ministers and outstanding educators delivered addresses and otherwise contributed to the success of the program.

The symposium drew approximately 1,000 churchmen, alumni and friends who came from coast to coast and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf.

This occasion was fittingly climaxed with the presentation of Marian Anderson, internationally famous contralto, in the anniversary recital. Miss Anderson thrilled the overflowing crowd with her magnificent tone, poise and grace.

Leland College Welcomes New President.Dean

Weekly New Orleans La. p.13

Sat. 6-29-57

Baker, La.--The Leland College Family last week welcomed into its midst, the Reverend Dr. Robert Douglas Thomas, (recently awarded the Doctor of Divinity degree at Leland College's 87th Commencement Convocation) as President Pro Tem of the College and Lloyd H. Wallace who is acting as Dean for the summer session.

Dr. Thomas, was presented as the new President Pro Tem of this historical institution by the outgoing President Pro Tem, Mr. Robert T. Harris.

Doctor Thomas, a native of Fort Gibson, Mississippi, is the pastor of the Progressive Baptist Church and has served in this capacity for thirteen years. At present, the church is in the midst of a $125,000 building program. He is the Founder of the Thomas Community Center, Founder of the Thomas Community Library, Executive Secretary of the Fourth District Missionary Baptist State Convention, Member of the Board of Management of the Clark-Baranco Y.M.C.A., and Chairman of the Stewardship Staff of the Louisiana Baptist Convention, Secretary of the Interracial Committee of the Baton Rouge City Mission Program, and Troop Committeeman of the Boy Scouts of America.

During his 32,000 mile trip half way around the world, the Reverend Doctor Thomas in 1955 visited thirteen countries and many famous cities and universities, among which are King's College and Oxford University, London, England and the American University in Beirut, Lebanon. Dr. Thomas served as the Dean of Chapel of Leland College during the Summer Session of 1947, and since that time he has served as a member of the instructional staff of this institution. He is also treasurer of the Board of Trustees of Leland College.

Reverend Dr. Thomas is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Dave Thomas of Alcorn, Mississippi and is married to the former Miss Cora Pearl Weddington of Alcorn who is now at Texas Southern University working on a Master's degree.

Presented to the College as Dean of the Summer Session which began June 3, 1957 was Lloyd H. Wallace, who is replacing Dean Barry E. Williams who is on leave of absence doing further study. Mr. Wallace, a native of Thibodaux, Louisiana, is a Leland alumnus, having completed his undergraduate work here in 1941. He received the Master of Science Degree in Education from the University of Southern California in 1954. A World War II veteran, he has served in the public school system of the State for sixteen years. At present, he is principal of the Kent Hadley Elementary School of Raceland, Louisiana, a position he has held for twelve years. He has held numerous educational and civic posts of leadership and service.

Dean Wallace is the son of Mrs. Leona R. Wallace and the late Reverend C. W. Wallace of Thibodaux. He is married to the former Miss Bernice Pradd of Shreveport, and they have three lovely children, Jacquelyn, Lloyd, Jr., and Beatrice.

Under the efficient and inspiring leadership of President Thomas and Dean Wallace, the Leland College Faculty and student body have entered into its Summer Session zealously and are looking forward to the best session ever. The Summer Session officially closes August 3, 1957.

President Thomas announced that the Baptist State Youth Encampment will convene on the College Campus August 5 to August 9, and the Women's Missionary Institute will be held from August 28 to August 30. The regular school session begins September 3 with Freshman Registration and Orientation.

Sat. 6-8-57

Resigns—Robert Taylor Harris, president pro tempore of Leland College, Baker, La., has resigned as chief administrator of the institution. He was appointed to the presidency last August following the resignation of the former president, James H. Owens.

Lincoln U. Won't Be Shut Down

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — A special legislative committee recommended that Lincoln University (Mo.) be continued on the present basis to meet the growing need for higher education.

The one-time all-Negro institution has admitted both white and Negro students since 1954 as a result of the U. S. Supreme Court decision banning segregation in public schools. Since then, several hundred white students have attended Lincoln, although no count has been kept.

THE COMMITTEE concluded it would be unwise either to curtail or expand the present Lincoln University operation "until the full effect of the segregation decision of the courts and the effects of increased demand for higher education can be properly evaluated."

It also rejected suggestions made in the last Legislature to the effect that the institution might be converted into a home for senile mental patients, be changed to become a state-supported junior college.

The committee recommended that a current Legislature repeal the law providing for state payment of tuition for Missouri Negroes attending colleges in other states.

IT ALSO URGED a continuing survey to eliminate unnecessary duplication of services and to cut out any departures found not economically feasible.

"It seems clear," the committee said, "that it (Lincoln) is no longer an exclusively Negro institution, and if the percentage of white students continues to increase, it will eventually stabilize as a typical institution of higher learning."

The committee made no specific finding on a suggestion that Lincoln be made a part of the University of Missouri, but it said elimination of the Lincoln law school and de-emphasis of its journalism school have eliminated competition in those areas.

Missouri to Keep Lincoln U. Has Been Integrated Since Supreme Court Ruled

Bystander P.1 Thurs. 1-24-57 Des Moines, Iowa

Jefferson Cit. Mo.—A special legislative committee last week recommended that Lincoln University (Mo.) be continued on the present basis to meet the growing need for higher education. 14e(1)

The one-time all-Negro institution has admitted both white and Negro students since 1954 as a result of the U. S. Supreme court decision banning segregation in public schools. Since then several hundred white students have attended Lincoln, although no count has been kept.

Rep. Robert C. Smith of Columbia headed a special committee which studied the whole problem of adjusting to a non-segregated system of higher learning and concluded:

Unwise to Discontinue

"The committee feels it would be unwise for the state of Missouri to discontinue the operation of Lincoln university because:

"(a) The anticipated demand for higher education in Missouri in the years ahead makes it imperative to retain and make use of all facilities and staff now available, and

"(b) Despite the supreme court clarification of the rights of Negro students to attend all educational institutions in the state, a need still exists for Lincoln university in our higher education program."

The committee concluded it would be unwise either to curtail or expand the present Lincoln university operation "until the full effect of the segregation decision of the courts and the effects of increased demand for higher education can be properly evluated."

It also rejected suggestions made in the last legislature to the effect that the institution might be converted into a home for senile mental patients, be changed to be a state supported junior college.

Conversion to any other use would be extremely difficult and costly, the committee found.

The committee recommended that a current legislature repel the law providing for state payment of tuition for Missouri Negroes attending colleges in other states.

Continuing Survey

It also urged a continuing survey to eliminate unnecessary duplication of services and to cut out any departures not economically feasible.

"It seems clear," the committee said, "that it (Lincoln) is no longer an exclusively Negro institution and if the percentage of white students continues to increase it will eventually stabilize as a typical institution of higher learining."

The committee made no specific finding on a suggestion that Lincoln be made a part of the University of Missouri, but it said elimination of the Lincoln law school and de-emphasis of its journalism school has eliminated competition in those areas. It held there might be some overlapping of serivces, as with all the state colleges, but to find the extent of that would take further study. Bystander P.6 Thurs. 1-24-57

No Serious Incident

On the effects of desegregation in general the committee said: "No study has been made as to the number of students by race at any of the Missouri institutions. The integration of students of the two races has proceeded without any serious incident on the university or state college campuses. Des Moines Iowa

"The state of Missouri as a whole has been markedly free from dissension as a result of the supreme court ruling. It stands as a tribute to Missouri that it leads the nation in this respect." P.6

After her retirement, Miss Martin will reside at her home in Leavenworth, Kansas .

Senator Stuart Symington Addresses 83 Graduates of Lincoln University

Call Trib. 6-21-57 P. 3

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Senator Stuart Symington (D-Mo.) told the graduating class of Lincoln university that if America is to keep abreast of the atomic age, minority workers must be accepted on their own merits rather than as experiments in integration.

The junior Senator from Missouri was the principal speaker at commencement exercises at which 83 students were graduated. An honorary degree of doctor of letters was conferred upon Thomas Hart Benton, internationally known Missouri artist.

Symington said under the system in vogue today, there is a great waste of manpower, especially in the skilled trades and professions. He said that while Negroes constitute about 10 per cent of the population, less than 4 percent are employed in professional, technical and related work and only 3 per cent are managers, officials and proprietors.

The Senator pointed out that while many barriers have already been removed through court decisions, some still remain, such as inefficient and undemocratic techniques of recruitment and policies which prevent the training of full manpower potential.

"Although the over-all statistics of improvement are impressive," he said, "the major responsibility of our colleges and universities is to keep their attention and the attention of our leaders focused on the remaining barriers."

"It has fallen our lot to defend these hopes," he continued. "The United States accepts that responsibility and therefore, we shall adjust ourselves to the consequences of the atomic age. We shall not only live with this age but harness it to our purposes."

Four ROTC commissions were given at the exercises. They went to graduates: Shellie Bowers, Jack White and Earl Wilson, Jr. of St. Louis; and to Rogers Brackeen of Muskogee, Okla.

Degrees Conferred

Persons from Missouri and surrounding states who received degrees during the graduation exercises are:

Robinson Hinted As Successor At Pa. Institution

Daily World Sun. 6-9-57 Atlanta Ga.

LINCOLN U. Pa.—(ANP) — Dr. Horace Mann Bond, president of Lincoln university, resigned as head of the 103-year-old institution here last week. His resignation, accepted by the board of trustees ,was announced by Atty. Lewis Stevens, board chairman at the end of commencement exercises.

The board also elected him president honorarious for life and granted him a year's sabbatical leave.

TO WRITE HISTORY

Immediate plans for the educator involve the completion for publication of a history of Lincoln university and preparations of lectures at Harvard university, where he has been appointed Alexander J. Inglis lecturer in education for the 1957-58 term.

Members of the faculty and the student body were taken completely by surprise when news of Dr. Bond's retirement was announced, as were also members and officials of Lincoln's national alumni organizations.

First indication of the impending change and that merely a rumor—noted in a recent story in the Amsterdam News which stated that the Rev. James H. Robnison, nationally known pastor of New York's Church of the Master, had told his congregation that he had been offered the presidency at Lincoln University.

ROBINSON POPULAR

Rev. Robinson, a Presbyterian minister and graduate of Lincoln, founded the Morningside Community Center in Manhattan, in 1935. Today his church and the Center provide religious guidance and practical aid to more than 3,000 men, women and children of all races. Rev. Robinson's friends and members of his congregation were jubilant at the prospect of his choice to succeed Dr. Bond as head of the great Pennsylvania university.

Dr. Bond was the fifth president which Lincoln has had in its century-old existence. He is also the first Negro to head the institution. He came to Lincoln on Oct. 8, 1945, from the presidency of Fort Valley State college, Fort Valley, Ga. Prior to that he had been head of the department of education at Fisk University.

DR. HORACE MANN BOND
... "kicked upstairs" to Harvard?

LINCOLN UNIVERSITY, Courier Pa.—This country's oldest institution of higher learning for Negroes is looking for a new president after kicking its former chief executive upstairs, The Courier reliably learned this week.

Pittsburgh, Pa.

Lincoln University, located here in Chester County between Baltimore, Md., and Philadelphia, Pa., has been headed for the past 12 years by Dr. Horace Mann Bond.

Sat. 6-8-57

Dr. Bond, Lincoln's fifth president, was the first alumnus named to preside over the 103-year-old institution.

HIS RESIGNATION was tendered at Tuesday's (June 4) annual meeting of board of trustees. Dr. Bond's departure follows repeated efforts by a segment of the university's Alumni Association and faculty to oust him.

• Under terms of the resignation, The Courier understands that Dr. Bond will go on a year's sabbatical leave and will be commissioned to complete a writing of the history of the university.

In addition, he has been offered an English lectureship at Harvard and will be joining with some of America's best educators in this highly significant lecture series.

WHILE LEWIS STEVENS of Philadelphia, chairman of the university's board of trustees, denies that the university has entered into any agreement with any prospective replacements, it has been reported that Dr. James H. Robinson of New York City, himself an alumnus, has been offered the presidency.

Dr. Robinson says that he has been offered the presidency and has been asked to give his decision within 30 days. Interestingly enough, he was the Alumni Association's principal speaker at the annual banquet held on the campus on Monday night, June 3.

DR. HORACE MANN, BOND, current president at Lincoln University (Oxford, Pa.) is expected to tender his resignation to the university board of trustees this week.

REV. DR. JAMES H. ROBINSON, senior pastor of the Church of the Master in Harlem, N.Y., has been offered the presidency of Lincoln. A decision is due in 30 days.

Sat. 6-15-57

WILMINGTON, Del. — The resignation of Dr. Horace M. Bond as president of Lincoln university, Pa., was submitted and accepted by the board of trustees Tuesday.

Dr. Bond was elected president honorarius for life by the board and granted a year's sabbatical. He also was assigned the task of completing for publication a history of Lincoln university.

Dr. Bond stated that his immediate plans involved the completion of the Lincoln history and the preparatons of lectures at Harvard University where he has been appointed Alexander J. Inglis Lecturer in Education of 1957-58.

The announcement of the resignation was made by Atty. Lewis Stevens, chairman of the board at the end of the commencement exercises. The Honorable George M. Leader, governor of Pennsylvania was the speaker. He received the honorary degree of doctor of laws. Degrees were granted to 53 college graduates and 5 seminary graduates.

Rev. James Robinson, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of the Master in New York City, has reportedly been offered the presidency of Lincoln.

LINCOLN U. Pa.—(ANP) — Dr. Horace Mann Bond, president of Lincoln university, resigned as head of the 103-year-old institution here last week. His resignation, accepted by the board of trustees ,was announced by Atty. Lewis Stevens, board chairman at the end of commencement exercises.

The board also elected him president honorarious for life and granted him a year's sabbatical leave.

TO WRITE HISTORY

Immediate plans for the educator involve the completion for publication of a history of Lincoln university and preparations of lectures at Harvard university, where he has been appointed Alexander J. Inglis lecturer in education for the 1957-58 term.

Members of the faculty and the student body were taken completely by surprise when news of Dr. Bond's retirement was announced, as were also members and officials of Lincoln's national alumni organizations.

First indication of the impending change and that merely a rumor—noted in a recent story in the Amsterdam News which stated that the Rev. James H. Robnison, nationally known pastor of New York's Church of the Master, had told his congregation that he had been offered the presidency at Lincoln University.

Dr. James H. Robinson Is To Become Second Negro President Of Famous University That Boasts Of So Many Prominent Alumni; He Succeeds Dr. Horace Mann Bond Who Was First Negro President

Fri. 6-14-57 P.1

Atlanta, Ga., June 4 (Special)—Negro young people should look beyond the problem of race relations to the greater problems facing them, Dr. James H. Robinson told the graduating classes of Atlanta University, and Spelman and Morehouse Colleges. The baccalaureate speaker said that the time of protest had passed and that the present need was for people who could be constructive.

"Since you were born, half the people of the world have changed their way of living without resort to power," the pastor of the Church of the Master of New York said, citing India as an example.

Who wins the minds of young Africans will rule Africa," re said, deploring the fact that Christian mission boards do not have five trained youth workers in Africa. He urged young Negroes to go to Africa, not as preachers, but as sociologists, public health workers and nurses.

Saying that the United States has a great reservoir of people on whom they could draw to make a most profound impact on the peoples of Africa, he urged a more adventurous pursuit of the ideals of democracy.

"Don't think in terms of the sadness and sorrow that has been our lot," he said. "Rise above these limitations or you cannot be ambassadors to others."

This was the 26th joint observance of Baccalaureate Sunday by Atlanta University, and Morehouse and Spelman Colleges. President Albert E. Manley of Spelman presided. President Rufus E. Clement of Atlanta University introduced the speaker. The Rev. H. I. Beardon, pastor of the Big Bethel AME Church, read the scripture, Rabbi Jacob M. Rothschild of the Temple offered the prayer and the Rev. T. C. Lightfoot, pastor of the West Mitchell Street CME Church, pronounced the benediction.

Music was by the Atlanta-Morehouse-Spelman Chorus.

Editor's Note:

Dr. James H. Robinson, featured in the above article as the baccalaureate speaker at Atlanta University's commencement is likely to emerge into the limelight bigger than ever as leader who is destined to be highly respected.

A graduate of Lincoln University in Pennsylvania he very recently has been chosen president of his Alma Mater. He succeeds Dr. Horace Mann Bond who for a number of years served as head of the department of education at Fisk University.

Dr. Bond was the first Negro president of Lincoln which is now 103 years old. Members of the faculty and alumni are said to have been surprised when Dr. Bond's resignation as president was announced. But it had been hinted in the Amsterdam News weekly New York newspaper that Dr. Robinson has peen offered the Lincoln Presidency.

Dr. Bond it is announced upon retiring is being given a year's sabbatical leave, chosen president honorarious of Lincoln for life, also chosen to complete for publication a history of Lincoln. In addition he has been appointed the Alexander J. Ingils Lecturer at Harvard University.

Philadelphia, Pa.

Gov. George M. Leader declared yesterday at commencement exercises at Lincoln University, near Oxford, that his higher-education program, which calls for loans to college students and setting up junior colleges throughout the State, "probably will be defeated by men of limited vision."

The Governor, who was awarded an honorary Doctor of Laws degree, told the graduating class that "I wish I could report that this program will pass the Legislature, but I can't." He added, in predicting its probable defeat, that "we can only hope that a future Legislature will recognize the need for some such program."

The Assembly has referred the proposal for study by the Joint State Government Commission, with instruction to report on its feasibility at the next Assembly session.

Lincoln University also awarded honorary degrees to Andrew M. Bradley, of Harrisburg, and Lionel D. McLean, of Jersey City. Degrees in course were given to 52 graduates of the college and five of the seminary. Two graduates were from West Africa and one from Korea.

Lomax-Hannon Rebuilding Effort Off To Good Start

GREENVILLE, Ala. — The Christian Education Board of the AME Zion Church, went into action Tuesday to rebuild Lomax-Hannon College, whose plant was almost destroyed by Hurricane Audrey last Friday.

Bishop W. A. Stewart, chairman of the trustee board, reported that after several conferences with insurance adjusters, an estimated $23,298.72 is now available with which to begin the work. The board session was presided over by Bishop Herbert B. Shaw. Of the available amount, $500 will be given by the Board of Christian Education and $545.96 was given by the West Alabama Conference. The balance represents insurance adjustments.

President T. M. Patton, reported that local citizens and firms had assured him that the sum would reach $50,000 before the end of the week. Bishop Stewart expressed his faith in the denomination to the extent that it would rally to rebuild a bigger and better Lomax-Hannon. Alexander Barnes, public relations director, sent President Eisenhower a telegram asking him to survey the school in order to determine if it is eligible for government aid.

FISK PROFESSOR ADDRESSES MEET

Prof. W. Q. Welch Jr., professor of religion and philosophy at Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn., delivered the principal address to the Board of Christian Education AME Zion Church which was held Tuesday night at Butler Chapel. He spoke from the subject, "Covering an Area of Responsibility For the Secondary Schools of the AME Zion Church." He began by telling of the needs of secondary education and stressed the fact that the worst problem facing the public schools was the elementary philosophy of present-day secondary schools. He set forth certain limitation in secondary education and among them was overcrowding and mass production.

He was critical of the trend toward concentration of aggressive and middle students with the exceptional and retarded ones unserved. He also scored the element of professionalism at the administrative and instructional level.

He charged that this tended to treat the student as a thing and not as a person. He asked for a better community interest and a general progressive program geared to financial qualifications, adequate housing, qualified administrators and teachers.

Christian philosophy, as approached by the leaders of the denomination, was looked upon as a splendid asset. The church's strategic position (location) effects the bulk of the membership and affected peoples made an application of his educational philosophy highly possible. He closed by saying that the AME Zion Church had untapped financial resources and above all enjoyed a general public goodwill.

Leaders Plan Rebuilding College Hit By Hurricane

World Birmingham, Ala.
Wed. 7-10-57

GREENVILLE, Ala. — Leaders of the AME Zion Church arrived here Tuesday to make plans for rebuilding Lomac Hannon College which was partially wrecked by Hurricane Audrey last Friday.

Bishop William Stewart, Prelate of the area, Dr. J. W. Eichelberger, secretary of Christian Education, and the Christian Education Board of the AME Zion Church went into conference immediately upon their arrival to plan to repair the damages to the $250,000 college plant. The college is supported by the church.

The AME Zion public relations department said appeals have been made to all agencies and that President Eisenhower has been notified of the situation existing here.

Hurricane Audrey zigzagged into this town striking first an area three miles west of the school, then the school, and also an area three miles east of the school.

Audrey unleashed her damaging winds again about 25 miles from Montgomery where houses, stores and automobiles were completely demolished.

The high winds reduced the girl's dormitory to shambles in a matter of minute. The roof was ripped from the J. W. Allstork Memorial Building which was nearing completion and which was estimated to cost $100,000 and was carried a quarter mile intact.

The boy's dormitory and the president's home were damaged although not as badly as the other two buildings.

Prof. J. W. Patton, president of the college, was in his office in the Allstork Building when the storm struck but managed to escape alive from falling debris.

3 Louisiana Colleges Told To Accept Negro Students

Advertiser + Montgomery, Ala.
Lues. 1-29-57

NEW ORLEANS, Jan. 28 (AP)— Federal judges issued new orders today directing three Louisiana colleges to admit Negro students without eligibility certificates required under a 1956 state law.

Atty. A. P. Tureaud, former chief counsel in Louisiana for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said the temporary restraining orders affect:

1. The State Board of Education, which supervises eight state colleges.

2. Southwestern Louisiana Institute, Lafayette.

3. Southeastern Louisiana College, Hammond.

4. McNeese State College, Lake Charles.

Tureaud said the board and its three white colleges were ordered to show cause in a Feb. 6 hearing why the injunctions should not be made permanent.

On Jan. 17, Tureaud obtained a similar directive which prevents Louisiana State University from denying admissions to Negro graduate students without eligibility certificates.

LAWS ATTACKED

All the suits attacked constitutionality of the 1956 laws, contending they violated the equal protection clause of the federal Constitution.

Both measures under fire were designed to sweep Negroes from the white colleges in the new spring term.

One law requires students, white and Negro, to produce certificates of "eligibility and good moral character" from high school officials in order to register each new term.

The other, in effect, carries out a doublebarreled plan by permitting the firing of any school officials signing such certificates for Negroes entering white colleges, on grounds they would be advocating integration.

Ask Court To Review Ruling On Colleges

Times-Picayune + New Orleans, La.
Sat. 5-11-57

The Federal District court here last Wednesday was asked to review its recent ruling that two "segregation-acts" passed by the 1956 Louisiana Legislature were unconstitutional.

The acts were designed to prevent Negroes from enrolling in white state supported universities and colleges. Motions for a new trial and a rehearing were filed in three cases involving the enrollment of Negro students at LSU, Southwestern Louisiana Institute, Southeastern Louisiana college and McNeese Junior college.

Judges Herbert W. Christenberry and J. Skelly Wright issued injunctions against the named institutions and the State Board of Education restraining them from denying admission of Negroes not complying with Acts 15 and 249 of 1956.

The court declared that the acts were unconstitutional. Act 15 provided that no person be registered at any publicly financed institution of higher learning without a certificate of good moral character from their former principals and school superintendents.

And, Act 249 provided that principals and superintendents signing certificates of "good moral character" were advocating integration and would lose their jobs.

Attorney General Jack P. F. Gremillion signed the motion for reconsideration. He contended that "the court ruled contrary to the law and evidence when it decided that the case does not require a three-judge court.

He further alleged that the court was in error in overruling a motion to dismiss the cases based on the contention that the action are suits against the state, which had not (the state) given its consent to be sued.

Gremillion added that "the court was wrong in refusing to consider Act 613 of 1956, now Article 19, Section 26 of the Louisiana constitution which prohibits suits against the Board of Education without the presentation of a petition to the Legislature.

Directs Entry Without Eligibility Certificate

Fri. 1-18-57

A federal judge Thursday directed Louisiana State university to permit Negro graduate students to register without requiring eligibility certificates.

New Orleans

The certificates were required under a 1956 law designed to drive Negroes from LSU and other state colleges.

P.1

United States district judge Herbert Christenberry issued the order restraining LSU from denying registration to Miss Arnease Ludley, 23-year-old sociology graduate student, "and all others similarly situated."

Miss Ludley, a graduate of Grambling college, Negro state-supported college in North Louisiana, is scheduled to complete work for her master's degree next August.

Suit Attacks Two Acts

Attorney A. P. Tureaud said the suit attacked both Act 15 of 1956, requiring the certificates of "Eligibility or good moral character" signed by high school principal and parish or county school superintendent and Act 250 of 1956 which changes the teacher tenure act to permit firing of teachers who perform "any act toward bringing about the integration of the races within the public school system or any public institution of higher learning. . . ."

Tureaud contended these laws "are a violation of the equal protection clause of the federal constitution."

Sen. W. M. Rainach, legislative segregation leader, predicted after the laws were signed by Gov. Earl Long they would work together to drive Negroes from white state colleges, since any teacher signing a certificate for a Negro to attend a white college would be advocating integration and could be fired.

Negroes attend LSU in graduate school and several state colleges as undergraduates. Future court actions are expected to be directed at McNeese State college and Southwestern Louisiana Institute.

'To Abide by Law'—Middleton

LSU president Troy Middleton commented, "our attorney tells us we must comply with the legislative acts until they are declared unconstitutional.

"When we receive the court order, we'll check with our attorneys and decide what steps to take," he concluded. "We plan to abide by the law."

LSU first admitted Negro graduate students under federal court order in 1950. During summer sessions, close to 300 Negro students, mostly teachers, have attended at the Baton Rouge campus.

Middleton said in the term that ends next week, "we have about six full time students and 50 or more part-time students."

Times-Picayune

The LSU board of supervisors first applied the certificate only to new students. After the fall term began, the legislative "watch dog" committee on segregation headed by Rainach met with the board and the board decided to require certificates also from students already registered.

P.3

The number of Negroes attending white colleges dropped sharply during the fall term, and Rainach predicted they would be eliminated by next term.

When informed of the court action, Rainach said, "I'd have to read the injunction before I want to comment."

"LSU Can Fight Its Own Integration Battle"-Duke

Weekly New Orleans Ga. p.3

Sat. 1-26-57

"I believe that LSU can fight their own battles on the matter of integration," declared Claude W. Duke, President of the Orleans Parish Levee Board, at a meeting of the young Men's Business Club, last week, in the Roosevelt Hotel.

The statement came as a reply to the question: "In granting a lease to LSU to operate a state college on property located in an area now wholly used for residential and recreational purposes by white people, did the levee board consider that Negro students, in accordance with federally enforceable jurisprudence, will attend that college and possibly will predominate in its student body?

"If the board considered this question, please give us the benefit of its reasoning in the decision made," the question concluded.

Troy H. Middleton, President of LSU. was quoted bv Duke as saying that LSU in Baton Rouge has no Negro undergraduates and only 10 Negroes in the graduate school.

Duke acknowledged the fact that there was a possibility of the college being racially integrated but stated that is something that Louisiana State University, the parent institution must contend with.

A prominent local educator, that declined to be quoted, made the observation that the schools at L. S. U. have been opened by court orders and that "Negro students will surely apply and be admitted to the commuter college."

The educator hit the talk of erecting an extension of Southern University here, stating that it would simply be a waste of the tax payers money in as much as the court has ordered L.S.U. to admit Negro students.

He pointed out the following cases as having been ruled upon by the court in ording the state university to admit Negroes: Wilson case, law school; Payne case, graduate school; Foster case, medicine and nursing; Tureaud case, undergraduate school.

The educator concluded by saying: "Surely our Negro students will take advantage of the convenience of the commuter college and apply for and be admitted to it."

"Just as soon as a faculty can be assembled" the institution can open its doors, Duke said.

The Levee Board President predicted that in four years or more, the student enrollment will number about 7,000 and that in about 10 years there may be more students in the New Orleans college than in Baton Rouge.

COURT SETS 7 MIXING CASES

'Unconstitutional' Ruling Appealed by LSU

Hearings on seven segregation cases have been set for Jan. 15 and 16 by the United States fifth circuit court of appeals here.

Arguments are scheduled for Jan. 15 on cases involving the admission of Negro students to Louisiana State university, Southwestern Louisiana institute, Southeastern Louisiana college and McNeese Junior college, as well as on a phase of the Orleans parish school board case.

Times Picayune

The following day the court will hear appeals in cases involving the desegregation of city park facilities and the New Orleans transit system.

P.33

The college cases involve appeals by the LSU board of supervisors and the state board of education from rulings holding unconstitutional the 1956 law requiring that students applying for admission to the state's public colleges produce certificates of good moral character from their high school principal or superintendent of education.

New Orleans

The Orleans parish school board case involves the failure of Negro attorneys to post a bond when Judge J. Skelly Wright issued an injunction restraining the board from practicing segregation.

Sun. 1-27-57

School board attorneys claimed that the failure to post the bond in the required time limit made the injunction void. Judge Wright dismissed their claim and the board is appealing that ruling.

Cases to be heard Jan. 16 are appeals from district court rulings holding unconstitutional those Louisiana laws and city ordinances requiring segregation on the city's transit system and city park facilities.

Plain Skullduggery

Jackson Daily Gazette

For several years Louisiana State University has accepted a small quota of Negro students. Several of them now are seniors.

Norfolk, Va. 4e(1)

But the last session of the Louisiana legislature passed a law designed to not only prevent the enrollment of Negro students in the University, but in any other State supported college formerly reserved for whites, and to take out those already enrolled.

Sat. 1-26-57

The device is very simple. All new and old students must present "a certificate of moral fitness." p.8

This certificate must be signed by the applicant's high school principal and the district supervisor.

But this is the catch: Anyone signing such a certificate for a Negro will be fired for fostering racial integration!

Could anything be more immoral, more indecent? Some State legislators and administrative officials not only contrive to insult the Negro race as a whole in pursuit of their sadistic trends, but they conceive and pass laws that are indecent and indicative of the backward trend so noticeable now.

LSU TO REGISTER NEGRO STUDENTS

Order Forces Admission of Graduate Pupils

Fri. 2-1-57

BATON ROUGE, Jan. 31 (AP)—Louisiana State university said Thursday it would comply with a federal court order directing registration of Negro graduate students without regard to eligibility certificates. 4e(1) p.46

By late afternoon, the graduate school reported only one of the approximately 60 Negroes attending during the fall term had registered. Thursday was the start of a three-day registration for the spring term.

Four Negro graduate students, Louisiana residents who graduated from out-of-state high schools, have obtained the certificates of "eligibility or good moral character" required by a 1956 law.

LSU registrar Albert L. Clary Jr. said they would be registered without question.

Enroll Conditionally

However, he said other Negroes would be registered conditionally, pending outcome of a federal court fight attacking constitutionality of the law.

The suit also attacks a companion measure, which, in effect, makes it a dismissal offense for a high school principal or parish superintendent to sign the certificates for a Negro to attend a white college.

Segregation leaders contended the two-edged legal weapon would drive Negroes from white colleges. No new Negro registrations were attempted last fall.

Three other court actions resulted in federal orders directing admission of Negro undergraduates without regard to certificates at McNeese State college, Lake Charles; Southwestern Louisiana institute, Lafayette, and Southeastern Louisiana college, Hammond.

Pre-registered Students

In all four actions, the orders apply only to Negroes already enrolled at the colleges.

William C. Bradley, special counsel to the attorney general, said there was no plan to defy the court order.

"We discussed that at our meeting Tuesday," he said. "The restraining order is rather indefinite, but to defy it might subject the college officials to contempt of court and we didn't want to take a chance on that."

But he added, "as I understand it, it will be a conditional registration and the Negroes will be dropped if they lose their suit."

Atty. Gen. Jack Gremillion met last Tuesday with attorneys involved in the court fight to discuss defense strategy.

A hearing is set Feb. 6 at New Orleans on the SLI, Southeastern and McNeese suits, while the LSU case has been tentatively set for hearing Feb. 8 at Baton Rouge.

LSU to Admit Negro Students

Star P.26a Thu. 2-1-57

BATON ROUGE, La., Feb. 1 (AP).—Louisiana State University yesterday began registration for the spring term under a Federal court order forcing admission of Negro students. Washington, D.C.

Albert L. Clary, jr., registrar, said, "I understand we are going to comply with the Federal court order with regard to registering Negro students."

He said the four Negroes who had obtained the required eligibility certificates would be admitted without question. Others would be admitted pending the outcome of the court fight.

Four Negroes, Louisiana residents who were graduated from out-of-State high schools, have obtained the certificates.

No Negroes had registered by midmorning in the first day of registration.

Wed. 2-13-57

BATON ROUGE — (ANP) — Thirteen Negroes have been registered in Louisiana State University for the next term. These were registered as a result of an injunction against the school banning their rejection for want of certificates of moral character signed by parish or local school superintendents. 4e(1) p.3

More than 60 students were enrolled at the state university last term. It is expected that these will return.

The Unsung Negro Plaintiff

Informer Houston, Texas

Miss Arnease Dudley, 23-year-old graduate student at Louisiana State University, has won another battle in the long war against segregation. She was scheduled to complete her work for the master's degree next August, when the segregation-minded Louisiana legislature set out to prevent her and other Negro students from continuing their studies at LSU.

Sat. 3-2-57 p.10

Thanks to there being a United States Government, with Federal courts and Federal judges, Miss Dudley and the others still have hopes of completing their courses of study. Federal Judge Christenberry enjoined enforcement of the new Negro-hating laws in a suit brought by Miss Dudley. She and other Negro plaintiffs have become real heroines and heroes in this continuing struggle. They should always be remembered and appreciated.

State Schools Open To All

U.S. Judges Void 'Certificate Law'

Weekly Gazette

BATON ROUGE (SPECIAL)-- Top segregation state officials are "singing the blues" this week upon learning that the best laid plans (for white supremacy) often go astray.

That appeared to be the state of affairs after several Negro students attending Louisiana State University discovered "loopholes" in the biased application of certificates of eligibility while another Negro co-ed is using legal action in crossing an already cracked barrier.

Sat. 2-2-57

This same curb rammed headon into legal entanglements here Monday afternoon when two federal judges signed temporary restraining orders permitting Negro students to register without the use of biased certificates.

The two orders were issued in separate cases involving three state colleges. Judge J. Skelly Wright handed down the first order in the case against McNesse State college at Lake Charles. Similar action was taken by Judge Herbert W. Christenberry in a combined suit against Southwestern La. Institute at Lafayette, and Southeastern Louisiana college at Hammond.

LSU registrar Albert L. Clary, Jr., confessed last week that three or four Negro students had obviously "outsmarted" some of the top segregation exponents by returning certificates properly filled out. The surprised official noted that these students were La. residents who graduated from out of state high schools.

The certificates designed to keep Negroes out of lily-white institutions of higher learning forced Negro students to get the seal of approval of principals and school superintendents. However, any of these officials signing the misnamed forms would be liable for promoting integration if the student sought to enroll at an all-white university or college.

Last week, Judge Herbert W. Christenberry of the U. S. District Court issued a temporary restraining order against LSU in a suit brought by Miss Arnease Ludley through Attorney A. P. Tureaud, preventing the university to deny the co-ed registration rights. The order also applies to other students affected by these biased certificates.

Rallying to the aid of segregationists following the federal order, State Attorney Gen. Jack P. F. Gremillion said last Thursday he would defend state laws designed to drive Negroes from white state colleges. The attorney general was scheduled to have a special meeting with attorneys for LSU and the joint members of the legislative committee on segregation (headed by Sen. W. M. Rainach, high priest) Tues. The extent of the high concern for the preservation of "the gestapo-like-law" was noticed in Gremillion's suggestion that the meeting was open to any attorney who wants to volunteer his services.

The irony of the situation is the fact that Negroes have been in attendance at the university since 1950 -- this was due mainly to legal action.

Meanwhile, Sen. Rainach, a dedicated segregationist, has made the loudest noise since last week's federal court action. It was he who several months ago said that there would be no Negro students enrolled during the spring semester at any of the formerly all-white institutions.

The moods of the attorney general have been very changeable during the course of the first year of his term of official duty in respect to all citizens of Louisiana. Last summer he ruled that the eligibility certificates should be required only from new students. However, this was later altered in short fashion to mean "all students;; after Gremillion met with Rainach and his band.

Negro registration at LSU totaled 124 in 1955 fall session. It dropped to 62 during the fall of the 1956 term, a month before the certificate law went into effect. It had been assumed that no Negro student would last beyond that. However, the "loopholes" indicated that evil plans are never lasting.

Action against the state colleges were brought in behalf of 12 students through Atty. Tureaud. The suit is a class action.

The order issued by Judge Wright enjoins the state board of education, State Superintendent of Education Shelby M. Jackson, Wayne N. Cusic, president of McNeese, and Inez S. Moses, registrar at McNeese.

Judge Christenberry's order was directed at the state board of education, Jackson; Luther H. Dyson, president of SLC, and C. J. Hyde, registrar of SLC; Joel L. Fletcher, president SLI, and Lea L. Seal, registrar of SLI.

Kansas Students' Visit To Negro School Hit

HATTIESBURG, Miss., June 17 (AP)—Elders of Bay Street Presbyterian Church here have formally criticized a visit by University of Kansas students and a Presbyterian minister to a Negro junior college in Mississippi.

A statement adopted by the elders yesterday called the project "an obvious effort to leave the impression that the church is in favor of racial desegration."

Dr. John Patton, pastor of University Presbyterian Church, Lawrence, Kas., is in charge of three girl students and five men students, all white, who are entering their second week as guests of Mary Holmes Junior College near West Point, Miss.

The Hattiesburg elders said the Negro junior college is "not owned and controlled by the Synod of Mississippi or the Southern Presbyterian Church." The college is sponsored by the Northern Presbyterian Church.

"We deplore any effort of any group in the name of the church dissipating the funds or the energies of the church to promote partisan politics," the elders said.

The Negro dean of the college, Dawson Horn, said yesterday the Kansas students are not violating segregation laws and that he had consulted West Point civic leaders befort the group arrived and was assured there would be no hostility.

The white students have been scrubbing floors and doing other menial tasks during the daytime and holding nightly seminars on race relations and Southern economy. Dr. Stratton said the work camp is designed to develop better understanding and place a spirit of dignity on manual labor.

Dr. John Patton, director of the Presbyterian student center at the Kansas university, said the group will remain in West Point for another week, doing manual labor without pay and studying racial relations, as well as general social and economic status of the area.

Both the men and women students mingle freely with the Negro faculty and students of the small, one-building school. Their quarters are on the second floor of the combination administration-dormitory building. Negro students' rooms are in an adjoining wing.

At night, the students hold "seminars," which include an address by a Negro or white leader from Clay and adjoining counties.

Mrs. John Patton, wife of the minister, told reporter that seminar speakers so far had included a Negro doctor who is a staff member of a Starkville, Miss., hospital.

After winding up their work here, the group plans to travel to other Presbyterian missions in Kentucky and Tennessee.

The city and county is asked to adopt a similar resolution. The Kansas students — seven from the University of Kansas and one from Princeton University—are beginning their second week's work at Mary Holmes College and plan to leave Friday.

Dr. John Patton, pastor of the University Presbyterian Church at Lawrence, Kan., who is in charge of the three white girls and five men students, pointed out in a Rotary Club address last Thursday that the work camps are designed to place a spirit of dignity in manual labor, develop a better understanding between the visitors and those visited and derive a fuller knowledge of the area in which the work camp is conducted.

Mary Holmes College is located about a half mile west of the city limits.

Several years ago the college was destroyed by fire. As far as the Northern Presbyterian group was concerned, the school had no future. A group of local white citizens and businessmen contributed a considerable amount of money to rebuild the school.

Harry Brant, white president of the college, left Thursday morning on a tour of special mission duty for the Presbyterian Church, USA.

Acting president is Dean K. I. Horn, a Negro who has several white teachers in his charge. The summer enrollment of the school is 52, while about 180 enroll during the fall terms.

WEST POINT, Miss., June 14. —A white delegation from the University of Kansas is holding a seminar and work camp on the campus of a Negro junior college here.

The group, which includes eight students, is winding up its first week at Mary Holmes Junior College and plans to remain here for another week.

Mrs. John Patton, wife of Dr. John Patton, who heads the group, said members have three purposes at the junior college.

1. Putting tile on floors that are not already covered.
2. Painting of the student center.
3. Tearing down an old church building that was on the campus when it was known as the Female Seminary.

To Save College $3,000

Mrs. Patton said the project is expected to save the college about $3,000.

"Each of the students from Kansas works at all projects. The girls work just as hard as the boys during the day. At night the group either attends a two-hour seminar or visits the area looking at different sites," Mrs. Patton said. There are four girls in the group.

Mrs. Patton pointed out that the work camp group lives separately from about 100 Negro summer school students at the college.

Race Not Only Interest

She said the group is not primarily interested in studying the race question in Mississippi. "We also are interested in studying the economic, agricultural, historical, educational and financial structure of Mississippi in general.

"We do not expect to compile the information gathered. None of the students has ever visited Mississippi before."

The University of Kansas Work Camp began in 1948. Each person pays his own room, board and travel expenses.

Dr. Patton is a member of the faculty of the University of Kansas and is pastor of the University's Presbyterian Church.

Mrs. Patton said the junior college here was selected for this year's camp upon recommendation of the National Board of Missions of the Presbyterian Church. The college is sponsored by the Presbyterian Church.

State College Student Strike Abates Following Series of Conferences

The school, with 409 students, is a Negro branch of the University of Maryland.

As talks covering that and other complaints continued, Roy Page, president of the student council, said some of 18 grievances "seem to be clearing up."

Page said he urged students to go back to class while the talks continued. He said a "good many" were returning to class.

Williams said improved facilities and student regulations were among the topics discussed at today's sessions.

Students also have sought a stronger student government.

Williams said there was "a lack of understanding on the part of the students relative to plans of construction and procedure which have been recommended and approved.

Twenty years ago, Maryland Commission on Higher Education recommended to the Governor and the legislature that Princess Anne should be abandoned.

This week as a first class college, it is celebrating its 70th anniversary.

The school was established in 1886 by the Delaware Conference of the M.E. Church and became a branch of Morgan College.

Administrative control was transferred to the University of Maryland by Morgan in 1919 for the price of $100,000.

WHEN MARYLAND acquired control, Princess Anne Academy was offering work from the 8th to 12th grade, inclusively.

That is to say, . high school work.

In 1927, classes from the 8th to 10th were abandoned and two years of college work added.

IN 1928, all high school work was discontinued and the efforts of the institution were centered on a Junior college program.

In 1935, the college course was extended to 4 years and the awarding of degrees became possible.

By 1937, when the Commission made its study Princess Anne was worth $100,000 and had a total enrollment of 28 boys and 18 girls.

THE TOTAL income of the institution was $32,000, of which $15,000 came from the State, $13,000 from the Federal Government and $3,000 from stuents fees and sales.

Today, the former Princess Anne Academy is now Maryland State College, a division of the University of Maryland a properly accredited undergraduate institution, offering a four-year degree program in arts, sciences, mechanical industries, home economics and agriculture. It has an ROTC unit of the Air Force.

Degrees were conferred last year on 40 students and the program costs $2,000 per student.

The progress whereby it has obtained accreditation, built up an excellent faculty and student body has been achieved under the presidency of Dr. John T. Williams.

Dr. Williams commenting on the 70th anniversary celebration said: I'm proudest of the fact that we have been able to get the buildings constructed.

"It still puzzles me how the thing got started when it ended so amicably."

Dr. John T. Williams, president of Maryland State College at Princess Anne was telling the AFRO Thursday morning that the two-day strike of the 433 students had ended.

"They agreed to return to their classes shortly after 4 p.m. yesterday (Wednesday) and as far as I have learned, they are happy," Dr. Williams said.

An hour before the 48-hour strike ended, Dr. Williams had met with the students and faculty in the gymnasium.

During the meeting, Dr. Williams read a 15-page report summarizing the students' 29 complaints, which were presented by student council president, Roy Paige, a senior from Washington.

AFTER DESCRIBING each point in detail, Dr. Williams said:

"Effective at the close of this meeting, any student absent from class, beginning at eight o'clock tomorrow (Thursday) morning, and continuing through the remainder of the year, will receive a cut irrespective of the decision of the Educational Policies Committee."

Students' grievances ranged from permission to kiss at the front porch of the girls' dorm to a new gymnasium with a swimming pool and meat at Friday meals.

The two-day walk-out came Tuesday morning.

It followed a Monday night of unrest throughout the campus.

From dormitory to dormitory students relayed their plans to boycott all classes until satisfaction was given to their complaints.

THIS REPORTER observed the students parading with placards which read: "strike," "tyranny," "freedom."

Cheer leaders directed the students as they stood in groups at locations on the campus where faculty and the president might hear them.

They loudly spelled out the words, "freedom," "strike," "tyranny," in sing - song rhymes.

Meantime, Dr. Williams would make no statement to the members of the press who waited outside his office door for three and one-half hours.

Dr. Williams was reported by his assistant, Mrs. Ina Steele, to be in conference with members of the executive committee.

This conference began at 9 a.m. Tuesday, the first day of the strike, and lasted until 7 p.m. at which time Dr. Williams gave a statement to the press.

Throughout the day, Tuesday, students held meetings behind closed doors in the classroom building.

Their meetings also were closed to the press.

At 3 p.m. Wednesday, after day-long conferences with faculty members, Dr. Williams met the students in the gymnasium and read his 15-page report which summarized their complaints and advised what action would be taken.

HERE ARE highlights of the 28 requests and complaints made by the students and President Williams' comments on them.

1. Students objected to the Dean of Women's order prohibiting loitering on the front steps of the women's dormitory.

The President replied: "The problem of what the students choose to call 'co-education-fraternizing' is not new."

He cited notices asking that students discontinue 'practice of embracing on the porch of the women's dormitory' and 'walking around the campus and to and from town (with girls) hanging onto men in an unbecoming manner.'

He said: "I want to repeat here in the strongest terms at my command that men and women enrolled at Maryland State College are to discontinue embracing each other on the steps of the women's dormitory or in any other area of the campus.

"I have been asked to what extent a man can place his hands on a woman student.

"THE ANSWER is that men and women on the Maryland State College campus will conduct themselves in a manly and womanly manner.

* * *

"WE WILL set up no new codes of conduct with respect to what womanly conduct is or what manly conduct is because all are acquainted with the fact that there are modes of conduct and which consists of appropriate bearing of one's self on a college campus."

* * *

ANOTHER STUDENT request was bag lunches after Sunday meals such as students at Morgan State College and other colleges have.

They all complained that each meal is a repetition of the succeeding one and that some students desire meat on Fridays, rather than fish.

The president replied: "If the Student Council makes a formal request, bag lunches will be furnished on Sundays at a regular cost to you.

"There would be no serious opposition for the acting dietician of the dining hall to give you ham on Friday rather than on Thursday, if this will help your appetites.

"We shall request that the dietician serve a meat in addition to seafood on Friday."

STUDENTS also complained that the College Grill was not properly supplied for students' needs and that it had no cosmetics nor toilet supplies.

The president's reply was: "Unless we can find out some of the items which students commonly buy so that we can have a greater volume of business and we can make a profit, it is going to be highly necessary that we change the present system of operation.

"A recent auditor's report found that we were not charging enough per item for those articles now sold."

* * *

ANOTHER REQUEST was that the library should be opened on Friday evenings.

The president replied: "If this is necessary the facilities will be available to students until 9 o'clock in the evenings.

"If, however, it is found as in the past, students do not use facilities after six, we will give the matter study and return to present practices."

* * *

THE OTHER 24 requests dealt with proper lighting of parking lots, repairs needed on parking lots, a new gymnasium and swimming pool, longer hours in the cafeteria lounge, the postal system, College Grill hours, the right of the dean of men to enter students' rooms with a passkey.

Other requests included permission for men to take showers after 11 p.m., the employment of a full-time physician, better library equipment;

And, use of the gymnasium, condition of the football field and stands, the absence of a student paper and year book, biology department equipment, a stronger student government.

Also, students asked for a television set, better living conditions for women students, benches for lounging on campus, and whether striking students would receive cuts for the two days outside class. The ruling was that cuts would not be given if they returned to class on Thursday as they did.

* * *

STUDENT REPRESENTATIVES who met with the president and faculty included:

Robert Houston, Baltimore, senior class president; James Carrington, Philadelphia, junior class president and member of the Men's Senate; Joseph Parker, Havre de Grace, sophomore class president;

Also Chauncey S. Poulson, Baltimore, freshman class president; Miss Dorothy Wright Washington, Women's Council representative; Miss Wilmetta West, Kentucky, vice president of the Women's Council; and Miss Doris Ayers, Women's Council representative and Mr. Paige.

Negro Debaters Opposing Move By Ike Win

News & Courier
Wed. 12-4-57
Charleston S.C.

BEAUFORT, Dec. 3 (Special)—Six girls of the 10th grade history class of Mather School and Junior (Negro) College here debated in chapel yesterday this question: Resolved that President Eisenhower was right in sending troops into Little Rock.

The negative side won.

Mather President Eleanor Anderson said the three judges, James Pitts, Beaufort newsman, the Rev. Clifford Miller of Grace Methodist Church and Agnes Adams of the English Dept., Junior College, weighed delivery, content and reliability of evidence in making their decision.

The debate was sponsored by Rev. Reuben Dicks, history instructor and Baptist minister, and planned by the Social Science Club. Debaters were Harriet Dawley of Beaufort, Annette Roberts of Brunson, Clara Prioleau of Hopkins and Ruth Strain of Savannah.

In rebuttal were Helen Chitty of Columbia and Myrtle Walker of Gifford.

Mather School and Junior College, whose student body is 88 3-10 per cent from South Carolina and Georgia, traces its beginnings back over 90 years. It is under the auspices of the American Baptist Home Mission Society.

Its faculty members include both white and Negro. The student body is wholly Negro.

Teaches Courses In Psychiatric Training

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Miss Lois Belle Sellers has joined the staff at Meharry Medical college as the school's first full time instructor in psychiatric nursing. She is a graduate of Columbia and Youngstown universities, a nursing diploma from Meharry, and acquired senior experience in the Psychiatric Institute and Clinic, in Pittsburgh, Pa.

A Salute to Meharry!

Meharry Medical College, located across the street from historical Fisk University and just a few blocks from sprawling Tennessee State University in Nashville, began as a one-room missionary school on a gift of $500 back in 1876. Its first graduating class in 1877 consisted of one student.

Dr. West

Since that year of 1876, more than 6,000 men and women from 47 states and 12 foreign countries have been graduated from this noted and valuable institution.

Meharry has been growing for a long time and will continue to grow.

Today, there are 465 students in its three schools of medicine, dentistry and nursing. Meharry now has an annual budget of $2,000,000. Its endowment amounts to slightly more than $6,048,909, and the estimated value of its grounds, buildings and equipment is $7,000,000.

Meharry graduates are well scattered throughout the United States and over the entire world—Europe, Africa, South America, the West Indies, Central America and Asia.

The 53 Meharry graduates of 1957 are now serving their internships in 22 hospitals located in 13 states.

Dr. Harold D. West is president of the 80-year-old institution.

Dr H D West

DR. HAROLD D. WEST, President of Meharry Medical College has returned from Atlanta, Georgia, where he attended a significant meeting of the Commission on Dental Education for the South. He is a member of the Commission. The Commission has undertaken a comprehensive study by which it seeks to develop facts upon which the respective States, schools the profession of Dentistry itself, and other interested groups can act, individually and collectively, to provide dental education of the highest quality for the South.

CHARLES ALLEN RAWLS

Charles Rawls Selected For Meharry Board

NASHVILLE — Meharry Medical college announced this week that Charles Allen Rawls has been elected to its board of trustees.

The new member of the board is one of the South's outstanding Negro business men and civic welfare workers. He recently was given the "Distinguished Citizen Award" for 1957 in Tennessee by the National Association of Market Developers.

Rawls is the head of several private business firms, and he holds executive positions in insurance companies. He is known throughout the South as a friend and patron of deserving youth.

He lives in Brownsville, Tenn.

Meharry Tops For Research

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Through the unceasing efforts of its president, Dr. Harold West, and Dr. Matthew Walker, dean of medical studies and coordinator of cancer teaching, Meharry Medical College has now become the only medical school in the country with a six-year-old program of organized and systematic students' training in experimental research.

Meharry, whose teaching is on the level with the country's best medical schools, definitely leads in one field of medical education —student research.

The college has instituted a program of training through which its graduates can provide outstanding contributions in both clinical medicine and experimental medical research.

Sat-9-28-57

IN THE area of research, Meharry announces the renewal of three extremely significant grants. The National Cancer Institute has renewed its annual grant for continued research on the subject, "Incidence and Distribution of Metastases from Mouse Tumors"; the American Cancer Society has provided an additional year's grant to the laboratory for experimental oncology for work on the subject, "Conditions and Essential Characteristics of Free Tumor Cell Growth in Mice," and the Atomic Energy Commission has also renewed its grant for continued research in the field of atomic energy.

Meharry to Expand Research Facilities

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Fully aware of the opportunity to render another significant service to America in the present national emergency created through a grave scarcity of scientific and technological personnel . . . Meharry Medical College has launched a nationwide drive for funds to expand its development program.

In order that the-man-in-the-street can assist the world famous 81-year-old institution in its urgent training and research expansion, the school has instituted the Meharry Associates plan in which every person and organization can participate. With research and teaching grants from such sources as the Atomic Energy Commission, the National Institutes of Health, the American Cancer Society, etc., Meharry finds itself desperately in need of additional space and equipment in order that it can make its maximum contributions to America's immediate scientific needs.

THE MEHARRY Associates is a card-carrying organization. Any contribution whatsoever entitles the donor to membership. "The goal is to spread the base of participation in Meharry's great research and training program as widely among the public as possible," Noble F. Payton, director of development states.

Meharry . . . presently leading in the development of student research activities . . . is engaged in a wide program of research in the general fields of radiation, nutrition, metabolism, radio-therapy, therapeutics, immunology, and cancer. In the past eight years 76 papers on isotopes (atomic energy) alone have been published from Meharry's Cancer Research Laboratories. A nationwide TV show, emanating from the school, portrayed a cancer operation in which isotope-treated gold was employed, the first such instance in medicine.

Meharry . . . which has produced 50 per cent of all the Negro physicians in America's history . . . is now on the threshold of deeply significant contributions to America's welfare. Person who wishes to help in this great scientific crusade can do so through joining the Meharry Associates.

Meharry Reveals Grant of $34,500

Nashville, Tenn.—Dr. W. H. Allen, Dean of the school of denistry at Meharry Medical college announces receipt of a grant of $34,500 from the National Institutes of Health, Bethesda, Md. A two year study will be made to determine the relationship between dental carriers and periodental diseases among Negro youths living under urban and rural conditions.

Meharry will conduct research to cover large numbers of Negro youth. This will be the first such massive study on Negroes.

5 NEGROES WIN COLLEGE ENTRY CASE APPEAL

Tribune P. 10
Tues. 1-15-57
Chicago, Ill.

Circuit Court Upsets Memphis Ruling

Cincinnati, Jan. 14 (AP)—The United States Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals today reversed a decision by United States District Judge Marion Boyd of Memphis, Tenn., in which he had refused to order, in effect, the admission of five Negroes to Memphis State college.

14e(1)

By a 2 to 1 decision, the court ordered the case sent back to Judge Boyd for further action.

The case was one in which Roth Booker, Nellie Peoples, Mardes Knowles Vanhook, Elijah Noel, and Joseph McGhee Jr., sought an injunction to prevent the Tennessee state board of education and officials of the college from denying them admission to the school.

Denied Injunction Plea

In his decision, given Nov. 22, 1955, Judge Boyd denied the injunction request but approved a plan proposed by the board of education under which there would be total desegregation at the school within five years.

Judge Chares C. Simons of Detroit and Florence Allen of Cleveland voted to reverse the decision while Judge Shackleford Miller Jr., of Louisville, Ky., dissented.

In its defense in the case, the school officials pleaded the college was not equipped to admit a freshman class in excess of 1,000 students and proposed the five-year plan.

Cite Noncompliance

Judges Simons and Allen ruled that "in two respects" the five-year plan did not comply with a United States Supreme court ruling banning school segregation. They said that the record shows the physical facilities of the college would not be adequate if the undergraduate school was "radically increased" but they added:

"This circumstance is not a valid defense to the action. The board has the authority to establish a limit of admissions but the board is not authorized to establish a limitation based on race or color."

The Appeals court asserted it is aware that the Supreme court held school facilities and transportation could be considered in working out an orderly desegregation.

Court's Majority Opinion

"But the court also declared that this should be done with all deliberate speed," the majority opinion said. "To deny entrance to these plaintiffs for five years, to place them at the bottom of the list regardless of the time of their application for entrance, seems to a majority of this court a noncompliance with the declaration of the Supreme court."

In his dissenting opinion, Judge Miller said he believed the plan proposed by the school board for partial desegregation at once and gradual elimination of all segregation during the next five years "is a good faith solution."

"The District judge expressly found," he said, "that the time is absolutely necessary to carry out the ruling in an effective manner. I am of the opinion there was no abuse of discretion on the part of the District judge and should be affirmed."

In Memphis, J. Millard Smith, president of Memphis State college, declined comment on the court's action. At Nashville, Tenn., State Atty. Gen. George F. McCanless said he had not had time to review the ruling but that "undoubtedly we will take it" to the United States Supreme court.

2 Negro Women Seek Admission To All-White Memphis College

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.
Mon. 6-3-57

MEMPHIS, June 2 (AP)—Two Negro women applied for admission to all-white Memphis State College and were refered to the entrance and credits committee.

P. 5-A

14e(1)

Registrar R. P. Clark said the applications would be considered Monday but that he had advised both women it was "useless" to expect approval, since they applied late.

The deadline for the summer term was May 24, Clark said, and several white students who also applied late already had been rejected.

Miss Maxine Smith and Miss Mariam Sugarman applied for undergraduate study in foreign languages after having been informed they were not eligible for postgraduate work. They live in Memphis.

The college said it did not have the postgraduate courses in foreign languages that Miss Smith, a graduate of Spelman College in Atlanta, wanted to pursue, and that Miss Sugarman, a Wellesley College graduate, didn't have enough undergraduate credits.

In applying for undergraduate work, the women said it was customary that, where a graduate student is rejected for postgraduate studies, the college admit them to undergraduate courses so they can make up any missing credits.

MILES COLLEGE

Gift To Miles College

World Wed. 4-10-57 P.6

Miles College is better off financially by a recent $75,000 gift from the John R. Myer Foundation of Birmingham. This grant represents, we think, a genuine recognition of the vital services this college is rendering society. For when assistance is given to the weaker population segment it invariably helps the whole.

B'ham, Ala.

Our smaller, independent, group-related colleges need such no-strings-tied contributions to help them do the job before them. Endowment, expansion, scholarship aid, capitalization, and new services are among the items for which new money is needed. Old sources of income are no longer adequate to meet these needs. Miles is helping in the broad field of the education of deserving young people.

No door should be blocked against those who want to improve themselves. When any college fails to get the money it needs to operate effectively the doors of opportunity are clogged. The quicker this is recognized the speedier the flow of assistance will come.

It is good to see the Myer Foundation in the front-line of those enlightened sources of financial assistance. This should stimulate others to help Miles. It should inspire not only foundations and industry, but individual citizens to contribute to the Miles College million dollar expansion fund campaign.

Part of the Myer Foundation gift is to be used in the construction of a long-needed gymnasium. The gym is an indispensable facility in the program of the college. It is a teaching facility no less than the library, the auditorium, and the science laboratory. Supporters of Miles College should work with renewed determination, we think, to help this institution get whatever other money is necessary to build the gym. This money could be raised before the end of the current school term. It should be raised.

Grant Made To Miles For $75,000

World 4-6-57

The John R. Myer Foundation of Birmingham has made a grant of $75,000 to Miles College.

B'ham, Ala.

Dr. W. A. Bell, president, made the announcement of the grant at the Founders' Day Observance program at the college, March 29.

$25,000 is to apply on endowment and $50,000 on the construction of a gymnasium at the college. Other collections approximated a total of $90,000.

14e(1) 1957 MILLSAPS COLLEGE

Negro, White Boys Attend Same Class In Mississippi, Yet!

Courier Sat. 7-13-57 Pittsburgh Pa.

P.2

It Didn't Last Long

JACKSON, Miss.—A special class at Millsaps College in conversational German was integrated for a while last week. But, it didn't last long. The class has been transferred to nearby Tougaloo Southern Christian College, a private school attended by Negroes with a mixed faculty. Tougaloo does not have a racial policy.

Dean James S. Ferguson of Millsaps said that the class, containing three white Millsaps undergraduates and one Negro student from Tougaloo was begun by the white students who wanted tutoring in German from a man "whose native tongue is German."

Dr. Ernest Borinsky, professor of German at Tougaloo, came to the Millsaps library to tutor the white students, he said, and after two weeks "a Negro student began coming."

FERGUSON SAID he had received no formal complaint about the integrated class, but that the students, after a conference with school officials, had stopped it.

Professor Borinsky said that the white students would continue coming to him for the benefit "of my special knowledge."

As to integrated classes at Tougaloo, Borinsky said, "When a person cannot go and help someone who wants to be helped, without bringing in the subject of integration, I think it is perfectly ridiculous."

Dean Ferguson said the class was the students' idea and that it was up to them whether they continued to go to Borinsky at Tougaloo.

Ferguson said that, as he understood it, the Negro student "just walked into the library one day."

The white students didn't complain about his presence, he said. "It's my understanding that he came to the class several times last week," Ferguson continued. "I don't know who invited him." Ferguson said that Negroes occasionally visited the Millsaps library.

"WHEN A Negro comes in for a visit for the first time," he said, "we're not going to say 'Look, this isn't the place for you,' but if his visits become consistent, we would take a different attitude."

Ferguson said he "had not decided" to identify the students. All three white students are Mississippians, Ferguson said.

"I don't think they've done morally wrong," he added.

Borinsky commented that the talk of "integrated" classes was "perfectly ridiculous."

"If a student comes to me for help, I give it to him," he said. "I don't think about his color."

Borinsky, a German, has been at Tougaloo 10 years.

MOREHOUSE COLLEGE

Morehouse Alumni Set 90th Anniversary Plans

Journal + Constitution Sun. 2-3-57 Atlanta, Ga.

Morehouse College, "in business 80 years building men," is celebrating its 90th anniversary Feb. 17-18. Several distinguished men will speak on this occasion.

Dr. Kenneth I. Brown, of the Danforth Foundation, will give the 90th anniversary convocation address Sunday, Feb. 17. P. 2-C

Dr. Mordecai Johnson of Howard University, a Morehouse alumnus, will give the Founder's Day address Feb. 18 at 9 a.m. in Sale Hall Chapel.

AT 3 P.M. MONDAY, ground will be broken for the $800,000 Physical Education and Health Building on the campus.

Dr. John W. Davis, another outstanding Morehouse alumnus, formerely of Virginia State College and now prominent with the Point Four program in Liberia, will give the 90th anniversary banquet address at 8 p.m.

MOREHOUSE COLLEGE, Atlanta, was founded in Augusta in 1867 for the education of Negro youth and was first called the Augusta Institute.

Such an organization was conceived by Richard C. Coulter, Augusta slave, and was started by William Jefferson White, a Negro cabinetmaker. The first president was Joseph Thomas Robert, a native of Robertville, S.C., who left the South before the War Between the States because he did not want to rear his children where slavery existed.

Augusta Institute was moved to Atlanta in 1879 and incorporated as the Atlanta Baptist Seminary. It was established on its present site in 1888. Under George Sale, president from 1890 to 1906, the institution became the Atlanta Baptist College. In 1913 it became Morehouse College.

IN 1906, Augusta-born John Hope became president of Morehouse. A Phi Beta Kappa and an alumnus of Brown University, he was the first Negro elected to the presidency of Morehouse.

John Hope was one of Georgia's foremost educators. His career in Atlanta began before the turn of the century. He served as president of Morehouse for 25 years, until he resigned in 1931 to devote his full time as president of Atlanta University, created in 1929.

The "amalgamation" of several small Negro colleges into Atlanta University was a dream Mr. Hope lived to realize and to head. Both Dr. Johnson and Dr. Davis were students and later teachers at Morehouse during John Hope's presidency.

Dr. Mays Traces History, Progress Of Morehouse

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. P. 1 Tues. 2-19-57

BY WILLIAM GORDON
Managing Editor, Atlanta Daily World

"Ninety years is a long time in the life of an individual," a famous educator said here Sunday, "but a short time in the life of an institution."

Dr. Benjamin E. Mays, president of Morehouse College was making his statement on the occasion of the 90th anniversary of the above institution. 14e(1)

Dr. Mays compared the life of his college with that of Howard University, established in 1636 and Oxford, which had its inception in 1164.

PRIOR 1865

He said ninety years in the life of an institution existing in Georgia, prior to 1865 is a relatively long time.

"There is something unique and fascinating about the founding of what is now Morehouse College. A slave valet, Richard C. Coulter of Augusta, Georgia, went to Virginia as a valet with his owner who had joined the Confederate Army."

He told how soon after leaving the South he was able to obtain his freedom, but later returned to Georgia and became the "spark" which caused the beginning of Morehouse College which started as a night school.

THE CHANGES

"We have changed from a night school to a day school; from a grade school to a college and seminary; from no property to twenty-two buildings and eleven acres of land which would cost the college easily five million dollars to replace; from no endowment to a one of approximately 2 1-2 million....." P. 2

President Mays said the curriculum has been constantly changed to meet the needs of the changing times. But that Morehouse as an institution, has not been all change. Tues. 2-19-57

There are emphasis, he said, which have not changed in "these ninty years and emphasis which I hope will never change." He named five values which he said will continue to guide the institution:

"Morehouse has always encouraged and stimulated the student to make the maximum use of his mind whether an ordinary mind or brilliant one; to acquaint himself as far as possible with the tools of learning and the accumlated knowledge of the past and present with hope that he may use these in a creative and constructive way.

Three Morehouse Students Get Foreign Study Grants

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 3-17-57

Three students of Morehouse College have been selected by a faculty committee to receive travel-study grants of $2500 each for a year in Europe during the academic year 1957-1958. The students selected are the following: Brinston Collins, senior a political science major from Norfolk, Va.; William Glass, junior, a history major from Red Oak (near Atlanta), Ga.; and Andre D. Hammonds junior, a psychology major from Chattanooga, Tenn., where he graduated from Howard High School.

According to their major or minor interests, the students will do some formal study in either English or French universities, or both, and will travel in the major European countries to the end of broadening their educational and cultural horizons.

The donor of these grants is a friend of Morehouse College who prefers to remain anonymous and who is interested in exposing young and promising Negro students to the kinds of cultural and educational experiences and contacts that will equip them for foreign and diplomatic service. This is the third year that he has given such grant to Morehouse students but this is the first year that they have been made possible for mone than one student. The first students from Morehouse to receive one of these grants was William V. Guy, of Little Rock Ark.. who spent last year in study and travel in England, France and other European countries. Mr. Guy has now returned to Morehouse for his senior year and has shared many of his rich experiences with the Morehouse family. This year, Samuel E. Allen of Richmond Va., is studying in France on one of these grants.

TWO FACULTY COUPLES ALSO GIVEN TRAVEL GRANTS

The same friend who makes possible these student travel-study grants also makes possible two travel grants of $2500 per couple for Morehouse faculty and staff couples to travel in Europe during the summer, to the end of enriching their experiences and enhancing their teaching effectivness. This year the two couples that have beenselected for travel in Europe during the summer of 1957 are Prof. and Mrs. G Murray Branch and Mr. and Mrs. William M. Nix. Professor Branch is a member of the faculty of the School of Religion and Mr. Nix is director of Student Personnel at Morehouse.

Daily World

In previous summers the following couples of the Morehouse faculty have traveled in Europe on similar grants: Dr. and Mrs. Edward B. Williams and Professor and Mrs A. Russell Brocks, summer of 1954; Dean and Mrs B R. Brazeal and Dr. and Mrs Robert M. Brisbane, summer of 1955; and Professor and Mrs G Lewis Chandler and Dr. and Mrs. H C. Samilton, summer of 1956.

DR. DAVIS CALLS FOR EXPANSION

Sun. 2-17-57 p. 1

BY SAMUEL ADAMS

Two Georgia Institute of Technology architectural students today were presented cash awards for their prize-winning entries in a national design contest sponsored by the Title Council of America Inc.

C. A. Blondheim and R. B. Church, fifth- and seventh-place winners respectively, designed plans for a vocational arts high school featuring creative uses of floor and wall ceremic title. The award presentation at a meeting of the student body of the institute's School of Architecture was made by Joseph Bannon of the Title Council.

The Council is a trade association of manufacturers who produce 90 per cent of domestic floor and wall ceramic title. For the past several years the Council has sponsored national collegiate design contests in cooperative with the National Institute for Architectural Education.

The former head of the nation's Point Four Program Monday called for a $12 million 10-year expansion program at Morehouse College to help secure a failing Western world that has already lost the cold war and initiative of action to Russia

Speaking in connection with the 90th anniversary celebration of Morehouse College. Dr. John W. Davis, director of talent-study for the Phelps-Stokes Fund and head o fteacher defense, said the west and east are locked in conflict, so "the best in government and education" must be called to service if the great world powers are to avoid mutual destruction.

Daily World

Dr. Davis, who for 34-years was president of West Virginia State College, the first institution of Negro tradition to become thoroughly integrated, traced the development of education, pointing to the quantitive and materialistic emphasis, power politics denial of civil and human rights to Negroes and other characteristics of the American system.

p. 5

He said:

"Already England is a second rate nation and France is weak, unsteady and unreliable in times of world crisis. The United States and its allies have lost the cold war and initiative in action to Russia. We are babies in the old European tactics of diplomacy. Our security is at stake."

In his challenge to Morehouse, the intitution from which he graduated 45-years ago, Dr. Davis said: a small church-related private college under the compulsion of the cause of the Western Nations can do much to safeguard America's security.

To help preserve American democracy, he suggested:

"1) We must understand that education and democratic government are interrelated and mutually dependent and that government has the right to expect its educational institutions...to promote the highest ideals and interests of government and welfare of all of the people.

14e(1)

"2) The best interests of the colleges and universities are advanced when they broaden the horizons of their own advancement and success so as to include the social, political, economic, religious and cultural progress of all segments of the nation's population.

"3) Work the field of research so creatively and well that pure research will remain always years in advance of applied research.

"4) The quality of the product of colleges is the measure of their claims to institutional aristoracy.

"5) Work for the enthronement of truth and character in students and in all of the affairs of States."

Nothing that institutions cannot do the best work when pinched for funds and when faculty salaries are low, Dr. Davis told of financial campaigns at other institutions and related what others were doing to help secure democracy. Among the 12 institutions listed as having instituted development programs, he included Howard University, Oberlin, Harvard and others.

For plant expansion at Morehouse, he recommended a library building, more dormitory houses, a fine arts building, another science building for mathematics, physics, and an astronomy, a research center building, modern scientific equipment, and increased library reference works and books, homes for teachers, business administration building, more land and homes for teachers and staff.

To facilitate this he suggested that a campaign committee be appointed to study the short and long term range needs of the college so that a report on such needs might be made within the next six months. The committee also would map out ways and means to secure funds to finance the expansion. He suggested $12 million as a temporary goal for the financial campaign.

The speaker said the culmination and realization of this 10-year program should be significant subjects in the celebration of the 100th Anniversary of the founding of the college in 1967.

Anonymous Donor Again Fetes Morehouse Students

Norfolk, Va.

ATLANTA, Ga.—Three students of Morehouse college have been selected by a faculty committee to receive travel-study grants of $2500 each for a year in Europe during the academic year 1957-1958.

14-eu

The students selected are Brinston Collins, senior, a political science major from Norfolk, Va.; William Glass, junior, a history major from Red Oak (near Atlanta), Ga., and Andre D. Hammonds, junior, a psychology major from Chattanooga, Tenn., where he graduated from Howard high school.

ACCORDING TO their major or minor interests, the students will do some formal study in either English or French universities, or both, European countires to the end and will travel in the major of broadening their educational and cultural horizons.

The donor of these grants is a friend of Morehouse college who prefers to remain anonymous and who is interested in exposing young and promising Negro students to the kinds of cultural and educational experiences and contacts that will equip them for foreign and diplomatic services.

THIS IS THE THIRD year that he has given such grants to Morehouse students, but this is the first year that they have been made possible for more than one student.

The first student from Morehouse to receive one of these grants was William V. Guy, of Little Rock, Ark., who spent last year in study and travel in England, France and other European countries. Mr. Guy has now returned to Morehouse for his senior year and has shared many of his rich experiences with the Morehouse family. This year Samuel E. Allen, of Richmond, Va., is studying in France on one of these grants.

THE SAME FRIEND who makes possible these student travel-study grants also makes possible two travel grants of $2500 per couple for Morehouse faculty and staff couples to travel in Europe during the summer.

This year the two couples that have been selected for travel in Europe during the summer of 1957 are Professor and Mrs. G. Murray Branch and Mr. and Mrs. William M. Nix. Professor Branch is a member of the faculty of the school of religion, and Mr. Nix is director of student personnel at Morehouse.

Morgan Choir To Sing At Inaugural

Atlanta, Ga.

BALTIMORE, Md. — The Morgan State College Choir hass been invited to participate in a pre-inaugural program arranged at the request of President Eisenhower in Washington, D. C., Sunday, Jan. 20.

The program "American's Dedication to World Peace", is being arranged by the Young Republican Acitvities Committee of the Inaugural Committee and will be held at 2:30 p. m. at the Sheraton-Park Hotel.

PATRIOTIC NATURE

The program will be of a patrotic nature with speeches by the Vice President of the United States, the Hon. Richard M. Nixon, the Hon. Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr. United States Delegate to the United Nations, and Governor Joe Foss of South Dakota, World War II flying ace and Congressional Medal of Honor winner.

Congressman Edwin May of Connecticut will direct the program which will feature other symbolic American expressions of thought.

3 CHOIRS TO SING

Morgan's 60-voice Choir, which is one of three appearing on the the program, will sing "We Are Climbing Jacob's Ladder" and will join the Pudue University Glee Club and the Virginia Military Institute Cadet Choir in singing three standard numbers, including the opening song, the National Anthem.

Clarence E. Henderson, a native Baltimore is director of the Morgan Choir. He holds the B. S. degree from Central State College and the M. A. degree from Teachers College, Columbia University. He was a member of the Hall Johnson Choir when this group appeared as a feature in the Berlin Festival sponsored by NATO and had a part in Jacques Wolfe's "Mississippi Legend" which enjoyed an off-Broadway run. He was also a member of the famous de-Paur Infantry Chorus on two continental tours and has been active in concert work.

Students Will Be Screened

Courier p. 13
Pittsburgh, Pa.
Sat. 4-6-57

BALTIMORE, Md.—Reorganization of the Morgan State College program to provide selective admission, a new three-level freshman curriculum and the screening of students at the end of the sophomore year was announced by Dr. Martin D. Jenkins, president.

The comprehensive changes, voted by the faculty after intensive study and experimentation over a period of several years and approved by the board of trustees, will become effective in September.

President Jenkins described the changes as "measures to meet the needs of our students and to provide the best opportunity possible for every student to succeed." He explained: "I believe that this new program, developed by the faculty, will be beneficial to every student entering the college, and that it will, as well, enable us to do an even better educational job than we have done in the past."

THE NEW ADMISSION policy requires that the student must rank in the upper three-fourths of his high school graduating class. Students in the lower fourth, however, may be admitted by examination.

Dr. Jenkins described this as a "mild selective admission policy which is consistent with the goals of our college," for, he said, "the function of a state school, as we understand it, is essentially non selective. Our responsibility is to provide wide opportunity for both average and superior students. Every student who has a chance to succeed ought, in our society, be given an opportunity to show what he can do."

To implement the three-level plan, work now being offered in the reading, writing and speech clinics of the college, will be expanded next year. Reading for all freshman students and speech therapy in the junior year for students indicating needed improvement in this area will be required. In addition, all students must successfully pass a proficiency examination in English during the junior year.

IT IS ANTICIPATED that students who reveal inaptitude for college work will be dropped at the end of the freshman year.

Further, the screening policy provides that students who do not measure up to requirements will be dropped at the end of the sophomore year. This policy will also be applied to students now in their junior and senior years at the college.

Appropriate guidance will be provided for those students who are required to withdraw.

Morgan Students to Help Teach Selves

BALTIMORE, April 18 (AP) Morgan State College here will seek to learn next fall what the average college student would learn if left largely to his own devices.

Ninety average students will be picked from the freshman class to take part in the experiment. They will be divided into three classes of 30 each and assigned to a course in the history of Western civilization —a required freshman course.

Instead of three lectures a week, they will receive only one. The other two will be devoted to student discussions and to planning of their studies by theh students.

At the end of the experiment, the 90 students will be tested to determine whether they learned as much or more history than 90 other students taught in the traditional lecture manner.

The experiment will be financed by a $27,000 grant from the Fund for the Advancement of Education, which was established in 1951 by the Ford Foundation.

The money is part of $493,230 being divided among 27 colleges and universities to explore means of improving teaching efficiency.

Hearing Set in Shooting

EASTON, Md., April 18 (AP) Harold Franklin Landwehr, 25-year-old former Easton Police Department clerk, will be given a preliminary hearing tomorrow on a charge of wounding and robbing a general store proprietor.

Landwehr is charged with intent to kill in the wounding of Robert H. Slaughter, 64. Slaughter was in serious condition in Easton Hospital with neck and cheek wounds.

Slaughter said he was alone in the store when a man entered, talked awhile, then pulled a gun and said: "This is a holdup, dad, get the money."

By-Pass Ready Soon

BALTIMORE, April 18 (AP) The State Roads Commission says the new by-pass to take north-south traffic on U. S. 113 around Berlin on the Eastern Shore will be completed "early this summer."

Fathers Killed in Crash

EDGEMERE, Md., April 18 Z—Walter E. Bloss, 34, of Edgemere, and Wilson R. Coleman, 32, of Dundalk, were killed early today when their car crashed into the rear of a truck.

John Whitaker, 32-year-old truck driver, was not hurt. Bloss was the father of four children and Coleman of two.

Forestry Camp Director

BALTIMORE, April 18 (AP)—A school teacher experienced in youth work has been named director of Maryland's second Boys Forestry Camp.

The camp will be under the direction of Ralph D. Swauger of Friendsville, an instructior in mathematics and baseball coach at the Northern Garrett County Junior-Senior High School.

Sponsored jointly by the State Departments of Welfare and Forestry and Parks, the camp will serve as a rehabilitation center for boys transfererd from the State's two boys' training schools.

New State Laws

BALTIMORE, April 18 (AP) Gov. Theodore R. McKeldin signed into law last night a pair of bills aimed at bolstering operations at Ocean Downs, which the Governor said lost $13,000 in 1956.

One hikes the statewide harness racing tax from 13 to 15 per cent.

The other authorizes the Pocomoke Agriculture Fair Association to conduct flat racing.
